

THE LIBRARY OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

MAGUIRE
LIBRARY

THE
CELEBRATED ANSWER
TO THE REV. C. LESLEY'S
CASE STATED,

BETWEEN THE
CHURCH OF ROME AND THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

THE
CELEBRATED ANSWER
TO THE REV. C. LESLEY'S
CASE STATED,
BETWEEN THE
CHURCH OF ROME AND THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND:
PRINTED WORD FOR WORD, AND REFUTED SENTENCE AFTER SENTENCE, BY THE
REV. R. MANNING.

On returning Manning's book to the publisher, after perusing it, in 1826, these were the words of the illustrious Dr Doyle:—"Whoever will touch this book to alter any of its arguments, will inflict an injury on the writer and his cause. The author wrote it at the foot of the crucifix; and the Holy Spirit seems to have graciously enabled him, not only to refute the arguments of his adversary, but to do so in a manner so clear and comprehensive, as to equally convince the most learned and the most unlearned, of his triumphant refutation of every difficulty brought forward by Lesley."

To these memorable words will not (at least in the estimation of Catholics) be unnecessarily appended the following opinion of the Bossuet of the British Churches—the distinguished and invincible Rev. T. Maguire:—"The Work of the Rev. Robert Manning is, without comparison, the best for REPLY to be found in the ample theological armory of the Church, and should be possessed by every one of its members anxious for its honour and for the triumph of truth!"

DUBLIN:
RICHARD COYNE, 4, CAPEL STREET;
PRINTER AND BOOKSELLER TO THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ST PATRICK, MAYNOOTH,
AND PUBLISHER TO THE R. C. BISHOPS OF IRELAND.
LONDON: JONES, PATERNOSTER-RROW.

MCCCXXXIX.

TO
HIS GRACE DANIEL MURRAY, D.D., &c.
IN PARTICULAR,
AND
TO THE MOST REV. AND RIGHT REV.
THE CATHOLIC BISHOPS OF IRELAND IN GENERAL, NOW SITTING IN SYNOD AT DUBLIN.

3X
1780
H. 16c
1827

MY LORDS,

I HERE present you with, and submit to your judgment, This Work, of a choice and singular nature; which seems especially called for at the present period, the Book to which it is a Reply having been lately made a Divinity Class-Book of Trinity College, Dublin. To you, my Lords, it belongs to judge—you whom God has given as "Pastors and Doctors" of his Holy Church, "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Until we all meet into the unity of faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ: That henceforth we be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the wickedness of men, by cunning craftiness by which they lie in wait to deceive." If you, my Lords, shall deem that I have done well in reprinting this Work—if you shall consider that at the present time it is calculated to subserve the interests of the Catholic Church, I am confident you will recommend it to the perusal of your Subjects,

And I have the honour to remain,

Your Lordships'

Most obedient and humble Servant,

RICHARD COYNE.

DUBLIN, 4, CADEL STREET,
Jan. 22, 1839.

ADDRESS.

IN offering the celebrated Reply of the Rev. Robert Manning to the consideration of the Catholics and Protestants of England, Ireland, and Scotland, the publisher feels that he should not be totally silent.

The Rev. C. Lesley's Work is a dialogue between a Catholic Lord and a Protestant Gentleman; in which the author personates the Protestant gentleman, and also answers for the Catholic nobleman, who, under his interested tutelage and absolute dominion, is constrained to give the most imperfect, and in some cases the most absurd, replies to the chosen and captious objections of his wily antagonist—nay, the assumed and fictitious Catholic lord seems to have been brought on the stage for no other purpose but to be laughed at, and to set off the imaginary triumph of his uncandid adversary. There is, however, an old proverb—it is an Irish one too—"One story is good till the other is told." In the present book Manning takes the place of Lesley's supposed Catholic lord—prints Lesley's Work word for word, and refutes it sentence by sentence. The publisher, therefore, contemplates obtaining the approbation of the Protestant as well as the Catholic. The former will here find his religion defended by a divine not only considered one of the ablest of his day, but even now esteemed the Hercules of the Protestant family, for his loud-trumpeted production has recently become a Divinity Class-Book in Trinity College, Dublin; while the Catholic will recognise in Manning a clergyman remarkable not less for his profound learning and acuteness, his admirable wit, and happiness of retort, than for his acknowledged sincerity, and unquestioned purity of purpose.

Lesley shews himself an exquisite tactitian at puzzling and perplexing. In his positions truth is so dexterously interwoven with error, that in the attempt to abstract the one you often seem to pluck up the other. Here it is that Manning appears with unparalleled discrimination and advantage. He unravels his sophistries—parries the keen thrust of his sarcasm—lifts the veil of his ingenious misrepresentations; so that the reader is delighted as he proceeds, and feels that high mental triumph of eventually conquering abilities which we admire even in their perversion. He reviews with boldness and brilliancy the reveries of Lesley—supplies Catholics with unanswerable arguments to the most ensnaring objections, and cautions them against a man who, under an ostentatious splendour, conceals the foulest misrepresentations—who makes even the language of truth and the sentiments of sincerity hideous, by the accents of artifice and simulation!

The publisher having had for years a copy of Manning's book, has been repeatedly urged to publish it; it is probable, however, that he would even yet have hesitated, had not the University Calender for 1838, announced Lesley's work as the Divinity Class-Book of Trinity College! The Protestant Student now, no longer can be persuaded or gulled by his lecturer that the answers put by Lesley into the mouth of the fictitious lord are the most conclusive that can be urged, will have an opportunity of replying to him in the language of a Catholic. He possesses Lesley's entire book as it emanated from himself, with Manning's refutation, as it was written one hundred and twenty years ago, without alteration. This book may, therefore, be well considered a magazine of theological erudition—where all sorts of controversial arms, defensive and offensive, are lodged—and from which the young clergyman can effectually furnish himself for “the good fight” of the faith.

The publisher begs to say that having here submitted a book more immediately devoted to Reply, he is possessed of another work (which he may hereafter be induced to publish) calculated to shew that the Deformation is a mere negation of a majority of the articles proposed by the Catholic Church, which, ever ancient, and never new, is, like the Father of Light, from whom she descended, without the vicissitude of change, or the shade of alteration.

The following were the remarks of the illustrious

Dr Doyle, on returning Manning's Work to the publisher, in 1826, after its perusal:—"Whoever shall touch this book, to alter any of its arguments, will inflict an injury on the writer and his cause. The author wrote it at the foot of the crucifix; and the Holy Spirit seems to have graciously enabled him, not only to refute the arguments of his adversary, but to do so in a manner so clear and comprehensive as to equally convince the most learned as well as the most unlearned of his triumphant refutation of every difficulty brought forward by Lesley."

To these memorable words will not (at least in the estimation of Catholics) be unnecessarily appended the following opinion of the Bossuet of the British churches—the distinguished and invincible Rev. T. Maguire:—"The Work of the Rev. Mr Manning is, without comparison, the best for REPLY to be found in the ample theological armory of the Church, and should be possessed by every one of its members anxious for its honour and the triumph of truth!"

In order to guard against misconception, Lesley's book is printed—under the head of G. Gentleman—in small letter, and Manning's—under the title of the Catholic Lord—in larger type.

RICHARD COYNE.

DUBLIN, 4, CAPEL STREET, }
 January, 1839. }

PREFACE TO THE READER.

CONTAINING SOME NECESSARY INSTRUCTIONS RELATING TO THE METHOD OBSERVED IN THIS "SECOND CONVERSATION;" AS LIKEWISE SOME REMARKS UPON THE GENTLEMAN'S UNFAIR DEALING IN THE FORMER.

THE Case Stated has of late years been a celebrated title. For it has already appeared at the head of four or five editions of the same book, and several changes have been rung upon it—as Case Restated, Case truly Stated, Case farther Stated, &c. But as men, when they have gone round the whole circle of new fashions, return many times to the old mode, so I judged it best to resume the old plain title of Case Stated; first, because the two churches, and disputants concerned in this second conversation are the very same they were in the former. 2^{dly}, Because not only the subject of their discourse, but the very order and disposition of it is still the same. And 3^{dly}, because the gentleman having here full liberty to repeat every thing he said in the former conversation, if the case of the Church of England, whose advocate he is, be there fairly stated by him, I am sure that of the Church of Rome (which is most shamefully misrepresented in that conversation) is now fairly stated by his lordship in this. And so I hope every thing will fully answer the title I have chosen.

Some will perhaps tell me, I have taken a great deal of pains to no purpose, since the gentleman's Case Stated (as I shall always call it, to distinguish it from this) has already been sufficiently answered, particularly by the learned author of the Church of Christ Shewed, &c., and many will be apt to think we set too great a value upon the gentleman's performance by answering it so often. But for my part I can see no solid reason why a book should be valued the more for having been often confuted; and all that can be inferred from it is, that there are more than one of opinion, that the gentleman's Case Stated is very much overrated by those, who cry it up for an unanswerable piece. I own it is already sufficiently answered by the forementioned author, and even more than sufficiently. For his book may properly be called a magazine of erudition; where plenty of all sorts of controversial arms both offensive and defensive are laid up. But to many it is as a treasure locked up, and to these my answer will serve as a key to let them into it. So that I stick not to own here very frankly without fear of being called a plagiary, that I have borrowed many of my choicest materials of him, and it has been my principal business to put them together in such a manner, as I judged would be best accommodated to the capacity of those, whose instruction I have principally in view.

But I had other reasons to induce me to undertake this work: and that particularly by way of dialogue betwixt the same persons; 1. To convince the gentleman (if it be possible) that idiot, and popish lord are not synonymous terms, as he seems to suppose in the whole course of his dialogue, in which his popish lord personates the dunce to the life. Nay, his lordship seems to be brought upon the stage only to be laughed at, and set off the imaginary triumphs of his adversary. 2. Because the way of dialogue is certainly the most easy and familiar way of conveying truths to plain capacities, and even the fairest way, provided no partiality be used to the prejudice of either side, and each disputant be allowed to say as much for his cause, as it will fairly bear. All which the reader will find in this conversation, wherein the gentleman delivers his own sense as he did before, and his lordship is no longer under the tutelage of his protestant master.

This inclines me to think, that though the gentleman's book had been answered by more hands than it has, it would be no objection against this answer of mine by reason of the newness as well as usefulness of its method. For it presents the reader with two books in one. When he reads the gentleman's part in this conversation, it will be the same as if he had that author's own book before him: and when he reads his lordship's answer to him, as he now speaks the true sense of his church, it may come to put him in mind of an old useful proverb, viz., that one story is good till the other be told. In a word, the method I have confined myself to, seems to have its peculiar advantage in putting me under a necessity not only to lead the reader in an easy and familiar way through all the parts of controversy, but to do it in such a manner, as cannot but have the approbation of both churches. Because the protestant as well as catholic reader will here find the whole cause of religion fairly pleaded by one of his own communion. So that neither of the contending parties will be accused of partiality, or of wronging his adversary by making him speak things, which he may justly disown.

But 3dly, I was induced to undertake this task, because there is a large difference between answering a book in the lump, and doing it in a manner word for word. The first is indeed the common way, and (provided there be no wilful omission of any thing of moment) suffices undoubtedly to satisfy those, who are content with a reasonable satisfaction. But it seems our protestant adversaries will not be content with this. All their geese are swans, and every thing they write, though it be never so trivial in itself, is immediately magnified into an unanswerable piece, if any one thinks it not worth the trouble of an answer.

I shall give a remarkable instance of this my observation. The gentleman begins his Case Stated with these introductory questions: Pray, my lord, what is there in the communion of the Church of England should make you think your soul in danger? Would there be any hazard of your soul, if there were no invocation of saints that are dead in the public offices of the church? No pictures or images of God to be seen there? No elevation of the host? &c. Now the Restater (Rev. Mr Dorrel) who began first to write against the gentleman's Case Stated, and intended no more than a brief answer to the most material points, thought those questions too frivolous to deserve his notice; and I am wholly of his mind. Nay, I do not only think them so, but what is more, I have proved them to be frivolous in the Introduction, where they are now answered. Not that they deserve it, but because the method, to which I have tied myself down, obliged me to it. For otherwise it is probable I should have followed the example of my predecessor, and passed them over as not worth an answer.

But the Vindicator, who took up the cudgels for the gentlemen against the Restater, crows most unmercifully over him for this omission, which he confidently takes for a tacit acknowledgment that he could not answer them. The author of the Case further Stated (who I presume is no stranger to the Vindicator) does the same. All this (says he), the Restater passed over in a profound silence. He knew the question was not to be answered, and was therefore so wise, as to suppress it all he could, p. 122; and again: It was an unlucky difficulty started, and since it cannot otherwise be got over, it was necessary to throw it aside, and say nothing of it: and we must therefore not be so unreasonable as to expect an answer, where it is not to be had. Ibid. I am really sorry this worthy gentleman has thus exposed himself in print. For what a rout is here about a trifle! Which must by all means be adopted into the catalogue of protestant unanswerables to repair the affront put upon it by a papist, who slighted it as a thing beneath his notice. How great wits will sometimes overshoot themselves!

But let that be as it will, it is manifest, that though a book be sufficiently answered, there may still be room left for a farther answer to it: not to supply any real defects of former answers, but to silence the unreasonable clamours of those, who set a value upon every insignificant objection, and cry it up for unanswerable, merely because it is not answered. Now the method I have obliged myself to, permits me not to omit things, which others, who only answer the gentleman in the lump, may legally pass over without any unfair dealing, or deserving the severe reflections made by the Vindicator, or his alter idem, the author of the Case farther Stated.

I flatter myself over and above, that my answer will have its peculiar advantage in this respect, viz., because it not only contains all the usual questions in dispute between us and protestants, but likewise several odd subjects, which being out of the common road are not usually treated by other controvertists; and though the objections relating to these subjects be not material in themselves, they have for the most part as powerful an influence upon weak minds, and vulgar capacities, as arguments of the greatest weight.

But, though I have obliged myself, as I have already acquainted the reader, to follow my adversary step by step whenever it was possible to make him repeat his words with any manner of connexion, yet I was forced sometimes to recede a little from the rigour of this method, which happens only when the gentleman in his Case Stated undertakes to confute either with serious arguments or some fine drollery the nonsense his lordship has uttered; that is, when his answer contains nothing, but a confutation of that nonsense. In which case it was impossible to repeat the gentleman's words without repeating the blunder, to which they are a direct answer. And it is only in such occasions that any thing of the gentleman's part in his Case Stated is omitted in this conversation. And even then it is supplied by an Advertisement, which directs the reader to the page of the gentleman's Case Stated, where it may be found.

I have likewise been obliged, for the sake of connexion and clearness, to make the gentleman speak many things in this second conversation, which are not to be found in the former. But to convince the reader how far I am from imitating the example of my adversary, that is, from making him say any thing he may justly disown, or be ashamed of, I can confidently assure him, that the weakest things the gentleman says throughout this whole conversation, are all goods of his own importing. And therefore lest the one should be mistaken for the other, whatever belong here to the gentleman's part, as taken from his own Case Stated, has this mark [“] set before every line of it, with the page quoted, from whence it is taken : which mark is wholly omitted, when I dictate to him.

Very little indeed will be found here of his lordship's part in the former conversation : because he was seldom allowed to speak sense. It was this gave me the greatest difficulty, and almost disheartened me from pursuing my resolution of answering it as I now do in the way of dialogue between the same two persons. For, though this way of writing be the easiest imaginable, when the author is at full liberty to dictate to both parties as he pleases, nothing on the contrary was more puzzling to me, who was obliged to repeat whatever the gentleman spoke, yet could seldom repeat any thing his lordship had said in the former conversation ; for if I did, I adopted the blunders and nonsense, I have undertaken to correct ; and without it I saw no possibility of introducing the gentleman's answers with the order and connexion, which the nature of dialogues indispensably requires : and though I have made a shift to do it much oftener, than I thought I could at my first setting out, I was forced to leave gaps here and there, and fill them up for the sake of connexion with short Advertisement to the reader ; as likewise to apologize in the same manner for the aforesaid few omissions of pieces, which could not possibly be brought into this conversation.

I must further acquaint the reader, that when the gentleman in his Case Stated is somewhat long in his harangues, which often contain a heap of arguments huddled together in a very confused manner, I have made bold to parcel them out into several heads by frequent interruptions. First, to put it out of my power to overlook any thing that is material, and 2dly, to place my answers as near as was possible to the respective objections they belong to ; and so save the reader from being either lost in a labyrinth, or obliged to look back every moment to refresh his memory. All which are unquestionable proofs, that I have aimed at nothing more than to set every thing in the clearest light.

His lordship being supposed to be a layman, it was not natural to make him speak like a schoolman or profound divine. For which reason the reader will be troubled as little as is possible with the learned languages of schools, nor with any more quotations, than are absolutely necessary for his lordship to maintain his cause. The truth of the matter is, I presume not to write for scholars, but the generality of laymen, and have therefore made it my study to express myself so intelligibly, that though perhaps I may not be always understood by the most ignorant of all, the middle sort between a scholar and a ploughman, if blessed with a good natural capacity, will easily understand me.

The motive that induced me thus to accommodate myself, as much as was possible, to the capacity of the unlearned, was to provide a proper antidote for those, who are most in danger of being poisoned by the gentleman's artful way of imposing upon his reader by crafty insinuations, pleasant raileries, deceitful equivocations, misrepresentations, without number, and falsehoods as boldly asserted, as if they were revealed truths. For though the learned, who search into the bottom of things, and can discern froth and noise from solid arguments, be proof against these little artifices, yet they are apt to have an influence on those, who either know nothing of the true state of the question, or are not skilful enough of themselves to distinguish between sophistry and fair reasoning, and are often more affected with a quaint turn, a bold assertion, or pleasant banter, than the strongest demonstration.

We cannot doubt but the gentleman has cooked his Case Stated to please these palates; and I must do him the justice to own he has done it with the most exquisite skill. I shall present the reader with a few samples of it to let him see how great an artist he is at stating Cases.

1. The weak part he allots to his Roman Catholic lord is a continued cheat upon his unlearned readers from end to end. For unless he will choose to plead ignorance (which is a very bad excuse for a divine) he could have no other end in it than to make his readers believe, that Roman Catholics have nothing better to say for their religion, than what his lordship says for it in the former conversation: which certainly is a piece of disingenuity wholly unbecoming a fair adversary.

2. He shews himself most exquisitely skilful at puzzling and perplexing a cause by mixing truth and falsehood so artfully together, that you can neither grant all without prejudice to your cause, nor deny all without wronging the truth. The use of this is to lead ignorant people into a mist, and keep out of sight the true state of the question.

3. No man is so profuse in scripture texts, as the gentleman in certain occasions, when he has a thing to set forth, which either is quite foreign to the purpose, or never was denied by any Roman Catholic. And what can be the design of this? There certainly lies a snake in the grass. For ignorant people will never imagine the gentleman would produce so much good scripture but to confute some papistical error. And will they not then take us to be the very worst of christians, since they will suppose us to deny things so plainly proved from scripture, and conclude the protestant gentleman has the whole truth of the question on his side?

4. The gentleman is extremely fond of repetitions, which, as he has managed them, turn to a very good account. But where is the harm of it? Can truth be told too often? No, but falsehood may: and there is a large difference between saying and proving. Now when the gentleman has once said a thing (which afterwards he commonly calls shewing or proving) and the noble peer has said nothing to disprove it, he reckons upon it after that as so much ground fairly gained upon the Church of Rome, and repeats it upon all occasions as a thing not to be contested with him any more than a first principle: not doubting but his protestant readers will regard him as one in a triumph rather than a dispute: nor has he any reason to fear many of them will be sagacious enough to reflect, that his popish lord is all the while under tutelage, and can go no farther than the length of his leading strings, which the gentleman keeps fast in his own hands, will permit him.

5. As to equivocations, the gentleman has managed them with the utmost dexterity. There are three choice ones, of which he has made a very good hand in the disputes about infallibility, invocation of saints, and the honour we pay to their images and relics. His double meaning of the CHURCH OF ROME, which he takes sometimes for the whole church in communion with the see of Rome, and very often for the particular diocess of Rome is very useful to him in the question of infallibility. For who can refuse to be of the gentleman's opinion, that it is no article of faith that infallibility was ever promised to one particular diocess more than another?

His two other favourite equivocations are grounded on the various acceptations of the words WORSHIP, and

MEANS OF GRACE; the ambiguous meaning whereof he found to be of excellent use for the ridiculing of miracles, blessings, images, relics, holy water, &c., and to prove papists to be idolaters in spite of common sense.

I should be glad I had no reason to complain of falsifications, because the charge is foul and odious. But, as I have been obliged to make his lordship expose them, when they fell in his way; I shall here take notice of one, which indeed is notorious. The reader will find it in the 8th section, 2d part; the title whereof is, ST AUSTIN FALSIFIED. It contains a passage taken from that father upon the 96th Psalms, which, if fairly rendered bears a sense wholly different from what the gentleman has fixed upon it by the most unfaithful translation, that perhaps ever ventured to appear in print: and, what is very remarkable, he repeats it four or five times afterwards, and lays a singular stress upon it to prove the unlawfulness of our invocation of saints and angels. However I am inclined to think the gentleman is rather the copier, than primary author of the scandalous falsification I speak of; it being very probable he found it in the writings of his protestant predecessors, and took it upon trust either through want of leisure to examine it himself, or too good an opinion of the authors, from whom he transcribed it. This is the most favourable construction I can put upon this, and other unfaithful quotations, that will be hereafter laid to his charge.

But I cannot make the same apology for some notorious untruths, and calumnies, scattered up and down in the gentleman's Case Stated. Because there was no need of a tedious search into authors to detect the falsehood of these. The dictates of his own conscience and reason sufficed alone to convince him of it: and he is equally inexcusable, whether he be the forger or dispenser only of such slanders: I shall here mention only two. First, that the scriptures and legends have the same foundation in the Church of Rome; that is, her authority: and that therefore the common people believe them both alike, and the men of sense believe neither, p. 159; and 2dly, that the Pope's supremacy is the only article in our creed to be believed explicitly. As for others, implicit will do for them all, that is, it is no matter, whether we believe them or not, p. 197.

Is it possible a person of the gentleman's judgment and learning believed a word of this, when he wrote it? If he did, it is a flagrant instance, to what excessive degree prejudice will blind a man. If not, it shews how little justice Roman Catholics can expect from a protestant writer; and suffices abundantly to give the reader a just idea of what the gentleman himself thought of the cause, he undertook to plead. For he could not be ignorant of this received maxim, that truth stands always firm upon its own bottom, and needs not the little tricks of sophistry, much less the help of falsehood and slander, to support it. If therefore a person of his capacity durst not hazard the issue of his cause upon a fair trial, but found himself obliged to have recourse to such artifices, as I am sure a good cause stands not in need of, must we not conclude, he had himself an entire mistrust of the goodness of his cause, since he effectually judged it stood in need of these artifices, and employed them accordingly? I may therefore confidently say, that all the unfair and sinister ways, the gentleman has made use of to asperse and traduce the Church of Rome, are so many authentic testimonies of his own producing, that the truth is against him.

There is one thing very remarkable in the gentleman's Case Stated. For in the title-page of his book he promises to shew two things: 1. That the doubt and danger of salvation is in the communion of the Church of Rome. And 2dly, that the certainty and safety is in the communion of the Church of England. Now I must own he has laboured hard to prove the former. Nay he has gone much farther. For he has employed near 30 pages (I hope it will not do him much honour) to prove us as rank idolaters as the heathens ever were. And so instead of doubt and danger of salvation, he ought to have promised to shew, that nothing but hell and damnation can be hoped for in the Church of Rome; since these will surely be the just reward of heathen idolatry practised by christians themselves.

But as to the latter point, viz., his shewing the certainty and safety of salvation in the Church of England, the gentleman has been pleased to supersede that part of his task; as judging it much easier to lampoon and traduce the Church of Rome, than defend his own. For there is not one single argument in the gentleman's whole book to convince the reader, that the communion of the Church of England is preferable to that of any other reformed church. And why then is the Church of England alone mentioned in the title-page with this pompous eulogium, that the certainty and safety of salvation is in her communion. Will not every one who reads this title expect to find some positive proofs to convince him that he ought to prefer her communion before any other? And will he not be strangely disappointed to find nothing but a mere satire upon the Church of Rome, and not one solid argument to induce him to embrace the gentleman's church rather than that of Lutherans, Calvinists, Independents, Anabaptists, Quakers, &c., in case he either has his religion yet to choose, or is disposed to leave that, in which he has till then been educated?

If the gentleman had declared that his whole design was to make a non-papist of his lordship, I should have owned his book and title were exactly of a piece. For I confess I never read a more artful lampoon upon popery in my whole life. But to make a solemn profession of shewing that the certainty and safety of salvation are in the communion of the Church of England, without giving one single reason to prove her communion to be preferable to that of any dissenting protestant church, or offering at least one distinctive mark to shew her to be that one, holy, catholic and apostolic church professed in the Nicene Creed, is such an omission, as will not easily be excused.

What! did he design to laugh his lordship out of all revealed religion? If so, I cannot but approve of the method he has taken. But if he intended to make him a convert to the Church of England preferably to any other church, why did he not set forth her peculiar advantages, over other protestant communions all differing from one another, to the end that when his lordship should be resolved to renounce popery, he might not turn atheist or deist for want of knowing where to find the true church of Christ? Why did he not endeavour to convince him of the antiquity of the reformed Church of England; her perpetual visibility from the first preaching of the gospel in Great Britain; her uninterrupted succession of protestant bishops derived from the apostles themselves; her catholicity, that is, her having always been a part of that church, which has universality both of time and place; and lastly, the wonderful miracles her protestant children have wrought in confirmation of her doctrine, as it is distinguished both from popery, and that of other reformed churches? For these are the external marks of the true church of Christ, which convinced St Austin of the truth of her doctrine. And if the gentleman had but remembered to shew these marks in the Church of England, his lordship could not have resisted the force of such evidence against him. I leave the reader to consider the reasons why he did not. I believe they are all comprised in his short sentence, ultra posse non datur esse; which may be Englished thus, a man can do no more than he can do.

But there seems to be another omission in the gentleman's Case Stated. For though the Pope's supremacy be the article singled out by him, against which he has employed the best part of his time and skill; though he begins and ends with it; nay though he resumes it several times, and even drags it in by head and shoulders, yet he has not vouchsafed in the whole conversation to mention so much as once the visible head of his own church. This surely was not fair. For suppose he should have lampooned his lordship into a resolution to throw off his former head, was it not an act of justice to supply him with another? Or was he so ashamed of him that he durst not name him? For my part I will not resolve the question, but leave it to the reader to do it for me.

These are the most material things, of which I thought it necessary to inform the reader. I shall only add, that though this new conversation betwixt his lordship and the gentleman was finished a considerable time ago, there occurred reasons not necessary to be mentioned, which retarded the publication of it.

CONTENTS.

PART I.

	Page
DEDICATION	v
Address	vii
The Preface	xi
The Introduction, containing an answer to the gentleman's preliminary questions	1
SECTION I. Rome the Mother-church	5
II. St Peter's Supremacy	8
III. Proved from St Matthew	11
IV. Proved from St John	16
V. Objections against St Peter's supremacy answered	23
VI. The objection from the council of Jerusalem answered	30
VII. Other objections answered	34
VIII. The Church's Unity, and Supremacy of the Pope	38
IX. St Gregory's judgment relating to the subject under debate	42
X. St Cyprian's judgment relating to the same subject	46
XI. The belief of common Christianity is not a sufficient unity of faith	48
XII. The Supremacy resumed, with a touch upon unity	53
XIII. Of new Articles of Faith, and the Sacraments	57
XIV. Of Sects and Divisions	62
XV. The Greek church broke off from the Church of Rome	65
XVI. The Greek church formerly owned the Pope's supremacy	68
XVII. It is a notorious falsehood, that the church in communion with the see of Rome never was one half of the great body of Christians in the world	71
XVIII. Mr Du Pin explained	76
XIX. Mr Talon's speech against Innocent XI. falsely quoted by the gentleman	79
XX. Of general Councils	82
XXI. A general Council is the representative of the Catholic Church only	89

SECTION	Page
XXII. The Infallibility of the Church	94
XXIII. All God's promises are not conditional	98
XXIV. The Church always visible and holy	104
XXV. Of Miracles	110
XXVI. The Circle examined	117
XXVII. The being of a God may be believed upon the authority both of the church and scriptures	122
XXVIII. Of Jews, Pagans, and Mahometans	126
XXIX. None saved without faith in Christ	133
XXX. The subjects of Supremacy and Infallibility resumed	137
XXXI. No general defection foretold by Christ	140
XXXII. The difference between the Synagogue, and the Church of Christ	144
XXXIII. Of private Judgment	148
XXXIV. Of the Inspiration of Scriptures. And whether our belief of it be founded upon evidence excluding authority	153
XXXV. The Scriptures not falsified by the Church of Rome	162
XXXVI. Whether Infallibility excludes examination	170
XXXVII. Concerning the necessity of a living judge of con- troversy	176
XXXVIII. The Church did not fail at the death of Christ	178
XXXIX. The question concerning the necessity of a living judge resumed	188
XL. Concerning the deposing power	190
XLI. The same subject continued	198
XLII. The oath of bishops to the Pope is no prejudice to their allegiance	204
XLIII. The Bulla Cœnæ misrepresented by the gentleman	207
XLIV. Some touches of the gentleman's politics	215
XLV. The Supremacy misrepresented by the gentleman	221
XLVI. Of Excommunications	223
XLVII. Bellarmin and Gratian explained	228
XLVIII. The subject of Infallibility, and private Judgment resumed	230
XLIX. An infallible guide is an infallible assurance though we be not infallible ourselves	238
L. The four pretended contradictory schemes of lodg- ing the infallibility examined	243
LI. Of taking up religion by education, and how reason is to be consulted in the choice of it	249
LII. No salvation out of the Catholic Church	255
LIII. Pope Pius was not the author of the English schism	263
LIV. Protestants are no part of the Catholic Church	271
LV. The subject of Supremacy resumed, and most of the gentleman's former objections repeated	276

PART II.

	Page
SECTION I. Of the virtue and efficacy of the Sacraments	287
II. Of Beads	291
III. Of Blessings and Consecrations	292
IV. Of the sign of the Cross, holy water, and exorcisms	299
V. Invocation of Saints	301
VI. St Paul to the Colossians ii. 18, 19, misrepresented by the gentleman	307
VII. The difference between a mediator of redemption, and a mediator of intercession	316
VIII. St Austin falsified	320
IX. The scandalous parallel between the heathen wor- ship, and that of Roman Catholics confuted	323
X. Of dividing the Commandments	328
XI. The confutation of the parallel continued	331
XII. Of supposititious Saints	341
XIII. Of devotion to the blessed Virgin	345
XIV. The blessed Virgin not put upon the level with Christ	348
XV. The Index Expurgatorius examined	355
XVI. Of Relics	358
XVII. Of Images	363
XVIII. The Church of England guilty of incoherency	365
XIX. The subject of Images resumed	368
XX. Concerning Images of God	371
XXI. Of heathen Idols, and the golden Calf	377
XXII. Of Transubstantiation	385
XXIII. Transubstantiation proved from the words of the Institution	387
XXIV. Neither reason nor religion obliges us to judge always according to the information of our senses	395
XXV. Christ's body and blood are both really, and in a spiritual manner present in the sacrament	401
XXVI. Objections from the fathers answered	408
XXVII. The gentleman's unseasonable boasting	422
XXVIII. Some animadversions upon Dr Cosin's history of Transubstantiation	424
XXIX. The antiquity of the doctrine of Transubstantiation	430
XXX. Transubstantiation not repugnant to the principles of philosophy	434
XXXI. Of implicit Faith	437
XXXII. No danger of idolatry from the adoration of Christ in the Sacrament	439
XXXIII. Of school-distinctions	442
XXXIV. Some touches of the gentleman's skill in drollery and slander	449

SECTION	Page
XXXV. Transubstantiation as ancient as Christianity	454
XXXVI. Of the Worship of the Cross, and Images of Christ	460
XXXVII. Some touches of profane burlesque	466
XXXVIII. Of Concomitancy, and Communion in one kind	473
XXXIX. Lay-communion in one or both kinds is a point of discipline only, and neither forbid, nor commanded by Christ	479
XL. The decree of the council of Constance concerning Communion in one kind is not contrary to Christ's institution, nor the faith of the primitive church	485
XLI. Some sophistical remarks upon the 6th chapter of St John answered	492
XLII. Of Celibacy, or the single life of priests	498
XLIII. Objections answered	501
XLIV. Other objections answered	507
XLV. Of Purgatory	514
XLVI. Of Tradition	519
XLVII. The subject of Purgatory resumed	522
XLVIII. Of Merits	526
XLIX. Objections answered	532
L. Praying for the relief of the Dead has been the constant practice of the Catholic Church	540
LI. Some remarks upon the gentleman's performance	545
LII. Of the Liturgy in Latin	547
The Postscript, containing some remarks upon the gentleman's conclusion in the former Conversation	554
Of Supremacy	556
Of Unity	561
Of private Judgment	567

A

CONVERSATION

BETWIXT A

ROMAN CATHOLIC LORD

AND A

GENTLEMAN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

PART I.

THE INTRODUCTION.

Lord.—It is hard that by your last act of parliament I must lose my estate, or change my religion.

“Gentleman.—I think your lordship ought not to lose your estate, till you have first considered, how far your conscience will allow you to conform to what is required of you.”—p. 1.

L.—If I thought I could save my soul in the Church of England, I would think myself obliged to preserve my right, and my posterity.

“G.—Pray, my lord, what is there in the communion of the Church of England should make you think your soul in danger? Would there be any hazard of your soul, if there were no invocation of saints, that are dead, in the public offices of the church? No pictures or images of God to be seen there? No elevation of the host, which was but of late years brought into the church? No prayers for souls out of purgatory? If the public prayers were in the vulgar tongue, and if the sacrament were given in both kinds? For these are all the differences you will find between your public offices and ours.”—p. 2.

L.—Sir, I must be very short sighted to find no more. For first, I think preaching is a part of the public service of the church: and there is some difference between your sermons and ours. For I never heard our preachers either call the Pope antichrist, or Catholics idolaters, or the Church of Rome the Whore of Babylon. Neither do we ever hear them tell their congregation, with Dr Tillotson, that Transubstantiation is a controversy of downright impudence against the plain meaning of Scripture, and all the senses and reason of mankind. Ser. xxvi. p. 297. Now, to deal plainly with you, I should think my soul in danger of perishing eternally, if I communicated with a church, that disperses libels from the very pulpit, and preaches calumnies instead of the gospel.

B

But, secondly, I think the mass is a very substantial part of our public office; and I find it not mentioned in your queries. You speak indeed of the elevation of the host: but that is no essential part of the mass; nor is it any thing to the purpose, whether it was brought in of late or of old: though in effect it is ancienter than your church by above 900 years. But if the church should think fit to make an alteration either in that, or any other ceremony, as she may do if she pleases, my salvation would be upon the same footing as it is now. In like manner, if by the same authority no pictures or images were seen in our churches, if the public prayers were in the vulgar tongue: and if there were neither any invocation of saints, nor prayers for the dead in the public liturgy; finally, if the sacrament were given in both kinds, my soul would be in no danger in the communion of the Church of Rome. Because though her discipline would then be changed, her faith would be the same as it is now.

But my salvation would certainly suffer shipwreck, if I should separate myself from her communion (as the Church of England, and other reformed churches did, and continue to do) by obstinately refusing to pay a respectful submission to the discipline established by her. For I think it but reasonable to allow the church as much authority to regulate her own discipline, as the state has to make its own laws. And therefore as those would be looked upon as factions and sedition subjects, who should dispute this authority in the state, so they deserve no better character, who impeach the legislative power of the church, or by refusing to submit to it, become guilty of schism.

Pray, Sir, do not you argue thus against the dissenters, when they rail at the book of common prayer, or accuse you of popery for baptizing with the sign of the cross, kneeling at the communion, and using many other popish ceremonies? And do you not charge them with schism for separating themselves from your church upon these, and other such pretences? Now, Sir, I should be glad to know how the dissenters can be guilty of schism in separating themselves from your church, if the first English reformers were free from the guilt of it, when they separated themselves from their mother church, the Church of Rome; in which they had received their baptism; whose faith they had possessed for many years, and whose laws they were bound to obey as being subjects and members of that church? And if they were schismatics, who first went out of their mother church, they who tread in the footsteps of such forefathers, and continue the breach they made, can be no better. This, Sir, is a sufficient reason to think my soul would be in danger in the communion of the Church of England, or any other reformed church: and thus your questions, which a Lutheran, or Calvinist, or fanatic might have asked as well as yourself, are fully answered.

But let us now suppose, there were no more difference between your public office and ours, than you have mentioned, pray, Sir, is there no difference between us in articles of faith? I heartily wish there were not. But I fear there is difference enough to condemn any man, that keeps wilfully, on the wrong side of the question. What do you think of transubstantiation, of infallibility, supremacy, the number of sacraments, and several others? These surely are questions of somewhat greater moment, than those about pictures hanging in the church, or what sort of language we are to say our prayers in. But I presume they were not so well calculated for a jest, or to laugh a man out of his religion.

G.—My lord, the questions, I have put to you, are six in number. The four first are concerning things no where enjoined by God, and yet you practise them. The two last are concerning things, he has expressly commanded, (viz. public prayers in the vulgar tongue, and communion in both kinds) and yet you forbear, and forbid them. Our worship is therefore purer, and more orthodox than yours.—Vind.

L.—Sir, it is false, that public prayers in the vulgar tongue, and lay communion in both kinds are commanded by God; as I shall demonstrate, when we come to treat of those subjects by themselves. (Part II. Sect. 39, 53.) But as to the first four questions, which you say are concerning things no where enjoined by God, yet practised by us; pray, Sir, has the church no authority to ordain any thing, but what God has expressly enjoined? Has a child no obligation to obey his parents but in things, for which there is an express command of God? Is it lawful for subjects to refuse obedience to superior powers, unless they can prove their commands from some express text of Scripture? May soldiers lawfully disobey their officer, when he commands them to march, or halt, or go upon an attack unless he can produce a text of Scripture for it? Or has the church less authority than the state, or an officer, or private parent to require obedience in things, that are not expressly commanded by God?

Sir, I put these questions to you to place before your eyes the frivolousness of yours, and convince you, that we are bound to do many things, which God has not enjoined us by any express command, and that by consequence my soul may be in danger by refusing to obey the authority he has established. Yet a certain friend of yours has had the weakness not only to cry up your questions as unanswerable, but to triumph in a very indecent manner over his adversary, because he let them pass without an answer. Take this then for your final answer, that, though God has not enjoined the elevation of the host, the hanging of pictures or images in the church, &c., by any express command, it suffices that he has commanded us to hear and obey the church, and not raise schisms by an obstinate disobedience to her laws. God has not enjoined you to baptize with the sign of the cross, and yet you practise it: neither has he commanded the common prayer book, and yet you use it. Suppose then some fanatical dissenter should put such questions as these to you: Would there be any hazard of your soul's salvation, if you should baptize without the sign of the cross? If the common prayer book were not used in the public service? Or, if you laid aside the many popish ceremonies, you still retain? Pray, Sir, would you think such questions to be unanswerable? Nay would you not rather think them impertinent and frivolous? In short, Sir, it is my judgment, that I cannot be saved, unless I keep in the communion of the true church.

G.—I presume your lordship means the communion of “the Church of Rome.”—p. 2.

L.—Sir, I mean the whole church in communion with the Church of Rome; whose bishop being the successor of St Peter gives her the authority and jurisdiction of the mother church over all particular churches, which compose the great body or society of men called in the Nicene creed the one, holy Catholic and apostolic church.

SECTION I.—ROME THE MOTHER CHURCH.

G.—My Lord, it is certain that Jerusalem was the mother church, where Christ first planted the gospel, and commanded that it should be thence propagated to all other nations, as himself said, beginning at Jerusalem. Luke xxiv. 47. And till after the vision of the sheet to St Peter. Acts ii. 19. They travelled preaching the Word to none but unto the Jews only. So that the Jewish christian church was the only church for some time, and she it was who converted the Gentile nations, and therefore was the mother church to them all. And Rome was not the first Gentile church. For the disciples were called christians

“ first in Antioch. Acts xi. 26. And the Greek church was “ before the Latin: the New Testament was writ in Greek “ for their use. Therefore the Greek church could not be “ the daughter of the Latin church, which was born after her. “ If your lordship allege that St Peter was head of the “ church, and bishop of Rome. I answer, ‘This will not make “ her the mother church. You may call her supreme, absolute, “ universal, or what you please, any thing but the mother “ church, to which it is impossible she should have any “ title.’—pp. 2, 3.

L.—Sir, it is not only possible but clear fact. What you have said proves indeed, that both Jerusalem and Antioch, and perhaps many other towns received the christian faith before the city of Rome. And the only consequence I can draw from it is, that Rome is not the oldest christian city, nor the most ancient episcopal see in the world. But you are pleased to infer likewise from it, that therefore she cannot be called the mother church, and your reason for it, viz., because the mother cannot be born after the daughter, is so very witty and pretty, that I fear I shall be thought impertinent in not yielding to the force of such solid reasoning.

However be pleased to take notice, that mother church is a metaphor, and a very proper one. But truly, Sir, we shall be forced to lay aside all metaphors, though never so proper and beautiful, if they must all stand the test of your logic. That is, if there must be a resemblance in all respects between what they signify figuratively, and the thing signified literally by them.

As for instance, a crafty man is by a very proper metaphor called a fox. But if some wiseacre should argue thus, let him be as crafty as he will, he neither has the smell, nor colour, nor head, nor tail, nor shape of a fox, therefore he is no fox: I believe he would not get the reputation of a profound wit by it. Now, Sir, your argument against my calling the Church of Rome, the mother church is much of the same force. You say, she is not of age to be the mother of all churches. I answer it is not age, that gives her that denomination. But she has the jurisdiction, the power, and authority of a mother over other churches : and that suffices to give her a just claim to that title. As the late Queen Anne was styled the mother of her people, though she was not the oldest woman in the nation.

King James the first stuck not to own her title in a speech to the parliament, Ann. 1603. I own (says he) the Church of Rome to be our mother church. And indeed her claim to that title, particularly in relation to the Church of England, is unquestionable, because the whole kingdom of England owes its conversion from paganism to christianity to the See of Rome.

“ G.—My lord, in the conversion of Gentiles to christianity one man and one nation must receive faith before another. They were not all converted on a day. And as when one man converts another, so it is of churches and nations, it gives the one no superiority over the other, except that of gratitude and esteem, but nothing of authority.”
—pp. 3, 4.

I.—It is very true, Sir, that one nation converting another gives the former no authority over the latter. And therefore, though the Church of Rome deserves even upon that account the title of being the mother church to the Church of England, because she begot her forefathers in Jesus Christ through the Gospel. 1 Cor. iv. 15. Yet it is not on that title her claim to superiority is grounded. For this was the case of the Jewish christian church, which (as you observed before) converted the Gentiles ; and therefore was their mother indeed, but not superior. Nay Jerusalem, where the christian faith was first planted, is the very last of the patriarchal sees in the East ; and in St. Jerome's time had not even jurisdiction over Palestine, but was subject to Cesarca its metropolis, as appears from his 61. Epist. to Pammachius. So that, though Jerusalem was the first in the order of time, it became afterwards inferior in the order of government.

The title, therefore, on which the Church of Rome grounds her claim to superiority over other churches, is the supremacy of her bishop, who in quality of successor to St Peter is head of the Catholic, that is, Universal Church. And this gives her a spiritual jurisdiction or authority over all other particular churches.

SECTION II.—ST PETER'S SUPREMACY.

G.—Whatever the privileges of the mother church may be, if it can be translated from the mother to the daughter, from one church to another, from Jerusalem to Antioch, and from thence to Rome, as you must be obliged to say, then it may be translated from Rome also to some other church, unless some positive command of Christ can be produced, first, to fix it at Rome, and then a promise, that it shall never be removed from thence.”—p. 4.

L.—Sir, I perceive you go upon a mistake. For you imagine we suppose, that towns as well as men were appointed by Christ for the government of his flock. But I must disabuse you. For he neither made Jerusalem, nor Antioch, nor Rome the seat of St Peter, or his successors; but left them to choose the place of their residence, where they should think fit. When St Peter had his seat at Antioch, that was the metropolis or mother church of the christian world. When therefore he translated his episcopal see from thence to Rome, did he leave his commission behind him, or divest himself of the authority Christ had given him to govern his flock? No surely. Rome therefore became at that time the mother church, as Antioch had been before.

G.—It might then have also been removed from thence to any other place.

L.—I doubt not but it might. But will that any way endanger the supremacy either of St Peter or his successors? I hope, not. For, if it be not also removed from their persons, as I presume it never will as long as Christ's institution stands good, every thing is very safe, and I am in no pain about the place where St Peter might have fixed his seat. For surely his authority followed him, wherever he went: and if he had pleased, he might have fixed it in any other town as well as Rome. For Christ neither made him bishop of Rome, nor patriarch of the west, but head of his church, and by consequence his successors after him.

Whence it appears beyond all dispute, that there is no need of producing any positive command or promise of Christ to fix the papal seat immoveably at Rome: but, if you will say any thing to the purpose, you must show, where Christ has positively forbid Rome to be the seat either of St Peter or his successors.

“G.—My lord, the Church of Rome is not once named in all the New Testament, unless she is meant by the church of Babylon, 1. Pet. v. 13; nor is there any promise whatsoever made to her, or any the least intimation of her being the head of the churches, the standard and centre of unity to them all. Strange! if that be the summa rei christianæ, as Bellarmin calls it (in the preface to his book de Romano Pontifice) the sum and foundation of the Christian Religion.”
—p. 4.

L.—Sir, whatever you may think, it is not at all strange in my opinion, that the seat of St Peter, and his successors should be the centre of unity, and yet not named in the New Testament: and the reason, why it does not appear strange to me is, because though Christ appointed the person that was to govern his flock, he did not appoint the place of his episcopal see. However if the Church of Rome be not once named in all the New Testament, we are then at least secure, that Christ has not left any positive prohibition against its being made the seat of his vicar upon earth; for then he must have named it. Yet after all it occurs just now to my mind, that St Paul wrote a long epistle to the Romans, and in chap. i. 7, he salutes them thus. To all, that be at Rome, beloved of God. Which I think may be called naming the Church of Rome. But that is a trivial slip amongst friends; so let it pass.

“G.—The scriptures are wholly silent concerning the supposed universal supremacy of St Peter, or that he was at Rome, or bishop of Rome. Some after-writers have “ mentioned it. But that is far from such an universal tradition, as is sufficient for the mighty superstructure, “ which is raised upon it, but let it be granted, it signifies “ nothing.”—p. 4.

L.—It really signifies nothing to raise doubts about things as certainly known and believed as that there has been such a man as Julius Cæsar. Grotius, a learned Protestant writer, was not afraid to say, that no christian ever doubted but St Peter was at Rome. In Sinapsi Criticorum, p. 1540.

However, whether he was at Rome, or was bishop of it, or not, though the thing be unquestionable, it is a mistake to say, that any weighty superstructure is built upon that historical fact. For all we pretend to maintain as essential to the point in question, is, that St Peter was constituted by Christ head and ruler of his church, and that when he died, the church appointed him a successor in that high station, and has ever since done the same upon the demise of every pope; and finally, that all the successors of St Peter have had their episcopal seat at Rome. But as to what you say, that the scriptures are silent concerning the supremacy of St Peter, this indeed deserves a more serious consideration.

“ G.—All is grounded upon some words said to St Peter; “ as such: Thou art Peter, feed my sheep, &c. Which cannot “ be strained to such an universal supremacy, as popes have “ claimed: nor were so understood in the primitive church.” —pp. 4, 5.

L.—We shall examine that presently. But you are slinking away from the question, which is not what power some popes may perhaps have claimed, but what our Saviour gave to St Peter and his successors in the two texts, you have minced, as if you were afraid to speak out.

“ G.—In the learned M. du Pin, Traité de la Puissance Ecclesiastique et Temporelle, printed at Paris, An. 1707, “ pp. 495--501, and pp. 754—765, your lordship will “ find these two texts urged for the supremacy of St Peter “ and answered in the same manner as is done by Protestant “ writers; and it is showed how very foreign they are from “ the purpose intended.”—p. 5.

L.—Sir, M. du Pin no where denies the pope's supremacy in spirituals, but only in temporals; of which he maintains those texts to be no proof. But let us now proceed to examine the true meaning of them. I shall begin with that of St Matthew xvi. 18.

SECTION III.—THE TEXT OF ST MATTHEW XVI. 18 EXAMINED.

It is as follows: And I say also unto thee, thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

I know the common answer to this text is, that by the rock, is meant St Peter's faith, and not his person. But though the former interpretation be true, it is far from being the only one, or excluding St Peter's person. Nay, the application of it to his person is the most obvious and natural; as is manifest from St Jerome's remark upon the second chapter to the Galatians; where he observes that both the Greek word petros; and the Hebrew cephas signifies the same as the Latin word petra, that is, a rock: and by consequence the true meaning of our Saviour's words to St Peter is this: thou art a rock, and upon this rock I will build my church. Suppose then our Saviour had spoken thus in English to St Peter; thou art a rock, and upon this rock I will build my church: could there be any doubt, whether his words were addressed to St Peter's person?

G.—My lord, you interrupted me, when I spoke last; for I was just going to tell you, that the “Rock, upon which Christ said he would build his church, “was not Peter, but the faith which Peter then confessed.
 “Your lordship may see the current sense of the fathers,
 “and consult at your leisure, St Austin de Verbo Domini,
 “Ser. 13. Nazian. de Veteri Test. St Cyril de Trin. l. iv. St “Chrysost. Hom. 55. in Matth. St Ambrose Comment. in “Eph. ii. Hilary de Trin. l. ii. c. 6. and others.”—p. 5.

L.—Sir, you may quote as many fathers as you please, and they shall say as often as you please, that the rock, upon which Christ promised to build his church, was St Peter's faith. But can they not explain the text in one sense without excluding the other? This, Sir, is the real case. For they applied it just as their subject lead them, sometimes to his faith, and sometimes to his person; as will appear from the following quotation, in which it is applied to his person only.

Origen in Exod. Hom. 5. writes thus: Hear what is said, to the great foundation of the church, and to the solid rock, upon which Christ built his church, O man of little faith why hast thou doubted!

Tertullian puts this question. Was any thing concealed from Peter, who was called the rock of the foundation of the church? L. de Præscrip. c. 32.

St Cyprian epist. 71. Peter, whom our Lord chose the first, and ON WHOM he built his church. He repeats the same expression L. de bono patientie. And L. de disciplina et habitu virginum he writes thus: Peter, to whom our Lord recommends the care of his sheep, and UPON WHOM he built and founded his church.

But St Jerome's words (in Cap. xvi. Matth. Tom. vi. Edit. Paris. Vet. p. 73.) are very remarkable. To Simon (says he) who believed in Christ the rock, he gave the name of Peter, and according to the metaphor of the rock, IT IS PROPERLY SAID TO HIM, ON THEE WILL I BUILD MY CHURCH.

St Austin likewise, who is the very first of the fathers you referred me to, speaks as plainly as the former for St Peter's person. Count (says he) the priests even in St Peter's see: observe the succession in that rank of fathers, that is the rock, which the proud gates of hell do not overcome. Aug. in Psal. contra partem Donati. And again in Psal. lxxix. Sect. 4. he writes thus: Peter, the chief of the apostles, door-keeper of heaven; Peter who for his confession was named the rock, ON WHOM the church was to be built.

Methinks, Sir, the current of antiquity begins to run somewhat favourably for St Peter's person. But, since one good turn deserves another, as you sent me to rummage amongst old books, I shall return your favour with interest, and desire you likewise to consult at your leisure the Fathers quoted by the author of the church of Christ showed, &c. Part III. Chap. ii. Sect. 3, where, besides those already quoted, you will find above double the number of those you referred me to, who all apply the text of St Matthew to St Peter's person. For the question between you and me is, not whether some of them have applied that text to St Peter's faith, which nobody denies; but whether they positively exclude his person? And the passages you will be referred to by the forementioned author, will convince you they have not.

G.—I hope your lordship will not deny, that St Cyril of Alex. positively excludes his person.

L.—Sir, I shall make bold to deny it.

G.—Does he not say expressly Dial. 4. de Trin. that Christ gave the name of the rock to nothing else but the constant and unshaken faith of the disciple?

L.—He does so. But unless you will make him contradict himself, his meaning can be no other, than that St Peter merited that title by nothing else but his faith. Pray, Sir, does not St Jerome, Epist. 61. ad Pammachium. Tom. ii. p. 254, say as expressly, that it was not St Peter's body, but his faith, that walked upon the water. Super aquas non corpus Petri ambulasse sed fidem. And will you conclude from thence, that it was St Jerome's opinion, that St Peter's body or person did not walk upon the waters?

But nothing can be fairer than to let St Cyril speak for himself: for surely he understood his own meaning best. His words (l. ii. in Joh. Ed. Par. an. 1638. tom. iv. p. 131) are these. He (Christ) foretold he should no more be called Simon, but Peter. Signifying by that word most properly, that he intended to build his church UPON HIM, as upon a most firm and solid rock. Now, Sir, you cannot save him from manifestly contradicting himself, unless you join with me in saying that St Peter, according to this father, merited the title (which Christ bestowed upon him) by his faith alone, and received it in his person.

G.—But, my lord, take it now for granted, that the text of St Matthew is meant of St Peter's person, what advantage can you make of it for the proof of his supremacy? For you can infer no more from it than that the church was to be built upon St Peter. And so it was to be built upon the rest of the apostles according to St Paul. Eph. v. 20. Ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. This plainly puts them all upon the level. Vind.

L.—How industrious are men to deceive themselves when interest and passion inclines them to it! You argue thus: St Paul says, the church is built upon all the other apostles jointly with St Peter, therefore they are all upon the level. But I deny your consequence. For, though she be built upon them all, it does not follow that she is built upon them all in the same manner: but she may be built upon one in a more eminent manner than the rest. The frame of the English government is built upon king and parliament. But does that put them upon the level? or hinder the king from being the supreme head of all?

But let us hear St Paul, Eph. iv. 11, 12. And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the EDIFYING of the body of Christ. Here ordinary pastors and teachers are joined with apostles, prophets, and evangelists. And it is equally said of them all, that Christ gave them for the EDIFYING of his mystical body: that is, the building of his church. And will you infer from thence, that the church is built in the same degree upon ordinary pastors and teachers as upon the apostles themselves? Or that she is not built in a more eminent manner upon bishops, than the inferior clergy? Will you conclude from it, that the apostles had no jurisdiction over those, whom St

Paul calls pastors and teachers, but that they were all upon the level? If not, neither can you conclude that St Peter had no jurisdiction over the rest of the apostles from St Paul's saying, that the church is built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets.

G.—My lord, though I maintain, that the other apostles were the foundation stones in the ecclesiastical building jointly with St Peter, I do not deny but he was more remarkably so, than the rest of them. For it may easily be granted, that a peculiar privilege was designed him in these words, and that by him after our blessed Saviour the foundation of the church should be laid for the other apostles to build upon amongst both Jews and Gentiles: and if this were what our Lord intended, it was accordingly verified, as we read in the Acts of the Apostles. For he converted 3000 Jews by his first sermon. Acts ii. 41. So that here was now a church, and this church in an especial manner built upon St Peter according to our Saviour's promise. But then he was to lay the foundation of the Gentile church too as well as the Jewish. For he admitted Cornelius a Roman centurion into the number of christians, Acts x. 19; and preached the gospel at Cesarea. So that here was a perfect completion of our Saviour's promise to St Peter so far as it contained any prerogative peculiar to himself. And therefore Christ's promise that he would build his church upon him, means no more than that St Peter should first after Christ, build his church; which implies no superiority over the other apostles. Vind. pp. 19, 20.

L.—This, Sir, looks like the last effort of a person resolved to persist in the wrong in spite of the strongest conviction. However I am glad to hear you own, that St Peter was more remarkably the foundation stone in the building of the church than the other apostles, and that it was built upon him in a special manner. But I deny that our Saviour's promise to St Peter implies no more than that he should lay the first foundation of his church.

1. Because Christ promised to St Peter Matt. xvi. what he conferred upon him John xxi. after his Resurrec- tion. But the commission he then delivered to him was not barely to lay the first foundation of the church, but to take care of, and govern his whole flock; therefore his laying the foundation of the church amongst both Jews and Gentiles was not a full and adequate accomplishment of Christ's promise.

2. There appears a manifest difference between these two propositions, thou shalt build my church, and, my church shall be built upon thee, though both may be verified of one and the same person. The former imports no more than a transient action, but the latter a continual dependence. Because every building, nay every part of it has a continual dependence upon its foundation. Whence it follows that our Saviour's promise of building his church upon St Peter (and that in a special manner) imported nothing less, than that every part of his church should have a continual dependence upon him during his life, and upon his successors after his death: because the church government once established by Christ can never be altered without a special order and commission from him.

SECTION IV.—ST PETER'S SUPREMACY PROVED FROM ST JOHN XXI. 15, &c.

I come now to the text of St John. For though the supremacy was promised to St Peter before our Saviour's passion, his commission was not given him till after his death and resurrection.

G.—I presume your lordship means in those words, feed my sheep.

.L.—I do so. But though you have clipped them to make them lose some part of their weight, I shall make bold to quote the whole text as it lies, and make my observations upon it.

Christ on the very day of his resurrection had confirmed St Peter and the other apostles in their apostolical charge. John xx. 21. As my father sent me, so I send you, &c. And it is certain they all received here an equal apostolical charge or jurisdiction. But Christ appearing afterwards to St Peter, St John, St James, St Thomas, and some of the disciples, after he had eaten with them, he addressed himself thus to St Peter: Simon son of Jonas lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, yea Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, feed my lambs. He saith unto him again the second time, Simon of Jonas lovest thou me? He saith unto him, yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, feed my lambs. He saith to him the third time, Simon son of Jonas lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, lovest thou me? And he said, Lord, thou knowest all things, and thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, feed my sheep. John xxi. 15, 16, &c.

I observe here an unusual ceremony, such as is nowhere else to be found in the whole New Testament. St Peter is singled out from the rest of the company, Christ asks him, lovest thou me more than these? He asks him a second and third time, lovest thou me? And after each answer and assurance of his love, Christ gives him an unlimited commission to feed his flock. Whoever can see nothing here attributed peculiarly to St Peter, must shut his eyes wilfully against the strongest light.

G.—I own, my lord, I have not eyes to see it. For it was the necessary duty of all the apostles during their time, and of their successors in all following generations, to feed our Saviour's lambs and sheep. And if St Peter was required to do the same, this implies no more jurisdiction in him, than in the other apostles; on each of which this duty was no less incumbent than on him. I add, that if the words themselves do not convey any such paramount jurisdiction, the repetition of them can never do it.—Viud. pp. 21, 22.

L.—It is true, that a repetition of words does not change their literal signification. But no reasonable man will say, it does not enforce their weight; or that it does not mark out a more than ordinary importance of the duty, or injunction contained in words, that are thus repeated; especially when it is done by a person of the greatest authority. And therefore our Saviour's threefold repetition both of the question put to St Peter, and the command laid upon him to feed his lambs and sheep was doubtless intended to imprint in his mind an idea of some extraordinary injunction. The question itself, lovest thou me more than these? manifestly imports that Christ required a greater love of St Peter, than the other Apostles. And why so?

G.—My lord, perhaps our Saviour only put this question to him to put him in mind of his former profession of a singular love above the other apostles.*

L.—What, Sir! to put him in mind of it without requiring it of him! The question plainly implies the contrary, and I ask the reason of it. So pray, Sir, guess once more.

G.—Perhaps it was only to humble him under the sense of his dreadful fall and thus to quicken his care, and excite his zeal by the remembrance of his past miscarriage.†

L.—This guess, Sir, is as unlucky as the former. For if Christ only intended to humble him under the sense of his dreadful fall, it would have sufficed to have asked him dost thou love me? Or dost thou love me AS MUCH AS these? By way of insinuation, that they had not denied him, as he had done; which would have been very humbling. But Christ asked him, lovest thou me MORE than these? So this guess is likewise unsatisfactory.

G.—However I have St Ambrose for my voucher, who writes thus. For he, who had denied his Lord thrice, confesses him thrice, and obtains grace by loving as often as he contracted the guilt of sin by his fall. Sermon. 48.‡

L.—Sir, St Ambrose makes here only a comparison between St Peter's triple profession of love, and his threefold denial of Christ: but says not a word of the reason why Christ asked him, if he loved him MORE than these? And so his words do not in the least favour your guess. I shall therefore endeavour to give a better reason for it, and it is this. Because the higher a person is raised in the ministry of the gospel, the greater his love ought to be for Christ to enable him to fulfil his trust. And therefore since Christ demanded a greater love of St Peter than the other apostles, even the beloved disciple St John, who was present, it is more than a guess to conclude from it, that the command he then laid upon him to feed his lambs and sheep raised him to a higher station than the other apostles. Neither was this intended as a lesson to St Peter alone, but to all his successors, who without an extraordinary love of God, and zeal for his Church, can never be fitly qualified to discharge their important trust of feeding both the lambs and sheep of Christ; that is, of governing his whole flock: which is the true meaning of that text.

* Case farther stated, p. 27. † Ibid. ‡ Ibid.

G.—But pray, my lord, was it not the necessary duty of all the apostles to feed our Saviour's lambs and sheep? Vind. p. 21.

L.—Not in the same unlimited sense as St Peter was charged with it. But least this may appear to be gratis dictum, it is here necessary to observe, that the same words may either have a more restrained, or ample signification according to the circumstances they are spoken in, or the persons they are applied to: and nothing is more sophistical, than to infer from their signification in reference to one person, that they bear the same sense in reference to another. As for instance, Christ calls himself the light of the world, John viii. 12, and he calls his Apostles the light of the world, Matt. v. 14. Now if any one should argue thus, The apostles are called the light of the world as well as Christ, therefore this implies nothing in Christ above the apostles: would he not deserve to be pitied rather than answered? In like manner, all that are empowered to preach the gospel, catechise, or instruct, are properly commissioned to feed the flock of Christ, but does it therefore follow, that their jurisdiction is equal to what Christ gave to St Peter? If not: neither can we conclude, that he had not a more ample jurisdiction than the other apostles, who certainly were all commissioned to feed the flock of Christ. In effect, the other apostles had no jurisdiction over one another ; but St Peter's jurisdiction reached them all by virtue of those words.

G.—My lord, this is the very point, you are to prove : for I shall not believe it upon your bare word.

L.—Sir, I have already begun to prove it, first from our Saviour's demanding a greater degree of love of St Peter than the other apostles : which was a natural preamble to his laying a greater charge upon him. I have likewise proved it from the peculiar ceremony and solemnity with which this action was performed ; which, as it is without example in the New Testament, and as the whole ceremony regarded St Peter's person alone, as distinguished from the other apostles, so it is but congruous to common sense to infer from it, that it conveyed something to him above the rest.

I prove it 3dly thus ; the fact, we have under debate, happened at our Saviour's third apparition to his disciples, John xxi. 14. Now Christ had installed both St Peter, and the other apostles in the common exercise of their apostleship or mission at his very first apparition to them, John xx. 21, &c., when he gave them all their full powers and credentials to preach the gospel to all nations. This then was already done : and there needed not a new and extraordinary ceremony to install St Peter in an employment already bestowed upon him in common with the other apostles ; or to renew his commission any more than that of all the rest. And why then did our Saviour address himself to St Peter alone, and not likewise to the other apostles then present, if it was not to charge him with something, that was not to be common to all, and in which they were to have no share with him ? When you give a direct rational answer to this question, you will say something to the purpose.

G.—My lord, Christ only commanded St Peter to feed his flock. Now according to St Bernard, l. iv. c. 3. de Consid. to preach the gospel is to feed.*

L.—Sir, this does not answer but decline the question. To preach the gospel was the charge of all the apostles in common, for which they had already received their commission. And my question is, what need there was of renewing St Peter's commission any more than that of all the rest? My question is, why our Saviour addressed himself to St Peter alone in the presence of other apostles, if it was not to charge him with something that was not to be common to all? This question is yet unanswered.

* Case farther stated, p. 37.

G.—My lord, St Peter was certainly the apostle of the Jews in a particular manner; and the Jews are likewise in a peculiar manner styled in scripture God's sheep. And why then might not these be the sheep, he was here commissioned to feed.*

L.—What, Sir, did our Saviour then intend by those words to restrain St Peter's former commission, and limit it to the Jews alone! Was this the thing meant by that unusual and extraordinary ceremony! Was it for this Christ asked him, whether he loved him more than the other apostles, and charged him in such a particular manner to feed his lambs and sheep? Truly, Sir, when a man of sense is driven to such an answer as this, it is a sign, he is hard put to it.

But let us see, whether venerable antiquity ever gave any of these pretty turns to our Saviour's words. St Eucherius, bishop of Lyons, who lived in the beginning of the 5th age, wrote thus upon the eve of St Peter's feast. First, Christ entrusted him with his lambs, next, with his sheep: because he made him not only a shepherd, but THE SHEPHERD OF SHEPHERDS. Peter then feeds the lambs, he also feeds the sheep. He feeds both the young and their mothers. HE RULES BOTH SUBJECTS AND PRELATES. HE IS THEREFORE A SHEPHERD OVER ALL. For besides lambs and sheep there is nothing in the church.

This I think is very plain. And we cannot doubt but this ancient father delivered the current doctrine of the Church in his time, and so is an authentic witness of it. His words confirm my observation upon the unlimited commission given to St Peter in the text in question, and answer all your arbitrary explanations of it.

* Case farther stated, p. 30.

But let us hear St Chrysostom next, who, treating of the election of St Mathias, Hom. 3. in Act. writes thus of St Peter. See how he acknowledges the flock entrusted to him. How he is the prince of the choir. He had reason to act here the first of all WITH AUTHORITY, having them all delivered into his hands.

Here my observation on St John is again enforced, and St Peter is expressly declared to have acted the first of all with authority. And why? Because (says St Chrysostom) he had them all delivered into his hands.

Origen upon St Paul's Epist. to the Romans, cap. vi. p. 639, speaks the same language. Petro cum summa rerum de pascendis ovibus traderetur, et super ipsum velut super Petram fundaretur ecclesia, &c. That is, when the CHIEF POWER of feeding the sheep was given to Peter, and the Church was built UPON HIM as upon a Rock; the profession of no other virtue was required of him than that of love. Here both texts are joined together for proof of St Peter's supremacy.

It is true a friend of yours, Sir, carps at the translation of this last piece. But if a jury of grammarians were impannelled, I believe they would give their verdict against him.

G.—Pray, my lord, be not tedious in your quotations; for we have no time to lose.

L.—Well, Sir, then for brevity's sake I refer you for about half a score fathers more to the church of Christ shewed, &c. Part III. Chap. ii. Sect. 1. And from them all I think we may soberly conclude, that Dr Tillotson had a forehead of brass, and a seared conscience, when he told his reader in his preface to Dr Barrow's book of Supremacy, that the pope's supremacy is not only an indefensible, but an impudent cause. That there is not a tolerable argument for it, but there are a thousand invincible reasons against it. That the past and present state of Christendom, the histories and records of all ages, are a perpetual demonstration against it. That there is no ground in the world for it. But that now of a long time it has been by the pope's janizaries boldly asserted, and stiffly contended for without reason.

If strutting and swaggering will do the work, the poor pope is lost without remedy. But he has still some good old troops of janizaries to stand by him. The fathers I have quoted, and referred you to, are of the number, and they have two good generals at the head of them, namely St Matthew and St John. So I dare venture them against the doctor; who indeed had nothing so much at heart as to write good English, or make a flourish: but left truth to shift for itself.

SECTION V.—THE GENTLEMAN'S OBJECTIONS AGAINST ST PETER'S SUPREMACY ANSWERED.

"G.—My lord, nothing that was said of St Peter is so express for an universal supremacy, as what St Paul said of himself, 2 Cor. xi. 28, that the care of all churches lay upon him. And again, 1 Cor. vii. 17. So I ordain in all churches. "If such a decretal could be produced of St Peter's, I doubt not it would have been made use of towards proving his universal supremacy."—p. 5.

L.—If nothing be so express for St Peter's supremacy, as the two texts you have quoted are for St Paul's, pray, Sir, how comes it to pass, that not one of the ancient fathers has produced those texts in favour of St Paul, and such a cloud of those venerable witnesses have urged the two former texts from St Matthew and St John in favour of St Peter? Let me tell you, Sir, this looks a little scurvily; and I fear you will have some difficulty to give a satisfactory answer to it. For it is apt to make a man conclude, there is some better decretal for St Peter's supremacy than for St Paul's.

But let us consider the texts themselves. You say St Paul says of himself, 2 Cor. xi. 28, That the care of all churches lay upon him. But let us hear the whole text, and it will explain itself. He writes thus. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Here St Paul makes an enumeration of all his troubles and pains both in body and mind; and tells us, that besides the bodily sufferings enumerated by him, he was continually oppressed in mind with care and solicitude for all the churches; which shows indeed that he was a most excellent apostle, filled with zeal and charity for the whole church of Christ, as doubtless all the apostles were; and if either St Peter, or any other amongst them had said the same of himself, how it should be strained into a decretal for any superiority over the rest, is beyond my comprehension.

Your second text, so I ordain in all churches, is still less to the purpose. It is plain, it cannot be literally extended to all particular churches whatsoever. As the churches of Parthia, Ethiopia, India, or Scythia; in which the gospel was preached by St Thomas, St Bartholomew and St Andrew; but not by St Paul. Nor did he ever write to any of those churches.

G.—What means then his saying, So I ordained in all churches?

L.—Sir, it means, that St Paul was uniform in his orders and instructions. It means, that what he ordained in the church of Corinth, he likewise ordained in all the other churches, that were under his immediate direction. For though every apostle had a general commission to teach all nations, and a jurisdiction over all the churches, yet their labours were divided, and every apostle did not in person teach every nation, but only that, which fell to his particular lot. So that St Paul's saying, and so I ordained in all churches, cannot be understood of churches which he never instructed either by letter, or by word of mouth, but such as were particularly under his inspection. And is it not then very likely, that if St Peter had said as much of himself, we should have improved it into an argument for his superiority over the other apostles? You tell me, however, that if we had such a decretal for St Peter's supremacy we should make good use of it. Then, Sir, it is very lucky for us that we have it not; for it might have tempted us to trifle as some of our neighbours do.

*G.—But pray, my lord, is this your way of answering? The apostle positively declares, So I ordained in all churches. And you make bold to contradict him, and tell him, he had nothing to do to issue forth his orders for any but those under his more immediate inspection. As if St Paul did not understand his own business, and the extent of his power, till you came to direct him, and settle it for him.

L.—Really, Sir, though I am far from presuming to contradict St Paul, or question his understanding perfectly well his own business, and the extent of his power; yet I am still of opinion, first, that he never either travelled or sent letters into Parthia, Æthiopia, India, or Scythia. And 2dly, that he could not ordain things in churches, he neither ever saw, nor ever writ to. So pray, Sir, be not so uppish till you be sure at least, that you speak sense.

“G.—My lord, in the Acts of the Apostles it is told, that “St Paul was at Rome preaching the gospel two whole years together. Acts xxviii. 30. But not a word of St Peter's “being there.”—pp. 5, 6.

L.—To the best of my knowledge, Sir, and I am sure of yours too, the Acts are a history of St Paul's life, and not of St Peter's. And is it such a wonder, that an historian writing the life of one man, should not run astray from his subject to insist upon particulars relating to another.

“G.—As St Paul planted the gospel at Rome, so he “wrote to the church there as his particular charge. For “he says, Rom. xi. 13, I speak to you Gentiles, in as much as “I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify my office.”—p. 6.

L.—Good, Sir, did St Paul plant the gospel at Rome before he ever was there? That is news indeed. The gospel then had been planted at Rome some years before he wrote his epistle to the Romans; which was 15 years after St Peter had fixed his seat there. And to show he never had been there, he writes thus to them. Now I would not have you be ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, but was let hitherto. Rom. i. 13. In effect, it was towards the end of his life he came to Rome; and when he was there, he contributed very much towards the increase of Christ's flock by his continual preaching for the space of two years amongst them.

* Vind. p. 37.

G.—My lord, as St Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles, so St Peter was the apostle of the Jews; they were his particular charge; and he himself allowed that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed to Paul, as the gospel of circumcision was to himself. Gal. ii. 7—9. And accordingly he directed his epistle to the Jews of the dispersion throughout Pontus, Galatia, Capadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. But he wrote not to the Gentiles, particularly not to Rome; which would seem strange, if he had been bishop of Rome, and that had been his chief and principal charge." —p. 6.

L.—Pray, Sir, is it so very strange he should not write particularly to those, amongst whom he resided for the most part? Did St James direct his canonical epistle to the church of Jerusalem, whereof he was bishop? And why then is it so strange, that St Peter should not write to the Romans?

But as to what you say, that St Paul was the apostle of the Gentiles, and St Peter of the Jews: I answer, that as Christ was a minister of the circumcision, Rom. xv. 8. so his chief vicar took that part of the vineyard to cultivate in a more particular manner to his share. But neither was his jurisdiction confined to the Jews, nor St Paul's to the Gentiles. Did not God choose that the Gentiles by Peter's mouth should hear the word of God, and believe? Acts xv. 7; by whom even the first Gentiles were baptized at Cesarea, Acts x. 48. So we find St Paul preaching in the synagogue. Acts xiii. 2; xviii. 4, 11, as a chosen vessel to bear Christ's name before the Gentiles, and kings, and children of Israel. Acts xi. 15. In a word, St

Peter and St Paul, and the other apostles as well as they, had jurisdiction over all christian churches, whether of converted Jews or Gentiles; though their labours were divided, according as occasion required, or as they were directed by the Divine Spirit. All which is no proof, that St Peter was not the head of the apostles.

G.—St Paul's bold withstanding him to the face before the whole church of Antioch in behalf of the Gentiles, whom he had misled, fearing them who were of the circumcision, shows the care St Paul took of those, who were more particularly his charge; and seems a behaviour not very suitable to the supreme head of the church both Jews and Gentiles, if St Paul had known any thing of St Peter's being so constituted by Christ."—p. 6.

L.—Sir, his bold withstanding is a mark indeed of his zeal; but neither of his superiority, nor equality to St Peter in the college of the apostles. Is not the council bound to withstand the king, if he proposes any thing contrary to law, or the natural liberties and properties of the subject? And will you infer from thence, that the king has no superiority or authority over his council? Suppose the bishop of Canterbury should preach or write any thing to the prejudice of the Church of England, would a private doctor think it a presumption to withstand his superior, and write boldly against him?

But let St Austin answer for me. St Peter (says he) in whom the primacy of the apostles appeared with so surpassing a grace, was reprehended by a latter apostle. L. 2. de Bap. c. i. And though St Paul's zeal is to be admired, St Peter's humility in this occasion is far more extolled by some of the fathers. St Gregory's words are remarkable. He became (says St Greg.) the follower of one less than himself; that even here he might go before him: to the end, that he, who was first in the highest dignity of the apostleship, might also be the first in humility. In Latin thus: Atque in eadem re factus est sequens MINORIS SUI, etiam ut in hoc præiret. Quatenus qui PRIMUS erat in apostolatus culmine, esset et primus in humilitate. Hom. 18. in Ezek. tom. ii. p. 1180. This puts it beyond dispute, what these two fathers thought of St Peter's supremacy, and makes it plain that a superior may be reprehended by an inferior without prejudice to his authority.

G.—Methinks, my lord, it did not become the other “apostles to send their sovereign upon business, as they sent “Peter to Samaria. Acts viii. 14.”—p. 6.

L.—Indeed, Sir, your stock of arguments grows very low, when this must serve for one. Is it such an unusual thing for the whole body to depute their superior upon business, wherein the common cause is concerned? A bishop may be deputed by his diocess, a chancellor by the University, and even a prince by the senate. As the Jews sent their high priest Ismael with other ambassadors to Nero. Jos. l. 20. Ant. c. 7.

G.—If it be true, as some say, that St Peter was bishop “of the Jewish converts at Rome, and St Paul of the Gentiles there, St Paul would have had a much greater flock “than St Peter, and the successors of St Paul and not of St “Peter, must have been bishops there; because the church of “Rome is now, and has long been all of the Gentiles.”—p. 7.

L.—All of the Gentiles, Sir? How do you know that? But let that be as it will, though the personal application, or immediate inspection of the two apostles was perhaps divided, whilst they were together, their jurisdiction was not: and it is nothing to the purpose, which of the two had the greater number to instruct: for the whole flock belonged to them both in quality of apostles. But let us suppose St Paul was also bishop of Rome, all that will follow from it, is, that the popes succeeded both St Peter and St Paul in the government of the Roman diocess; which will not hinder their succeeding St Peter alone in the government of the whole church. However it was a thing unknown to antiquity to call the bishop of Rome, the successor of St Paul.

G.—My lord, the surest way to find out the truth is by “fact, and not straining expressions which may have several “meanings. The eastern monarchs have used to give themselves mighty titles, as son of the sun, and brother of the “stars, and king of all the kings of the earth, &c. But will “ any believe, that any of them was the universal monarch “ for all this contrary to plain fact ?”—p. 7.

L.—No, Sir, what then ?

“ G.—Then let me ask you, do you think one could write
“ the history of a king, suppose of king Charles the 2d, and “ in all the history neither call him King, mention his re“ storation, coronation, or tell one regal act, he ever did, as “ calling a Parliament, or presiding in it, sending, or re“ ceiving an ambassador, or granting a commission, &c. And “ so of a pope, could his history be wrote without calling “ him pope, or telling of one papal act of his ?”—p. 7.

L.—No, Sir, no more than St Paul's life can be writ without calling him Paul. But the life of St Paul may be writ without a recital of the particulars of St Peter's life.

“ G.—Pray, my lord, let me apply what I have said. We “ have the history of the Acts of the Apostles in which St
“ Peter has a great share, though not so much as St Paul.”

And there is a Council.—pp. 7, 8.

L.—Hold, Sir, you shall tell your story out immediately. But I desire you to answer me first. Are the Acts a history of all the apostles ?

G.—No, my lord. But St Peter has a great share in them, as I told you.

L.—And I shall let you know how great a share he has. St Luke, the author of the Acts, was St Paul's disciple ; and the Acts are properly a history of his life from his conversion till his coming to Rome, where St Luke also takes leave of him. Nay many of the apostles, as St Andrew, St Thomas, St Bartholomew, &c. are but once named before the descent of the Holy Ghost, and never after. And St Peter's life and actions are no farther related than was necessary to give a succinet account of the first planting of the gospel, and the progress it made in the first year after our Saviour's passion ; in which indeed St Peter had the greatest share, and acted on all occasions like the master-workman ; particularly in the election of St Mathias, as St Chrysostom has observed, Hom. 3. in Act. So that we have but one year of St Peter's life in the Acts. After the 12th chapter St

Luke speaks no more of him but occasionally in the 15th, because the history of his master, St Paul, required it; whose labours and sufferings are the whole subject of the last 16 chapters of the Acts. And so it is no greater wonder that we know no more of St Peter than that we know nothing at all of the greatest part of the apostles. And the reason of both is, because St Luke's principal design was to relate the apostolical labours of St Paul, whose life was very instructive, because he had been a violent persecutor of the church. Now, Sir, you may make your application, if you please. But your market is pretty well forestalled.

SECTION VI.—THE OBJECTIONS FROM THE COUNCIL OF JERUSALEM ANSWERED.

“G.—I was going to tell you, my lord, that there is a “ Council mentioned, wherein both St Peter and St Paul “ were present: and there is not a tittle of any superiority of “ St Peter over St Paul, or any of the other apostles, either “ in that council; or any where else throughout the whole “ history; which is impossible, if St Peter had that supre- “ macy, which the popes have claimed as his successors. This “ is so demonstrative a proof, that the writers on your side “ think it necessary for them to endeavour some solution to “ it. But the weakness of their answer is a yet greater con“ firmation on our side.”—p. 8.

L.—It seems, however, the writers on our side do not think it insolvable; and I am of their mind. But, Sir, your memory fails you in telling me, there is not any thing concerning St Peter's superiority over the apostles throughout the whole history of the Acts. For I told you just now of the election of St Mathias, which was the first thing done by the apostles after our Saviour's ascension; and wherein St Peter acted as head according to St Chrysostom's observation: and I do not find it mentioned in the Acts that when St Paul was called to the apostleship, St Peter either abdicated, or was deposed by his fellow apostles.

G.—My lord, your divines can find no other way to get some superiority to St Peter in this council than to suppose that he opened it, because, as they say, he spoke first; which would not infer the supremacy they pretend, if it were true. But it is plainly otherwise. For it is said, Acts xv. 7, and when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up and said, &c. Nor did he speak last. For after he had done, Paul and Barnabas declared the conversion of the Gentiles by their means without putting them under the law, which was the point in debate. And after they had held their peace, St James, who was bishop of Jerusalem, where the council was held, did, as president, resume what had been said by St Peter and others, and gave his definitive sentence upon the whole, wherefore my sentence is. And the decree of the council was drawn up in the words of St James. So that it is plain he closed the council, whoever opened it, or spoke first, which is not so material as to be told in this account of that council. But dismissing the council, and putting an end to it, seems of greater authority. If what is here said of St James had been said of St Peter, I question not it would have been made use of as a full proof of his supremacy, and presiding in the council."—pp. 8, 9.

L.—Sir, your not questioning and my not questioning are of equal weight: that is none at all. Let us then consider the merits of the cause, which is more to the purpose.

All you have said centres in this one point, viz., that it was not St Peter, but St James, who presided in the council; which to the best of my judgment cannot be made evident from the Acts.

You say St Peter neither spoke first nor last; that is more than either you or I can tell. For St Luke has let neither of us into the secret. It is certain St Peter's discourse is first recorded. But you answer, that before St Peter spoke, there had been much disputing. Acts xv. 7. Very right. But I ask, who opened that debate?

G.—St Luke is silent as to that particular.

L.—Is he so, Sir? And how then have you the assurance to tell me, it is plain from the Acts, that St Peter did not open the council? In effect, St Luke has left us in the dark, and St Peter may have opened it as president for ought we know. Therefore it is not evident from the Acts, that he was not the man.

But you have a second string to your bow, viz., that though St Peter should be allowed to have opened the council, it is plain to you, that St James closed it. But it is not so very plain to me: neither can it be so to you from the history of the Acts. It is true, St James's discourse is recited last by St Luke: but where does he tell us, that none of the apostles spoke after him? St Luke relates not a word of what was said before St Peter's speech, and yet it is plain a great deal was spoke before it. Besides, it is certain that St John the evangelist was at the council: and St Chrysostom, Hom. 33. in Act. doubts not but there were other apostles besides; yet not a single word is specified of what they said. And must we then conclude they sat like mutes, when the faith of the church was concerned? It is not natural to suppose it.

You say, St James resumed as president what St Peter had said. But why as president? That is begging the question: for any man may resume what another has said before him without acting as president, and others, for ought we know, resumed after St James what he had said. In effect, it was not St Luke's business to gratify the reader's curiosity with what every body said, or who spoke first or last, or who presided; but to come the shortest way to the grand point, that is, the decree relating to the matter under debate; because that was a full justification of his master St Paul.

G.—But, my lord, St James pronounced the definitive sentence. For he said, therefore my sentence is.

L.—Sir, I answer first, this is an unfair translation of the Greek, which is the original text. For $\alpha\gamma\iota\omega$ in Greek is the same as judico in Latin, and so it is rendered by St Jerome, which imports the same as if St James had said, this is my judgment or opinion. And so I find it likewise in an old French protestant translation of the Bible put forth anno 1540, where it is rendered thus, pour laquelle chose je suis d'avis, &c., which is no more a definitive sentence than what St Peter had pronounced before him in these words: Wherefore why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear? Acts xv. 10, for there he plainly delivered his opinion.

But suppose your translation of the text were exact, as it is not, how can you make St James's saying, therefore my sentence is, a proof of his presiding? For surely you will not question but every bishop in a council has a definitive vote, and may say, this is my sentence. Therefore since every apostle or bishop present at the council of Jerusalem had an undoubted right to give a definitive sentence, it can be no proof of any one's presiding.

G.—My lord, St James also dismissed the council and put an end to it, which is an act of authority.

L.—It is more, Sir, than you can make out from the Acts. For after the end of his speech St Luke writes thus: Then pleased it the apostles and elders with the whole church to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas, &c. Acts xv. 22. Whence it rather appears, that when the business, upon which they had met was ended, they parted by mutual consent: and there was not the least hint given, that they were dismissed by St James, or indeed by any single person acting as president of the council.

G.—However, my lord, it seems very surprising the Acts should be so silent concerning St Peter's supremacy, since it is a point of that importance.

L.—Why so, Sir? Must the scriptures say every thing in every place? Or is it so surprising that an historian should omit things foreign to his main design? St Peter's supremacy is sufficiently established in other parts of scripture, and it needs not be repeated in every chapter. But pray, Sir, in what chapter of the New Testament is the spiritual supremacy of the secular prince mentioned? Let me tell you, Sir, this is an ugly question, and so I will not press it.

But if the negative argument, you insist so much upon, be a demonstration (as you call it) against St Peter's supremacy, then, Sir, all the following articles, viz., the validity of infant baptism against anabaptists, the lawfulness of translating the sabbath-day to sunday against the Jews, the divine revelation of all the canonical books of scripture against the deists, and several other articles of great importance have, according to your way of arguing, demonstrations against them: because the scriptures are not only very barren, but wholly silent in the determination of these points. Nay, eating blood will be as criminal as fornication: because both are equally prohibited by St James's definitive sentence in the council of Jerusalem: and there is not a word on record, by which this prohibition was ever revoked.

The truth of the whole matter is this. The short relation given by St Luke of the council at Jerusalem affords no argument of any weight either for or against the supremacy of St Peter. But you are willing to make the best of a bad market, and play small game rather than stick out. The current of antiquity is against you; and so are the two texts of St Matthew and St John. This puts you under a necessity of picking up something to counterbalance, as well as you can, the evidence of those two texts.

SECTION VII.—OTHER OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

“G.—My lord, none of those texts are so express as those “I have quoted of St Paul.”—p. 6.

L.—It is very strange then that so many of the ancient fathers should allege those two texts for St Peter's supremacy, and not one single father should take notice of those you have quoted for St Paul.

“G.—My lord, if the texts you boast of were meant in that extent, for which you have produced them, it is impossible, but that must appear in the facts of St Peter, especially in the part he bore in the council at Jerusalem, and facts are the surest explanation of words.”—p. 9.

L.—Then, Sir, the very first fact of the apostles related by St Luke, Acts, i. I mean the election of St Mathias, decides the question against you. For it is manifest to any unbiassed reader, that St Peter acted in that important occasion as head of the whole assembly. Hear the words of St Chrysostom once more ; they carry weight, and cannot be repeated too often. See (says he) how he acknowledges the flock entrusted to him. He is the prince of the choir. He had reason to act here the first of all with authority, having them all delivered into his hands. Here, Sir, is an undeniable fact. Whereas the fact, you boast so much of, amounts to no more, than that St Luke (who has omitted innumerable other facts) has not declared in express terms, either that St Peter did or did not preside in the council at Jerusalem : which in reality was not a material circumstance in the subject of that historical passage. How unjust are prejudiced men in their balances !

But there are some other things very remarkable in the Scriptures. 1. That whenever the apostles are named together St Peter is always named in the first place. 2. That after the descent of the Holy Ghost he was the first that signalized himself in a sermon to the Jews ; and when the apostles were reflected upon by the people, he stood up and undertook their defence. Acts ii. 3dly. He wrought the first miracle in confirmation of the gospel. Acts ii. 4thly. He was the first, that preached it to the Gentiles. Acts x. And 5thly. He was the first to whom their vocation was revealed. Ibid.

These, Sir, are facts, and very considerable ones in a narrative, which was not intended for a history of St Peter's life, but of St Paul's. And though they be not demonstrative proofs of St Peter's supremacy, yet they contain circumstances, which very much corroborate the positive texts for it, and naturally lead an impartial reader to an idea of it.

“ G.—My lord, we discourse now only of authority. What authority one apostle had over another.” For that is the “ point, wherein we are concerned.”—p. 9.

L.—Very right, Sir.

“ G.—We speak not of other gifts and graces, or their labours in propagating the gospel, wherein one might be “ more eminent and successful than another. But this gave “ no authority over the others.”—p. 9.

L.—All this is very true.

“ G.—But in this also St Paul had the preference. For “ he laboured more abundantly than all. 1 Cor. xv. 10. And “ all the epistles almost are his to the several churches. And “ his miracles and conversions of infidels take up a much “ greater part in the Acts of the Apostles than those of St “ Peter.”—pp. 9, 10.

L.—A most wonderful discovery ! That the actions of a person, whose life is expressly writ, should take up the greatest part in such a history ! But to convince you, Sir, from your own principle, that this cannot be wrested into any argument for the lessening of St Peter ; it is your opinion that all the apostles were equal ; yet seven of the twelve are but once named in the Acts ; and not one particular action of theirs is related by St Luke, though his book be entitled the Acts of the Apostles.
 Either therefore your mentioning, that the actions of St
Paul take up the greatest part in those acts is a trifling observation ; or, if it has any force against St Peter, we must conclude, that the greatest number of the apostles were mere cyphers in the opinion of St Luke.

“ G.—My lord, I have said so much of this matter, because “ the supposed supremacy of St Peter, his being at Rome,
 “ and bishop of Rome, is the whole foundation of that supre- “ macy claimed by the bishop and church of Rome. And if “ that be so essential a point, and upon which the unity of “ the church depends, in so much that without it there is no “ church at all according to the scheme drawn by modern “ Rome, it is inconceivable the Scriptures should be so wholly “ silent in it ; nay showing the very contrary in fact, as I “ have said already concerning St Peter.”—p. 10.

L.—Sir, saying and proving are two very different things. You have said it indeed, but you have no reason to boast of it, unless a good assurance be a virtue. I grant then that the supremacy of St Peter is an essential point, and it is clearly determined by the word of God, if plain words and facts may be depended upon. The scriptures therefore are not silent in it. But it is your mistake, and not our doctrine, that St Peter's being at Rome, and bishop of Rome are any part of the essential point of his supremacy. For, though the facts be as unquestionable, as any historical facts can be, yet neither St Peter's supremacy, nor that of his successors has any dependence upon them. Because St Peter would have been head of the church, though he had never been at Rome: and his successors would be the same, and have the same authority, though he had chosen any other city for his episcopal see.

G.—My lord, when the direct question was put to our blessed Saviour upon the contest among the apostles, which of them should be the greatest, Luke xxii. 24, I say, if this was so material a point, as to the very being of the church, it is inconceivable he should not have determined it, but by his answer rather checked the error of their thoughts, and left them all upon the level.—p. 10.

L.—Sir, I have but three things to say to this objection. 1. You have first misrepresented the text. 2. Though I should allow it to be fairly represented, it can render you no manner of service, and 3. the context is against you.

1. The text is thus: And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest. Luke xxii. 24. Here indeed we are plainly told, that there was a contest among themselves, but not a word of any direct question put to our blessed Saviour; and is it then so very unconceivable that there should be no direct answer, when no direct question was put?

2. But suppose the direct question had been put to our Saviour, is it so very unconceivable, that he should not take that occasion to determine the matter? For was not Christ fittest to judge, what time was most proper to place a superior over his apostles, as he did in effect not long before his ascension? John xxi. 15, 16, &c. Or was he bound to gratify their ambitious curiosity with a positive determination upon the very spot? On the contrary they deserved even a severer check, than he gave them. However it was perfectly adapted to the nature of their fault. For instead of determining their contest, he gave them a lecture of humility to cure them of their pride. Yet at the same time he insinuated very plainly, that there was to be a superior amongst them; though he did not think fit to nominate the person at that time. Which makes good what I said.

3. That the context is against you. Our Saviour's words are these: And he said unto them, the kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them, are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so. But he, that is GREATEST among you, let him be as the younger, and he that is CHIEF, as he that does serve. Luke xxii. 25, 26. Is not this a clear insinuation that there was to be a chief among them, joined with an instruction, with what humility he was to behave himself? So that the text you have quoted, makes nothing against St Peter's supremacy, and its context makes for it. Unless you can name me some other appointed by Christ to be the head of his church, and centre of unity; for there is but one church of Christ upon earth.

SECTION VIII.—THE CHURCH'S UNITY, AND SUPREMACY OF THE POPE.

"G.—Your lordship may add, and in heaven too: for all are one church to Christ, of which he alone is the head. And one part being militant, the other triumphant, makes them not two churches, but two states of the same church, which is called one family in heaven and earth. Eph. iii. 15. In like manner heaven, earth, and hell are one kingdom to the great creator; for his kingdom ruleth over all. And of the earth it is said, the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the Governor among the nations. Psalm xxii. 28. All the nations are one kingdom to him."—p. 11.

L.—Sir, no man doubts, but the church militant and triumphant are but one church to Christ, who is the sole supreme and independent, but invisible head of the church militant upon earth. But the question between us is, whether he has not deputed a visible head to govern this church under him?

“ G.—My lord, he has appointed no universal monarch as his deputy of his kingdom of the earth. But each nation is governed by their respective rulers, who are independent of each other. For so his wisdom has disposed according to the capacity of his creatures. For what man would be sufficient to govern the whole world? And where must the seat be of this universal monarch? Must he not have as many or more deputies under him, as there are now kings or nations? And what prudence could prevent defections and rebellions in far distant provinces? This has overthrown great monarchies, which have fallen with their own weight. What then could support an universal monarchy? When nations go to war, other neighbouring kings and states may interpose, or assist the oppressed by mediators and guarantees of peace. But this could not be in case of defection from the universal monarch. For who assist rebels, are rebels themselves: and such wars could not but end in the utter destruction of the one side or the other. Therefore God has consulted best for the peace and safety of mankind in distributing the world into several independent governments, rather than put all under the dominion of one.”—pp. 11, 12.

L.—Sir, you have taken a great deal of pains to prove a thing, which no man ever denied, viz., that God has not established an universal monarchy or monarch upon earth. And therefore though the several kingdoms upon earth be one kingdom to God, yet they are not one among themselves, even when in peace, but much less when they are at war.

“ G.—My lord, the unity of kingdoms is indeed disturbed, when they are at war; but it is not totally dissolved. For there are laws of war, wherein all agree. There are still what we call the law of nations, which as it maintains commerce in peace, so it regulates the fury of war. And there is one unity, which nothing can dissolve; that is, God having made of one blood all nations upon the earth. So that here is an unity of relation, of humanity, and of common principles, which all retain.”—p. 12.

L.—However an unity, which does not hinder people from cutting one another’s throats, is but a very slender one.

“ G.—It is not as it should be; but it is so as is consistent

“with our fallen state, and the corruptions of mankind. It “is not such an unity, as is in God’s kingdom in heaven, “which yet was once disturbed by rebellion.”—p. 12.

L.—But, Sir, the rebels were banished out of heaven; and so all heretics, who are rebels against the church, are cut off from her communion. For it is as impossible for heretics to be members of Christ’s church militant upon earth, as for the devil and his apostate angels to be members of the church triumphant in heaven. But, surely, Sir, you will allow a stricter unity in the church of Christ upon earth, than there is among nations, that are at war with one another?

G.—I wish it were so. But, alas, it is not. And the “frailty of man shows itself in the church as well as in the “state. The many heresies and divisions in the church have “rent her to pieces, and broke her unity as much as wars “have that of the temporal world.”—p. 12.

L.—Is it then possible, that there should be no greater unity in the church of Christ, than there is among kingdoms, that are tearing and devouring one another! If this be all the unity we are capable of in our fallen state, then the church of Christ is a mere Babel, and his kingdom a realm of confusion.

You say, the many heresies, that are in the church have rent her to pieces. If you mean, Sir, that they have torn many limbs off from her, I grant it. But they remain not in the catholic church: they are cast out of her, as Lucifer and his apostate angels were cast out of heaven: and she remains truly one (or else the Nicene creed deceives us) that is, one in faith: one in the participation of sacraments; and one in the union of all her members under one visible head, Christ’s vicar upon earth. So that they, who by their pride, and obstinacy separated themselves from this head, to which they were once united, are accountable to God for the divisions you complain of.

G.—No, my lord, it is the pretence to universal supremacy in the church of Rome has been the great cause of “these divisions. It has procured peace in the church just as “setting up an universal monarchy would in the world, that “is, filled it with more confusion and bloodshed, than ever

“ was in it, or could otherwise possibly be. For which reason “ God has appointed no universal monarch in the church
 “ more than in the state.”—p. 13.

L.—To speak properly, Sir, the pope as such, is no monarch at all, much less the universal one. The reason is, because the word monarch is properly taken for one, to whom all others placed in authority are but as vicars, deputies, or vice-regents. In which sense Christ is the only universal monarch both of the world, and the church. For all bishops are his vicars, and all princes his vice-regents. And this cannot be attributed to the pope. But I am sensible that universal monarch is an odious name, and therefore very proper to supply the want of argument against the pope's supremacy; which in reality means no more than that he is the supreme visible governor of the whole church of Christ.

If therefore you pretend to maintain, that the pope's supremacy, or his being chief governor of the catholic or universal church, is as improper an expedient to procure its unity and peace, as a man's setting himself up for universal monarch would be to establish peace in the world, I can see nothing but a mere jingle of words to support the comparison, and the difference is obvious to common sense.

1. Because the strength of the civil government consists in money, arms, and men; which cannot be easily dispatched to all parts of the world. But church government stands quite upon another bottom. The weapons of our warfare (says St Paul, 2 Cor. x. 4, 6) are not carnal, but mighty through Christ. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience. These are censures, excommunications, suspensions, depositions, interdicts, &c., which neither distance nor opposition renders ineffectual, but have their force in the court of conscience, which it is in vain to oppose.

2. It is certain God has not established an universal monarchy, in the world: and therefore any man's setting himself up for universal monarch must of necessity cause opposition, and bloodshed. But it is no less certain, that Christ has established an universal church. For what does the word catholic else mean? It means undoubtedly, that the Church of Christ is not limited to this or that nation in particular, but is the church of all nations according to scripture language, go ye and teach all nations. Matt. xxviii. 19. And therefore as there is but one church in all the nations of the world, where the true faith is received, so Christ was pleased to appoint one head for the government of it.

SECTION IX.—ST. GREGORY'S JUDGMENT RELATING TO THE MATTER UNDER DEBATE.

“G.—My lord, Gregory the great said to John bishop of Constantinople (who upon the seat of the empire being translated thither set up for an universal supremacy in the church) if the church should come to depend upon one, it must suddenly fall. And Cyprian——.”—p. 13.

L.—Hold, Sir, let me answer this first. You are under a very great, and I fear a wilful mistake in saying that John bishop of Constantinople, set up for the universal supremacy in the church.

Anastasius Bibliothecarius will justify what I say. For in the preface to his Latin translation of the 7th general council addressed to pope John the 8th, he writes thus: Being at Constantinople, I often blamed the Greeks for this title [viz. oecumenical, or universal patriarch] as a mark of pride or arrogancy, to which they answered, that they did not call their patriarch oecumenical, as if he had the primacy of all the world, but that he was over a part, inhabited by christians. Meaning the eastern church. Non quod universi orbis teneat præsulatum, sed quod cuidam parti præsit orbis, quæ à christianis inhabitatur. Tom. vii. Conc. p. 30.

It is certain therefore, that the title of oecumenical patriarch, which John of Constantinople assumed, was understood by him and the other Greeks in a very innocent sense, and only signified, that he was the first patriarch of the east: as Monsieur du Pin likewise testifies, Cen. 6, p. 67, where he tells us, that John of Capadocia surnamed the Faster was sharply reprehended by St Gregory for taking upon him the title of oecumenical patriarch. Because this pope looked upon this title as a mark of ambition, though in the sense of the Greeks it was innocent, and signified nothing less than what St Gregory thought.

However as that saint understood it, the title was unjustifiable on several accounts. First, because it seemed to import a jurisdiction over the whole church, which did not belong to the bishop of Constantinople, nor was indeed challenged by him. And 2dly, because it seemed to import that he was the only bishop, or, at least that all other bishops were his deputies; a dignity belonging to Christ alone. It is manifest at least that St Gregory understood it so; as appears from his own writings, and particularly his words to the empress Constantina, to whom he complains thus: It is a lamentable thing (says he) to be forced to bear, that my brother and fellow-bishop John despising all others, endeavours to be called the only bishop. L. v. Ep. 21.

Now then, let us consider the words you pretend to quote from him, viz. If the church should come to depend upon one, it must suddenly fall. But, Sir, his true words are these: Universa ergo ecclesia, quod absit, a statu suo corruit, quando is qui vocatur universalis cadit; which I think ought to be Englished thus: Wherefore the universal church (which God forbid) falls from its state, when he, who is called universal falls. L. v. Epist. 20, last Paris edition. Now though this passage may be said to have some resemblance with the words you have quoted, the sense of it is very different, and true enough as St Gregory understood the title assumed by John of Constantinople. For if there were but one bishop in the church, and he fell into heresy, the whole episcopal order, and prelatic church would fall with him. But what is this to the pope? For though the whole church be governed by him, and by consequence depends on him in that sense, how can it be true, that if he should fall, the whole church would fall with him? We may as well say: that if he dies, the whole church must die with him.

G.—But what do you say to these words of St Gregory, L. vi. Epist. 30, ad Imperat: I boldly affirm, that whosoever calls himself universal bishop, or desires to be called so by others, shews himself by such his haughtiness to be a forerunner of antichrist, in as much as he proudly advances himself above all others.

L.—I answer that the title of universal bishop, as St Gregory understood it, was a title of pride and blasphemy. And if John of Constantinople had assumed it in that sense, he might have been properly called a forerunner of antichrist. For all heretics are called antichrists by St John. 1 John ii. 18. And St Jerome, Epist. 57, gives the same title to all that wilfully separate themselves from St Peter's chair; which would have been the case of John of Constantinople.

The truth of the whole matter is, St Gregory was a very humble man, and the title of universal bishop or patriarch seemed to him too pompous and haughty to be assumed by any man. It was certainly capable of a double meaning, and he took it in the worst, and in that sense opposed it with all his zeal: and, to set others a pattern of humility, he chose to style himself the servant of the servants of God. But did that hinder him from asserting the supremacy either of St Peter, or of his own see, which is the point we have now under examination? He was so far from it, that he maintained both the one and the other with the greatest vigour.

First, as to the supremacy of St Peter, in the very time of his dispute with John of Constantinople he wrote thus: It is evident to all that know the gospel, that the care of the whole church was by our Lord's voice committed to the apostle St Peter prince of the apostles. For to him it is said, Peter, lovest thou me? feed my sheep. To him it is said, thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Behold the care and primacy of the whole church is committed to him, and yet he is not called the universal apostle. And my holy brother and fellow-bishop John endeavours to be called universal bishop. Lib. v. Epist.

20, p. 748, ult. edit. This I think is a plain decision of what St Gregory thought of St Peter's supremacy.

As to the supremacy of his own see, let us also hear this great man speak for himself. First, (Lib. xi. Epist. 56, Vet. Edit.) he writes thus concerning a bishop, who pretended to be exempt from the jurisdiction of his metropolitan: If it be pretended that the bishop has neither a metropolitan, nor patriarch, I answer, that then his cause is to be heard and decided by the see apostolic, which is the head of all churches. This surely is plain and decisive.

But 2dly, he writes thus to the bishop of Syracusa: As to what they write of the church of Constantinople who doubts but that it is subject to the see apostolic? Lib. ix. Epist. 59, p. 976. Now Constantinople was neither under the Roman bishop as its metropolitan, nor as its patriarch: since therefore St Gregory thought it subject to him, he must necessarily suppose his see had a spiritual supremacy over the whole church.

Lastly, if this had not been his judgment, how could he pretend to give to St Austin the first bishop of Canterbury that jurisdiction, which the see of Canterbury still challenges over all the British bishops? This one action speaks his thoughts more clearly, than any words whatsoever. And I hope you will not accuse him of tyranny and usurpation, since Dr Barrow, your great champion against the supremacy, styles him a prudent, meek, and humble man, p. 18. And is it not then a most surprising discovery, that such a zealous advocate for the supremacy is at length found out to be an enemy to it? Or rather does it not plainly shew, how destitute you are of friends amongst the fathers, when the very person you pretend to bring in as a chief evidence for you has professed himself, both by words and actions, to be a most zealous defender of the cause you oppose?

But pray take notice, Sir, that the question now between us is not, what weight St Gregory's authority has with you, or any other protestant; but what his opinion was concerning the supremacy; for you pretend he is on the protestant side. It is therefore impertinent to auswer (as a certain friend of yours does) that a pope speaks here for himself. For whether St Gregory was pope, or no pope is nothing to the purpose: but if it be plain matter of fact, that he maintained the supremacy both of St Peter and his successors, the question is fully decided against you. So you may proceed now if you please to what you were going to say concerning St Cyprian.

SECTION X.—ST CYPRIAN'S JUDGMENT RELATING TO THE SUBJECT UNDER DEBATE.

"G.—St Cyprian said that Christ therefore made the college of bishops numerous, that if one should fall, or turn heretical the rest might interpose for the saving of the flock."

L.—Well, what then?

"G.—He also says, there is but one flock, and one episcopate, of which every bishop has the whole in partnership with the rest. Episcopatus unus est, cujus est à singulis in solidum pars tenetur. This was the frame of the church in his days, and before from the apostles. This was the very state of the apostles themselves, who thus shared the apostolate, the whole of which was given to each in partnership or in common with the rest."—p. 13.

L.—Sir, it is certain, there is but one episcopacy; that is, but one episcopal order or character, which is common to all. For one bishop is as truly a bishop as another, though their jurisdictions be divided, and many times subordinate to one another, and all under one head.

And this was truly the frame of the church in St Cyprian's days, and even from the time of the apostles; who, though they were equal to St Peter in the apostolate (as all bishops are in their episcopal character to the pope) yet were not left like independents without a head. And so it is beyond my comprehension, how St Cyprian's words can do you any manner of service.

G.—St Cyprian said to his bishops present in the council of Carthage. None of us makes himself bishop of bishops, or compels his colleagues by a tyrannical power to a necessity of obeying. Seeing every bishop is at his own disposal upon the account of his liberty and power, and can no more be judged by another, than he can judge another.

L.—Surely, Sir, you do not imagine it was St Cyprian's opinion, that there is no subordination of any one bishop to another, of diocesans, for example, to their metropolitan or primate? And if that be not his meaning, to what purpose have you produced his words? But let St Austin give the direct answer: I suppose (says he) he meant in questions of this kind, which are not fully and thoroughly discussed. For he knew how perplexed a controversy it was, which the church was then disputing, and canvassing on all sides. And he gave free liberty of seeking, that by the inquiry truth might be discovered. L. iii. de. Bap. C. 3.

Now the question, St Austin speaks of, was concerning the rebaptization of those, who had been baptized by heretics, which had been very warmly disputed between pope Stephen and St Cyprian. And since it was a controversy, in which the church had not yet interposed her authority, as she did afterwards, St Cyprian told the bishops assembled at Carthage, that no one could be compelled to recede from his own private opinion, but all were free to examine the matter, and deliver their judgment upon it. And what does that make against the pope's supremacy?

G.—St Cyprian (de Unit. Eccl.) positively attests, that what St Peter was, the same also were the apostles, endowed with a like partnership of honour and power.

L.—But, Sir, why do you suppress both his foregoing words, and those that follow immediately after? I can see no other reason for it, but because they spoil your market entirely. St Cyprian's words immediately foregoing are these: Yet Christ to show the unity of the church ordered by his own authority the origin of that unity beginning from one, viz., St Peter, whom he mentioned just before. And his words immediately following are these: But the beginning springs from an unity, that the church may be showed to be one. Now joining all these together with the words you have objected, St Cyprian's meaning appears plainly to be this, viz., that though all the apostles were equal in the honour and power of the apostolate, which we do not deny, yet for the preservation of unity, Christ thought fit to make one of them the origin or source of unity to all the rest. Which instead of being an objection against St Peter's supremacy, is a confirmation of it.

St Cyprian expresses himself in the same manner in his epistle to pope Cornelius. Where taking notice of the boldness of certain schismatics, that fled to Rome, he writes thus: Moreover they dare to pass the seas, and carry letters from their faction to the chair of St Peter, and the principal church, from which the unity of priesthood is risen. Epist. 55.

Here the see of Rome is both called the chair of St Peter, and the principal church, from which the unity of priesthood is risen: which in the foregoing passage he calls the origin or source of unity. And pray, Sir, what difference is there between these two expressions, and calling it the centre of unity? I confess I am not subtle enough to distinguish between them. And it is a plain case, that St Cyprian is as little in the protestant interest as St Gregory.

SECTION XI.—THE BELIEF OF COMMON CHRISTIANITY IS NOT A SUFFICIENT UNITY OF FAITH.

But, Sir, it is no wonder you should not see, with St Cyprian, the necessity of a supreme head to unite together all the members of Christ's mystical body, since, according to the large principle you have laid down, there is no greater unity in the church than among nations that are at war together. So that as the unity of the world consists in the unity of blood, and the common principles, which we call the law of nations, so in like manner, according to your system, the unity of the church consists in the common christianity wherein all agree.

“ G.—Why, my lord, is not every one, who believes in “ Christ a christian, as every one, who believes in Mahomet is a Mahometan?—p. 14.

L.—Yes, Sir, but every one, who believes in Christ, is not a Catholic christian. For if he were, no christian could be an heretic; and to believe in Christ would be the only article of faith requisite to salvation.

“ G.—No, my lord, we must obey his commandments too, which oblige us to live peaceably and quietly as members of that body or church, whereto we appertain, with christian love and fellowship with all others, and not to make schisms and divisions by breaking communion, where nothing sinful is required as a condition of it. And when such disorderly persons are cast out of the church, or cut themselves off by a causeless separation, though they are no longer of the church, yet they cease not to be christians, (that is a nostrum of the Church of Rome) and they must answer for their schism as for other sins, all which are damnable in their own nature without repentance: and yet allowances are made for invincible ignorance occasioned by the prejudices of education, &c. but not for obstinacy. No society of men would bear such perverse members amongst them.” —p. 14.

L.—I fear, Sir, you have here pronounced the condemnation not only of the first reformers, who were the ringleaders of the schism, or separation from their mother church, but of all men of learning persisting in that schism. For these can never plead invincible ignorance.

As to what you insinuate, that we take ourselves to be the only christians in the world, is a gross mistake. That is not a nostrum of the Church of Rome. For though we take ourselves to be the only Catholics, we are but too fully convinced, that there are heretical christians, and christian heretics. What you add, viz., that they who are cast out of the church, or cut themselves off by a causeless separation, are no longer of the church; is most certainly true: but, Sir, you ramble from the principal question in your answer to me. For the question we have now upon the anvil, is not whether love and charity, or keeping the commandments be necessary to salvation; this no man doubts of: but, what sort of faith is necessary to salvation? The question is, whether our belief in Christ alone suffices to denominate us members of the true church?

G.—My lord, a church is a society professing such or such a religion, be it true or false. Thus there is a church of the Jews, of heathens, of christians, and Mahometans. And I would ask your lordship, which is any of these churches? For instance, which is the church of the Mahometans.—pp. 14, 15.

L.—That's a puzzling question indeed. However I venture to answer, that the church of the Mahometans (since you will needs call it so) is a compound or aggregate of all the several sects that worship Mahomet.

G.—Yet there is no chief priest over all these. But every church as nation is independent of each other. And thus among the several nations and churches of the heathens.—p. 15.

L.—Sir, when you convince me that there is a multiplicity either of sects (as among Mahometans) or of gods (as among heathens) in the communion of the holy Catholic Church, then it will be time enough to provide several heads to govern a body composed of such opposite and jarring members. But as long as there is but one God worshipped, and but one faith professed, one head under Christ is as proper to govern his church, as one high priest under God was to govern the Jewish synagogue.

G.—The Jews were but one nation and a small one; therefore they had as one king, so one high priest. There was something like this in that part of the christian church, which was within the Roman empire.—

L.—Somewhat like it, do you say, Sir? Really you make me smile. But, pray, go on.

G.—But to extend the supremacy of the bishop of Rome beyond the limits of the emperor of Rome, even to all christian churches in the world, is a fancy never came into the heads of any mortals; and is not necessary to denominate many churches professing the same religion to be one church. As of the heathens and Mahometans, all which are called the heathen, or the Mahometan church or churches, without any common head over them all.—p. 15.

L.—What pity is it, that christians never thought of sending an honourable deputation to the heathen and Mahometan churches to receive from them some better model of church government, than Christ has established! This indeed is a fancy, which (God be praised) never came into the heads of any mortals. But it has been, I will not say the fancy, but the faith of all ages, that the church of Christ, though never so far extended, even beyond the limits of the empire, never was but in one communion, professing one faith, and united under one head, according to Christ's own institution.

G.—My lord, there is not one word in scripture appointing such an universal head in the christian church, or altering the common sense of mankind as to the meaning of the word church, or taking it in any other sense, than commonly understood by all the world.—p. 15.

L.—What, Sir, is there not a word in scripture appointing a supreme head of the universal church of Christ? Then I presume the 16th of St Matthew 18 and 21st, of St John 15—17, are no part of scripture. For I have clearly shewed a supreme pastor promised in the former, and established in the latter of those texts. It is true indeed those texts have not altered the texts of mankind as to the meaning of the word church, but on the contrary they have established it: and all orthodox christians, that ever were in the world, have been convinced by them, that the church of Christ cannot be but in one communion, and that Christ appointed one visible head to govern her.

G.—My lord, in our way of speaking, when we say the fathers of the church, or the primitive church, we mean not any particular church, but the whole body or church of christians, though divided into many nations or churches.—pp. 15, 16.

L.—It is true, Sir, we mean not any particular diocess, or even national church. Neither do we mean a ridiculous compound of all sorts of christians, whether orthodox, heretics, or schismatics. But we mean precisely the whole body or church of Catholics: which, though divided into many nations or churches are all in one communion; that is, profess one faith, and are united to, and governed by one head who is St Peter's successor, and bishop of Rome.

“G.—What I were they united to the bishop of Rome before there was a Church of Rome? For there were christian churches before, as I have told you.”—p. 16.

L.—No, Sir, but they were united to St Peter both before and after he was bishop of Rome. And though there were christian churches before the particular church, that is, the diocese of Rome, yet I think there was no christian church more ancient than St Peter. And as the Catholic Church was in communion with St Peter both before and after he was bishop of Rome, so has she always been in communion with his successors, who, as I told you, actually are, and have always been, bishops of Rome. Nay, St Cyprian made no difference between being in the communion of the bishop of Rome, and the communion of the Catholic Church, for in his 52d letter to Antonianus he says, a letter was writ to Pope Cornelius to let him know that you were in his communion, THAT IS, in the communion of the Catholic Church.

G.—Is not then the whole body of christians truly and properly the church of Christ?

L.—Sir, the whole body of orthodox or catholic christians is truly and properly the church of Christ. But heretical and schismatical christians are members cut off, and belong not to Christ's mystical body the church. As St Austin teaches in these express terms: Nec hæretici pertinent ad ecclesiam catholicam, nec schismatici [de fide et symbolo] that is, neither heretics nor schismatics belong to the Catholic Church. And therefore we say not in the creed, I believe the christian, but I believe the Catholic Church. For though all catholics be christians, all christians are not catholics; nor have I ever heard of catholic heretics in my whole life.

But what need of many words? Let us bring an unquestionable instance from antiquity. The Novatians and Donatists were unquestionably christians, and by consequence within the pale of what you call common christianity. Yet how were they treated by the ancient fathers? Did they ever allow them to be members of the Catholic Church, or capable of salvation? Nothing less. For they wrote whole volumes to convince them of the contrary. I shall only quote two passages from St Austin, to avoid being tedious.

They (says he) who believe the incarnation, passion, resurrection, and divinity of Christ, yet if they do not communicate with the whole, wheresoever it is spread—it is evident, they are not in the Catholic Church. L. de Unit. Eccl. C. 4.

And in the 3d chap. of the same book he expresses himself more fully thus: All those, who believe in Jesus Christ what faith teaches, but differ about his body the church; so that their communion if not with the body, but with some separate part, it is manifest they are not in the Catholic Church.—Both of us have baptism; in that we are united. We have the same gospel, in this we are also united. They celebrate with us the feast of Martyrs, in this we also agree.—But they are not with us in all things. They are not with us in their schism, they are not with us in their heresy. And by reason of those few things, in which they are not with us, the many things, in which they are with us, avail them nothing.

This was St Austin's language, and indeed the language of all the ancient fathers, when they wrote against the heretics or schismatics of their times. They were wholly strangers to your large notion of the church's unity consisting in common christianity. A body without a head, and composed of jarring heterogeneous parts appeared so monstrous to them, that they would never allow any heretic or schismatic to be a member of the church of Christ, or capable of salvation, though he believed all the fundamentals of christianity. And how then had you just now the assurance to insinuate, that we have altered the common sense of mankind as to the meaning of the word church, or take it in a sense different from the whole world?

SECTION XII.—THE SUPREMACY RESUMED, WITH A TOUCH UPON UNITY.

“G.—My lord, after there was a church at Rome, the bishops and fathers of those times knew nothing of its supremacy—

L.—Stoutly said, Sir.

“G.—Much less infallibility. Nor ever appealed to it in their disputes with heretics, which had been the shortest and surest way, and impossible to have been forgot, had it been known, and received as the current faith, or but opinion of the church.”—p. 16.

L.—Sir, though the pope's supremacy always was, his infallibility has never been an article of the church's faith; and so it is no wonder, it was not appealed to in disputes with heretics. But suppose it had been appealed to, how could this have been the shortest and surest way to end disputes, unless you likewise suppose that heretics were always ready to acknowledge it, and submit to it? Whereas they have always disowned even the church's infallibility, which if they would acknowledge, then indeed appealing to her authority would be the shortest and surest way to terminate all disputes.

“G.—My lord, other churches have contended with that of Rome, and asserted their own liberties, and independency upon her, when her encroachments began to arise, and disturb the peace and unity of the church, which I shall show you presently. But this only to let you see, that the unity of the church was then understood, not as being united under any one supreme bishop or church; but in the concord and good agreement of the several churches among themselves, and in the unity of the common faith.”—p. 16.

L.—I presume, Sir, you mean the common faith, you spoke of before, viz., the belief of common christianity. But pray remember the instance I produced just now concerning the Novatians and Donatists: and judge by that, whether there be any colour of truth in what you say.

You tell me, other churches have contended with that of Rome, and asserted their own liberties, and independency upon her. And so have also many rebels disputed the crown with their true and lawful sovereign: yet I hope that is no proof of the nullity of his title to it. But if you mean no more, than that particular churches have stood up for their just rights and liberties against real or supposed encroachments of the pope, this is no more than what subjects do when they go to law with the king; which I presume they may do lawfully, and without impeaching, or disowning his regal authority. And so many particular churches maintain their liberties and rights, provided they keep within the bounds of decency and respect; which are always due to a superior.

Thus a son may go to law with his father, if he pretends to wrong him. But he must still remember that as he is his father, he owes him a subjection by the law of God and nature. And so it is with particular churches. The pope is their common father jure divino; and all bishops are his spiritual children, and as such subject to him. But they are neither his vicars nor slaves. And therefore, if he should carry his pretensions too high, they may oppose him without any breach of filial duty, or derogating from his jure divino. And this has generally been the case in disputes between particular churches and the pope. So that, what you have alleged is far from answering your intended purpose: and you must lend me a better pair of eyes to make me see, that the unity of the church was not then understood of her being united under one supreme head. In a word, Sir, all we mean by the pope's supremacy is contained in the two following articles.

First, that Christ after his resurrection, to preserve the unity of the church, gave to St Peter a superintendency or jurisdiction over his whole flock.

2dly, That this office, according to Christ's institution, was after St Peter's decease to pass to his successors appointed by the church; and these have always been bishops of Rome, though they might have been bishops of any other diocess, if St Peter had fixed the papal seat in any other place.

St Austin joined both these together, when he said, a succession of bishops from the see of St Peter, to whom Christ after his resurrection committed his flock to the present episcopacy holds me in the Catholic Church. L. contra Epist. Fund. C. 4.

And St Jerome writing to pope Damasus: I am joined (says he) in communion with your holiness, that is, with the chair of St Peter. Upon that rock I know the church is built. Whoever eats the lamb out of this house is profane. If any one be not in the ark, he will perish in the deluge. —I know not Vitalis, I refuse Meletius, I am a stranger to Paulinus. Whoever gathers not with thee, scatters [quicumque tecum non colligit, spargit], that is, he who is not Christ's, is Antichrist. Epist. 57.

What two rank papists were St Austin, and St Jerome! One would think Bellarmin had dictated to them. In effect, Sir, if antiquity, and the sense of the most eminent pillars of the church be of any weight, these two passages alone are a full confutation of every thing you have hitherto said against the pope's supremacy, and particularly of that bold and groundless assertion, viz., that the ancient bishops and fathers knew nothing of the supremacy of the see of Rome. Truly, Sir, when a man talks at this wild rate, he seems resolved to outface the strongest evidence. But we shall have more of this hereafter.

“G.—St Paul, Eph. iv. 3—5, describes the unity of the church by having all one lord, one faith, one baptism, and one spirit, from which they are called one body. The unity of the spirit is their unity with God, and the bond of peace is the unity of the churches with each other as members of the same body. And this is a much stricter and closer union than that of the secular world.”—pp. 16, 17.

L.—Sir, St Paul's words, when quoted full at length, are their own best interpreters. They are as follows: I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called. With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love: endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one spirit, even as you are called to one hope of your calling; one lord, one faith, one baptism. Eph. iv. 1, 2, &c. These are St Paul's words; and it is manifest from them, that it was his main drift to exhort the Ephesians to mutual love and charity, which he calls the unity of spirit, and bond of peace. But does the unity of the spirit, and the bond of the peace exclude our being under one head? On the contrary, does not that render the union of the faithful still more perfect, and cement them more closely together? You cannot therefore draw any consequence from St Paul's words either against the pope's supremacy, or in favour of your large system of the church's unity of faith consisting in the bare belief of common christianity. Nay his words plainly insinuate the contrary. For first, he tells the Ephesians that the church of Christ is but one body, which shews that she is in one communion; and 2dly, he tells them, that the church of Christ has but one faith. And how will this agree to a church of your large size, which takes in all societies of christians whatsoever? For there are Lutheran christians, and Calvinian christians, and Puritan christians, and Anabaptist christians, and Church of England christians, and Popish christians too I hope. And pray, Sir, have these all one faith? It is very strange if they have, since they have been disputing and fighting about religion for near two hundred years. It is plain then that St Paul's idea of the church's unity is not of the same large size with yours: and you have been very unlucky to put me in mind of his words.

SECTION XIII.—OF NEW ARTICLES OF FAITH, AND THE SACRAMENTS.

G.—My lord, all churches agree in that summary of faith called the Apostles' creed: and the Church of Rome herself must think this sufficient for salvation, because she requires no other profession of faith in baptism, or for being admitted into the church. But the 12 new articles of faith, which the council of Trent has added to the 12 of the apostles, which are called Pope Pius's creed, and is required to be professed by converts, has made many contests and divisions in the church. And I have not yet met with any Roman catholic so hardy as to say, that the belief of all those is necessary to salvation, only that we should not deny or oppose them, such as purgatory, the invocation of saints," &c.—p. 17.

L.—Sir, you tell me first, that all churches agree in that summary of faith called the Apostles' creed. But I must beg your pardon. For none of your churches agree with us in that creed. Because agreeing with us is agreeing in the sense of every article of that creed as well as in the words it contains. Now you disagree with us in the sense of the article concerning the Catholic Church, which we with all former ages place in one communion, but you in many. Because the small extent of your church being too narrow to make it pass for universal, forces you to link it with many other heretical churches, and by this rare invention to enlarge the bounds of it.

But you seem dissatisfied with our church for judging the Apostles' creed sufficient for infants, and yet requiring more of converts. Sir, she requires no more faith of the one, than of the other. But only a more ample declaration of it. For she demands an entire faith of infants, and but an entire faith of converts, though under a longer or shorter form of words as she sees occasion. And the reason why she demands it of converts in a longer form of words than of infants, is, because there can be no doubt of the sincerity of infants: but that of new converts cannot be so securely depended upon: whom therefore she obliges to profess explicitly the same truths of faith, which infants profess implicitly by professing to believe the Catholic Church.

You tell me likewise the Trent articles, or Pope Pius's creed, has made many contests or divisions in the church. But you may say the same of the articles or creed of the great council of Nice, which defined the consubstantiality of the Son against the Arians. For as that council only explained the ancient faith of the church, so the council of Trent and Pope Pius's creed have done no more. And therefore as the long contests and divisions occasioned by the Nicene creed was wholly owing to the pride and obstinacy of the Arians, who refused to submit to the decision of that council; so your first reformers, who had the pride to set up their private judgment against the doctrine of the universal church, and continued obstinate in it, are alone accountable for the contests and divisions you speak of.

Lastly, you tell me you never met with any catholic so hardy as to say, that the belief of all Pope Pius's articles is necessary to salvation, only that we should not deny or oppose them. Then, Sir, I must tell you plainly, it never yet was your good fortune to meet a Roman catholic, that understood his religion. But I presume you judge of our church by your own, which proposes her 39 Articles without any obligation to believe them, according to bishop Brambal in his Schism Guarded, p. 190, where he writes thus: We do not look upon the Articles of the Church of England as essentials of saving faith, or legacies of Christ and his apostles: but in a mean, as pious opinions fitted for the preservation of unity. Neither do we oblige any man to believe them, but only not to contradict them. But our church is not so complaisant, as to set forth professions of faith, which nobody is bound to believe: or to be content with such a unity, as allows diversity of faiths at pleasure, and makes men turn hypocrites in professing one thing, and believing another. Therefore every Roman catholic, who understands the principles of his religion, will inform you, that though indeed the knowledge of all revealed truths be no more necessary to salvation, than the knowledge of the whole Bible, yet every revealed truth, when duly proposed, is to be believed. And it is not sufficient not to deny or oppose any such truth, but a positive inward assent is to be given to it.

G.—It seems then that the church has a charter to impose as many new creeds as she pleases.

L.—Sir, if by new creeds you mean nothing else but new explanations of the ancient faith, for her defence against new heresies, the church has certainly full power to set forth such creeds, and oblige her children to a belief of the articles they contain. This power was exercised by the two first general councils: that of Nice, and that of Constantinople, both received by the Church of England. The council of Nice added to the apostles' creed the following article: I believe in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, born of the Father before all worlds; God of God, Light of Light, true God of true God; be- gotten, not made, consubstantial to the Father. And whoever refused to assent to this additional article, was not acknowledged for a member of the Catholic Church.

The council of Constantinople made likewise an addition to the Nicene creed in this article against the Macedonians, viz., and in the Holy Ghost the Lord and giver of life; who proceeds from the Father and the Son, together is adored and glorified, who spoke by the prophets. It also added this article, begotten of the Father before all worlds, against Photinus: and this other, whose kingdom shall have no end, against the Millenarians. All which are actually a part of the Nicene creed.

After this appeared the Athanasian creed, containing many articles concerning the trinity, the persons, and the processions of them: whereof there is no express mention either in the Apostles' creed, or that of Nice. And it was received by the whole Catholic Church: and what is very remarkable, it begins and ends with this article: except every one keep that faith whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish eternally.

The church therefore has always had power to make an addition of such articles, as she judged would be a necessary antidote to hinder the poison of new heresies against the ancient faith from spreading. And you yourself, Sir, cannot deny this without renouncing the 8th Article of Religion, which is thus: The three creeds, Nice creed, Athanasius's creed, and that, which is commonly called the apostles' creed ought thoroughly to be received and believed, for they may be proved by most certain warrant of holy scripture. Here, Sir, your own church requires a belief of two new creeds over and above that of the apostles, and acknowledges a full power in the church to make such creeds according to the exigencies of times, and oblige the faithful not only to an explicit profession, but inward belief of the articles they contain.

G.—Can the church then coin new articles of faith?

L.—No, Sir; but she may add new articles to explain the ancient creed, or faith.

“G.—Pray, my lord, what article in the apostles' creed “ does transubstantiation explain? For there is nothing of “ all the sacraments in that creed.”—p. 17.

L.—Very right, Sir; there is nothing of the sacraments in that creed. But does not this confute your false notion of that creed's expressing all necessary truths of faith? For are the sacraments, as likewise the canonical books of scripture, and the precepts of a christian life, no objects of your faith, because they are not expressed in the creed? I doubt not but they are. It is therefore evident against you, that the apostles' creed neither expresses, nor was intended to express all necessary truths of faith, but only the principal ones: as for the rest, they are all contained in general under the article of the Catholic Church; in as much as believing the church implies believing her whole doctrine.

G.—My lord, the sacraments are the signs or seals of our faith, as circumcision was called, Rom. iv. 11, but not the faith itself; and therefore are not put into the summary of our faith.”—p. 17.

L.—Sir, you have made a wonderful discovery in telling me, that the sacraments are not the faith itself. But though they be not the faith itself (which is a theological virtue, and the act of it an inward assent of the mind) are they not the objects of christian faith as well as the signs or seals of it? Is there nothing revealed concerning baptism or the Lord's supper, which we are bound to believe? This would be pleasing doctrine to Quakers: but I presume no christian divine will relish it.

G.—They are generally necessary, as our catechism words it: that is, to be reverently used, when they may be had: but they are not absolutely necessary. So that if our circumstances or places where we live be such, as not to afford us the opportunity of receiving the sacraments we should be damned for want of them. I think none will say this. They are means of God's appointment; therefore to be used when we can have them. We are tied to this. But God is not tied to those means to which he ties us. He can save us without them. Even of those five, which you have more than we, you cannot say they are so much as generally necessary to salvation: because none can partake of them all. For your sacrament of orders excludes all the laity, and that of marriage the clergy.”—p. 18.

L.—I perceive, Sir, you are disposed to be upon the ramble. For supposing all you have said to be strictly true (whereas it is liable to several exceptions) what connexion has it with the matter under debate? Our dispute was, whether the sacraments be not properly the objects of faith, though they be not mentioned in the creed? But instead of keeping to the point in question, you have made an harangue to prove that the use of them is not absolutely necessary to salvation. Suppose it be not, what then? Is there therefore nothing to be believed of them? The truth of the matter is, you know not well what you are bound to believe, what not. For where there are no principles, or those very principles are a seed of division, there can be no steadiness or uniformity in faith. And this is the reason, why there are so many sects and divisions amongst you, all spawned from the reformation.

SECTION XIV.—OF SECTS AND DIVISIONS.

“G.—My lord, not so many with us as with you.”—p. 18.

L.—Stoutly said, Sir; and I promise to be of your opinion, when you can make out these three things: 1st, That scripture interpreted by private judgment is our rule of faith. 2d, That we agree with you in your latitudinarian notion of the church's unity consisting in the bare belief of common christianity; and 3d, that we call Presbyterians, Puritans, Independents, Anabaptists, Quakers, &c., or any separate communion our catholic brethren; as you call most of them your protestant brethren. Nay the very fundamental principle of the reformation, as such, obliges you to call even those your brethren, who are immediately gone out from you, and broke off from your communion. Because they have all broke off from you upon the very same principles, on which you grounded your separation from the Church of Rome. For, as you accused her of superstition, so they repay you in your own coin. And as you appealed from your mother church to scriptures interpreted by your own darling private judgment, so they attack you with the very same weapon. And therefore you are answerable for all the sects, that ever have divided, or ever will divide themselves from you.

G.—If a church be answerable for all that break off from her, then you have all the sects, you have named, to reckon for, and us too, which is one more. And if you are not answerable for those that broke off from you, neither are we answerable for those that broke off from us.”—p. 19.

L.—No, Sir! I shall convince you of your mistake. If either the Church of England, or any other sect, had broke off from us upon a principle acknowledged by us, then we should be responsible for their separation. But since we disown and detest any such principle, the guilt of their schism lies at their own doors, and cannot be charged upon the Church of Rome. But the case is not so with you. For you maintain a principle, which cannot but produce sects and divisions. You make the scriptures interpreted by private judgment the rule of your faith: and private judgment is the fruitful mother of heresies and schisms. And it is the true reason, why no heresy ever came into the world without a litter of sects in the belly of it. A rotten dunghill is not so fruitful in breeding vermin, as private judgment interpreting scriptures by its own light is in producing sects. Yet by this rule you guided yourselves in your separation from the Church of Rome.

You have therefore set the pattern to Presbyterians, Puritans, Independents, Anabaptists, Quakers, Free-thinkers, and other sects, that have swarmed from you. They do but follow your example: they are your faithful disciples, and true protestant brethren in that very principle, which divided them from you. So that you cannot blame their separation from the Church of England without condemning your own separation from the Church of Rome, and you are fully answerable both for their schism, and your own: because it is the fruit of a tree of your own planting, and the natural consequence of a principle, you constantly maintain. But we have no such principle, or seed of division in our church, which makes us perfectly one among ourselves in all articles of faith.

“G.—So is every church or sect. That is, those who agree among themselves, do agree. So that this is no more a mark of unity, than every division of men can plead, and every sect.”—p. 19.

L.—Sir, nothing is more certain, than that they, who agree among themselves, do agree. But you will have some difficulty to convince me, that there can be the same harmony and agreement in any sect, or body of men, the very foundation of whose religion is a principle, or seed of division, as there is in a church, which abhors that principle. Can there be the same agreement among those who are guided by their own private judgment, as among those who are bound to submit to the authority of a supreme tribunal, from which there is no appeal?

Your mistake then lies here, viz., in imagining, that all the members of any sect of this or that denomination agree in the same system of religion, which is morally impossible. Because whoever makes private judgment the guide of his faith, may change it with every change of the moon. Nay, what seems reason to-day, may seem otherwise to-morrow: and so he will be incoherent not only with other members of the same sect, but even with himself. Nay, upon the same principle, it is not impossible, but a sect of the same external denomination may be divided into as many religions as it has families belonging to it, because their private judgments may all differ, and they have no principle of unity to cement them: whereas the rule of faith among Roman catholics (which is the word of God, as interpreted by the church, whose decrees all are bound to submit to) unites them all in the same belief; notwithstanding their prodigious numbers, the diversity of their interests, customs, and languages; and though they be the great body of christians, from which all went forth.

“G.—No, my lord, not half, nor ever were. The Greek church is an elder church than yours: so that you rather broke off from her by setting up your universal supremacy; which she never owned; nor the many other numerous churches of Asia, nor the great and once famous churches of Africa, nor the empire of Russia of vast extent in Europe, “once a part of the Greek church. These never owned the “supremacy of Rome, and by far out-numbered all, that ever “did own it, or were of her communion as such. And considering how many nations and kingdoms have broke off from “her since the reformation, her communion is now reduced “to a small part of the christian church in comparison of “those that differ from her.”—pp. 19, 20.

L.—Sir, there are but three material and notorious falsehoods in what you have now said, as I shall endeavour to convince you. 1st, That the Church of Rome rather broke off from the Greek church, than the Greek church from the Church of Rome. 2d, That neither the Greek church, nor the other churches mentioned by you, ever acknowledged the supremacy of the bishop of Rome. And 3d, that the church in communion with the see of Rome never was one half of the great body of christians, whence all went forth. As to what you add concerning our present numbers, which is a fourth falsehood of less consequence, I shall have occasion to speak of it hereafter.

But before I undertake to shew the falsehood of the three facts, you have asserted, I fairly challenge you to mark me out any one separate society of christians upon earth, but what either went out immediately from us, or spawned from those that did, or, what is equivalent, received their religion from them; as the Muscovites did from the Greeks: who, as I shall now prove, went out immediately from us. For, if you cannot shew me any such society of christians, then it is an uncontestable truth what I have said, viz., that the church in communion with the see of Rome is the great and standing body of christians, whence all went forth. I shall begin with examining your first assertion, and put it to the test of a plain narrative of the fact, whereof I am sure you cannot disapprove the least tittle.

SECTION XV.—THE GREEK CHURCH BROKE OFF FROM THE CHURCH OF ROME.

In the year 841 Michael the 3d, being very young, succeeded his father Theophilus in the Oriental empire, under the guardianship of his mother Theodora. But Bardas the emperor's uncle had a share in the government. This man was desperately in love with his daughter-in-law, with whom he held a secret commerce. St Ignatius, then patriarch of Constantinople, checked him for it, and finding his admonitions ineffectual refused to give him the sacrament on the feast of the Epiphany.

Bardas, who was of a furious and cruel temper, incensed at this, persuades the young emperor to send away his mother and sister into a monastery, and commit the execution of it to the patriarch; who refusing to obey so unjust a command was loaded with calumnies, and banished to the isle of Terebinthus.

Photius, principal secretary of state, and captain of the guards, was put in his place. He was made a monk the first day, reader the next, and the following days subdeacon, deacon, and priest. So that in six days' time (the true patriarch being yet alive) he invaded the patriarchal throne on Christmas-day, An. 858. The bishop by whom he was ordained was excommunicated upon it by St Ignatius, who also accused him to the Pope. Whereupon the Pope required of Ignatius, that he should send some person to Rome to give him a full information of that affair, which he did accordingly, sending one Lazarus. And the point being duly examined by Pope Benedict, the next successor to Leo, Ignatius's sentence was approved by the holy see. [Du Pin. Cent. 9. p. 86.]

Nicholas I. succeeded to Benedict: to whom Photius, that his election might be confirmed at Rome, sent an embassy with a false account of St Ignatius, viz., that by reason of his age he had voluntarily quitted the patriarchal see, had retired into a monastery of a certain island, and was in great esteem both of the prince and people. Soon after he procured his condemnation in a packed council of Oriental bishops; when the injured patriarch drew up a petition by way of appeal to the Pope, begging his assistance, in imitation of his predecessors, Iabian, Julius, Innocent, Leo. The Pope undertook the defence of persecuted innocence: and Photius, because he could not prevail upon him to be an abetter of his crime, forsook his communion.

This is the fact as far as is to our purpose fairly related : and let any impartial man judge from it, whether the Pope broke off from Photius rather than Photius from the Pope. We have here a wicked courtier, supported by the authority of a prince as bad as himself, invading the patriarchal throne by the violent deposition of the legal possessor. He applies himself to the Pope to approve his intrusion ; but finding his virtue proof against flattery and threats, he disowns that very authority, to which at first he thought it necessary to have recourse ; withdraws himself from the Pope's communion, and by degrees engages a great part of the Greek church in his quarrel. If this man, and his adherents were not guilty of schism, there never was such a thing in the world. But it is an easy matter to guess, what makes you so zealous for the Greeks. Henry the 8th and bishop Cranmer only copied after the pattern set them by the wicked emperor and patriarch of Constantinople, and they cannot possibly be acquitted of the guilt of schism, unless Photius be first cleared, or at least a fact called in question, which never admitted of any dispute.

G.—But is not the Greek church older than the Church of Rome? And if it be so, does it not follow that the Church of Rome rather broke off from her?

L.—A stout argument indeed! But it will do no execution unless you make it appear, that age and jurisdiction always go together. Sir, there are several bishoprics in Great Britain more ancient than Canterbury ; yet the bishop of that see is their primate. And if they should pretend to withdraw their subjection, he would not be satisfied with their telling him, that since their churches are elder than his, he rather breaks off from them, than they from him.

I shall conclude this matter with a dilemma, which is decisive against you. The principal article, which the Greeks objected against the Latins was, their having inserted into the Nicene creed, that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son. And this is likewise professed in your 5th Article of Religion. The rest were all trifling things relating to discipline.

Now then, after the breach between the two churches, either the Church of Rome adhered to the ancient faith, or not. If not, you must renounce the 5th Article of Religion, and the Nicene creed into the bargain. If she did, then the Church of Rome remained where she was before, and by consequence the Greek church broke off from her.

SECTION XVI.—THE GREEK CHURCH FORMERLY OWNED THE POPE'S SUPREMACY.

I come now to the 2d notorious falsehood asserted by you, viz., that neither the Greek church, nor the churches of Asia, nor Africa, nor Russia, ever acknowledged the Pope's supremacy. I wonder America was not put in to make up the number. For when a man's hand is in, he ought to go thorough-stitch.

However you have managed the matter craftily enough in setting the churches of Asia, Africa, and Russia upon separate bottoms, as if none of them were a part of the Greek church: whereas by that church is properly meant the whole collection of churches under the jurisdiction of the four eastern patriarchats: the first whereof, viz., Constantinople is in Europe, and the primate, as well as other bishops of Russia, are under its jurisdiction. The 2d, namely, that of Alexandria is in Africa; and the two others of Antioch and Jerusalem are in Asia. So that your saying that neither the Greek church, nor the numerous churches of Asia, nor the famous churches of Africa, nor the great church of Russia ever owned the supremacy of Rome is the same ridiculous gasconade, as if any one should say, that neither the church of Great Britain, nor the numerous churches of England, nor the church of Scotland, nor the famous churches of Wales own the Pope's supremacy.

But this little politic stratagem was needful to set off the number of our enemies, by a shew of bringing all Asia, Africa, and Russia besides the Greek church into the field against us: though in reality a great part of the churches of Africa, when they were christian churches, were under the jurisdiction of the patriarch of the west. And thus the true English of this pompous catalogue of churches is little more than saying, that the Greek church never owned the Pope's supremacy; the manifest falsehood whereof I shall now demonstrate from several unquestionable historical facts.

First, in the famous cause of St Athanasius bishop of Alexandria, the second patriarchal see of the Greek church, concerning which Theodoret gives this account: The Eusebians wrote the calumnies they had forged against Athanasius to Julius bishop of Rome. But he, according to the canons, both commanded the Eusebians to come to Rome, and appointed Athanasius a day to have his cause tried. Theod. L. ii. Hist. C. 3. Tom. iii. p. 586.

The same is attested by the Pope's own letter related by St Athanasius. For (says the Pope) Athanasius did not come of his own accord, but as cited, and having received our letters. In Apol. Adv. Ari. Sect. 29, p. 148.

Relating to the same matter the Greek historians, Socrates and Sozomen, tell us, that both St Athanasius and other oriental bishops being accused by the Eusebians, and violently deprived of their respective sees, were restored by the authority of the bishop of Rome.

Sozomen, speaking of Marcellus, Asclepas, St Lucius bishop of Adrianople, and St Paul bishop of Constantinople, says, the bishop of Rome having taken cognizance of their cause, received them into his communion. And because, BY REASON OF THE DIGNITY OF HIS SEE, THE CARE OF ALL BELONGED TO HIM, he restored them to their respective bishoprics. Soz. L. iii. C. 8, p. 507.

And Socrates writes thus: When Athanasius, Paulus, Asclepas, Marcellus and Lucius had opened their cause to Julius, he ACCORDING TO THE PREROGATIVE OF THE ROMAN SEE, sent them back into the east with the pro- tection of his letters, and restored to each of them his see. L. ii. C. 15, p. 91.

Here we see the supreme ecclesiastical authority exercised by the bishop of Rome: acknowledged by the Arians themselves, submitted to by the two first patriarchs, and other bishops of the east, and finally attested by three Greek historians. And can you then say, the supremacy was never owned by the Greek church?

I prove it secondly from three of the four first general councils. In that of Constantinople none but oriental bishops were present: yet the fathers of that council in their synodical letter to Pope Damasus thank him for calling them to a council as his members: and Damasus in his answer styles them his most honourable children. Apud. Theod. L. v. Hist. C. 9, 10.

In the general council of Ephesus Pope Celestine's legate told the council that his master was their head, and the successor of St Peter, whose place and authority the bishop of Rome held. Against which not one in the council made the least objection. Act. 2. T. 3. Conc. p. 619. Act. 3. p. 626.

Lastly, the general council of Calcedon, in its synodical letter to Pope Leo, after having told him, that they were an assembly of 520 bishops over whom he had presided as HEAD, they complain of the insolence of Dioscorus patriarch of Alexandria in these terms: Moreover he let loose his madness even against him, who was by our Saviour entrusted with the care of the vineyard; that is, against your apostolical highness. And they conclude with desiring the Pope to honour their judgment with his decree. Conc. Calced. in Epist. ad Leonem. Tom. iv. If this be not owning the Pope's supremacy, no king was ever owned by his subjects. And it is to be observed, that these are three of the four general councils approved and received by the Church of England.

Add to all this the above-mentioned testimony of St Gregory, declaring it to be a thing which nobody doubted of, viz., that Constantinople was subject to the apostolic see. L. ix. Epist. 59, p. 976. And both St Cyprian and St Austin, two African bishops, whom I have already quoted for the supremacy both of St Peter and his successors, are authentic witnesses that the African churches acknowledged both the one and the other.

SECTION XVII.—WHETHER THE CHURCH IN COMMUNION WITH THE SEE OF ROME NEVER WAS ONE HALF OF THE GREAT BODY OF CHRISTIANS IN THE WORLD?

G.—But your lordship has not yet taken any notice of my saying, that the Church of Rome neither is, nor ever was, one half of the great body of christians in the world.

L.—Sir, that is the third falsehood I have accused you of. And I shall observe certain epochas of time in order to make good my charge, and place it in the clearest light.

1stly, then, when St Paul wrote his epistle to the Romans, which was 15 years after St Peter had fixed his episcopal seat at Rome, it is undeniable, that the great body of christians all the world over was in communion with that see. For otherwise he could not have told them, that he thanked God, for that their faith was spoken throughout the whole world. Rom. i. 8. And though there were several heresies broached in the three first centuries, the great body of christians was always closely united to the bishop of Rome as to its head. Witness St Irenaus, who wrote in the 2d century thus: For to this church, by reason of its most powerful principality, it is necessary that all churches have recourse, that is, the faithful on all sides. L. iii. C. 3. It is therefore false that there never was a time, wherein the church in communion with the see of Rome was one half of the great body of christians in the world.

2dly, The first great general council of Nice was certainly in communion with Pope Sylvester. And was that august assembly the representatives of not one half of the great body of christians in the world?

3dly, The Greek schism began only in the 9th century, and since a schism is nothing else but a breach of communion, it follows, that the whole Greek church was before that schism in communion with the Church of Rome. I desire you then to let me know, in what communion the great body of christians was before that fatal rupture, if the church in communion with the see of Rome was not one half of that body? I assure you, Sir, unless you can answer me this question, you will be in danger of passing for a very unfaithful stater of cases.

But 4thly, and lastly, to come down nearer to the epocha of the reformation, how will your words agree with Martin Luther's primo solus eram, at first I was alone? [preface to his works] or with Calvin's saying, Epist. 141, that the reformed churches broke off from the communion of the whole world, à toto orbe discessionem facere coacti sumus? Or finally, with your Homily-book, the authority whereof is so great amongst you, that the 35th article orders it to be read in churches, as containing a godly and wholesome doctrine.

Now the Homily against the peril of idolatry, 3d Part, London 1687, p. 251, has these remarkable words: Laitie and clergy, learned and unlearned, all ages, sects and degrees of men, women and children of whole christendom have been at once drowned in abominable idolatry—and that for the space of 800 years and more. If this be godly and wholesome doctrine, viz. that whole Christendom was for 800 years drowned in abominable idolatry (whereby popery, according to protestant language, is plainly marked out), then your asserting, that the church in communion with the see of Rome, never was one half of the great body of christians, which is a flat contradiction to it, is not only false, but ungodly and pernicious doctrine.

ADVERTISEMENT.—*It appears plainly from this and the two former Sections, how much there was to be said to the gentleman's last words, C.S. pp. 19, 20, yet the good peaceable lord only answered this one line to it. L.—*But those other churches do not communicate with each other, p. 20, to which the gentleman replies thus :

“ *G.—*Nor Rome with any of them. So that she stands “ by herself, as other churches do. And the most irrecon- “ cilably of any. Because by her principles she cannot “ communicate with any, who will not own her supremacy, “ which, as it never was done by the greatest part of the “ Catholic Church, so there is little appearance that it ever “ will be: for it is observable that no nation, that broke “ off from Rome, did ever return to her again. It is a hard matter for one that has escaped out of a snare, to be inveigled thither again. So that it is very visible Rome has been upon the losing hand about these 200 years past. And that not only as to those who have quite forsaken her, but as to the change of principles, and lowering her supremacy, and infallibility amongst those who still remain in her communion; which I shall shew your lordship presently; and that old and new popery are very different things, and that Rome itself has in some measure been reformed by our reformation.”—p. 20.

L.—Sir, I shall give a very brief answer to the good-natured things you have said: First, you tell me, that the Church of Rome stands by herself as other churches do. She does so: and it is much better to be alone than in bad company. Nay, the true church must stand by herself, whether she will or no: because she would not be the true church, if heretics were in her communion. Thus heaven will stand by itself for all eternity, excluding every thing that is defiled. But I hope this is no exception against it.

2d, You say, that by her principles she cannot communicate with any, who will not own her supremacy. Very true, Sir. But you add immediately, that this was never done by the greatest part of the Catholic Church; which is false. For heretics and schismatics (whom you mean by your greatest part of the Catholic Church) are no part of her, as I have fully proved, and shall prove farther hereafter 1 p. Sect. 54. However I shall now ask a few questions to lead you to a clear sight of your mistake. Pray, Sir, is not schism a breach of communion?

G.—Who doubts it?

L.—And can communion be broke where there never was any?

G.—No, my lord. For as a breach of peace supposes that there was a peace, so a breach of communion must necessarily suppose that there was a communion.

L.—Very good, Sir. And did not then the Greek church, and all other churches now reformed communicate with the see of Rome, before they forsook her communion.

G.—I cannot deny it. But what do you infer from thence?

L.—Sir, I infer first, that therefore all these churches once owned the supremacy of the see of Rome: because according to your own saying, the Church of Rome cannot communicate with any, who will not own her supremacy. And I infer 2dly, that you contradict yourself in the very same breath by adding immediately, that the greatest part of the Catholic Church (as you call it) never owned her supremacy.

You tell me next, that no nation, which broke off from Rome, did ever return to her again. Whence you conclude, that she has been upon the losing hand about these 200 years past. To which I answer, that if she has been a loser in Europe, she has been a gainer in other parts of the world. As in China, the Philippine Islands, in Goa; and the large kingdoms of Mexico, Peru, and Brazil in America. However you are pleased to give a very obliging reason, why no nation which broke off from Rome ever returned to her again; viz.: Because it is a hard matter for one, that has escaped out of a snare, to be inveigled thither again. But I can furnish you with two much better reasons for it. First, because obstinacy is the darling quality of all true heretics; and the perverse or obstinate are hard to be corrected. Eccles. i. 15. 2dly, because the reformed churches have their peculiar charms to keep men fast, which the Church of Rome does not pretend to. For liberty and ease are much prettier things than fasting, or confessing one's sins, and doing penance for them. So that it is no wonder that they, who have once tasted the sweetness of true protestant liberty, should not be fond of returning to popish restraints.

But the next thing you tell me is a piece of news I never heard of before: viz., that the Church of Rome has changed her principles, and lowered her supremacy and infallibility among those who still remain in her communion. Now indeed the poor Church of Rome is undone to all intents and purposes, if you can make good this charge against her. But you think fit to remain in my debt for the proof of it: and I believe it will prove one of those desperate debts, which are all to be paid at the Greek Calends.

Lastly, you tell me, that Rome itself has in some measure been reformed by the reformation. Truly, Sir, I am of too generous a nature to disown any obligation. And therefore since it is certain, that the opposition of heretics has always been a spur to learning, and the frequent temptations of the devil make christians more watchful; I cannot without being guilty of ingratitude disown, that the reformation has reformed the Church of Rome just as the devil reforms christians by obliging them to be upon their guard. Now, Sir, go on.

G.—I know nothing should hinder me from communicating with the Greek church, if I were there, while nothing sinful were required of me as a condition of communion, nor new creeds to be imposed on me: and so of the churches of St Thomas, the Jacobites, and others in the east of Asia, of whom we have very imperfect and uncertain accounts: and so of the Abissines, the Coptes, and other churches in Africa, and the great church of Russia in Europe. But Rome, while she pretends to universal supremacy, can communicate with none but herself. So that our communion is more extended, or extendable, than that of Rome. And this universal supremacy is that, which most of any one thing in the world hinders the union, or communion of christian churches.—pp. 20, 21.

L.—Sir, we covet not the union or communion of heretical christian churches upon any other condition than that of an entire submission to the authority which Christ has established. And so it is very true what you say, viz., that the Church of Rome cannot communicate with any but herself: as light cannot communicate with darkness, nor Christ with belial. And therefore if by taking in the whole rif-rass of heretics you render your church more extendable than ours, much good may it do you.

Now as to what you tell me, that nothing should hinder you from communicating with the Greek church, or the other churches mentioned by you, while nothing sinful were required of you as a condition of communion, nor new creeds imposed upon you : I hope, Sir, the Church of Rome may have a share in your good graces upon the same terms. But what trifling stuff is this ! For you may as well tell me, that nothing should hinder you from communicating with the Turkish Mufty, or the Jewish Rabbies, or the Indian Brachmans, if nothing sinful were required of you as a condition of communion. But I must acquaint you, Sir, that if you will communicate with the Greek or Russian church, of which you are so fond, you must first abjure your 5th Article of Religion concerning the procession of the Holy Ghost ; and 2dly, you must subscribe to every article of Pope Pius's profession of faith, the supremacy alone excepted. For in every thing else the Greeks and Muscovites agree with us.

SECTION XVIII.—MR DU PIN EXPLAINED.

ADVERTISEMENT.—After the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, his lordship is made to answer thus : But though one church be supreme, yet the best part of Roman Catholics place not the infallibility there, but in a general, or oecumenical council, where all churches meet. Now by these last words, where ALL CHURCHES meet, is meant (according to the gentleman's intention) not only the representatives of the whole Catholic church, but of all separate communions, that is, of all heretical and schismatical churches ; conformably to the large system of the church's unity established by him. And, according to this wild notion, he answers as follows :

“ G.—My lord, there never was such a council. The “ Roman empire had the vanity to call itself the oicumene, “ which we translate, all the world. Luke ii. 1. Hence the “ councils called within the empire styled themselves oecume- “ nical, but no more truly so, than the Roman empire was all “ the world. But the Latin church was not so much as the “ oicumene of that empire. For Greece, and other parts of “ the Greek church in Asia were in it ; especially after the “ seat of the empire was translated to Constantinople, when “ they contended with Rome for the supremacy ; and the “ Latin church was not then called by the name of the Church “ of Rome. As the learned Du Pin says, in his Traité de la “ Puissance Ecclesiastique, &c. p. 551 : It is true (says he)
 “ that at present the name of the Church of Rome is given to

“ the Catholic church, and that these two terms pass for synoni-“ mous. But in antiquity no more was intended by the name “ of the Church of Rome, than the church of the city of Rome.
 “ The Greek schismatics seem to be the first, who gave the name “ of the Church of Rome to all the churches of the west. Whence “ the Latins made use of this to distinguish the churches, which “ communicated with the Church of Rome, from the Greeks, “ who were separated from her communion. From this came “ the custom to give the name of the Church of Rome to the “ Catholic church. But the other churches did not for this lose
 “ the name, or their authority, &c. Then he goes on to vin“ dicate the rights of every national church independent of “ the Church of Rome and past her power to control or “ alter.”—pp. 21, 22.

L.—Sir, I have already told you (but you are somewhat forgetful) that if Popes should pretend to invade the just rights or privileges of particular churches, they may lawfully maintain them, and the learned Du Pin may be their advocate, if he pleases, without derogating from the supremacy of St Peter, or his successors. But, as to the long passage, you have quoted from him, there is not a word in it can do you any service; unless you become guilty of the old equivocation in confounding the diocess or patriarchat of Rome with the whole church in communion with that see.

It is true (says Du Pin) that at present the name of the Church of Rome is given to the Catholic church, and these terms pass for synonymous. I answer, that Du Pin certainly means the whole church in communion with the see of Rome. For the learned Du Pin is not such a blunderer as to say, that the diocess of Rome, and the Catholic church pass for synonymous terms.

He goes on: But in antiquity no more was intended by the name of the Church of Rome, than the church of the city of Rome. And the Popes in their subscriptions, or superscriptions took simply the quality of bishop of Rome.

Very right, Sir. But cannot custom enlarge the sig-nification of words? Or must Du Pin be our monitor to tell us, that the diocess of Rome was not formerly the whole Catholic Church? Or that the Catholic Church was not always called by the name of the Church of Rome? The Latin church was not always called by that name, yet I think the Latin church was always the Latin church, as the Greek church was always the Greek church, though it had not always that name; and as christians were always christians, though they were not called so till there was a church founded at Antioch. What therefore Du Pin says concerning the occasion of the different appellations to distinguish the two churches from one another, is nothing to the purpose. If he had said, that the whole church in communion with the see of Rome was not anciently the Catholic Church, this indeed would have been a sweet bit for you. But Du Pin is too good a papist to write in that extravagant manner.

As to the subscriptions or superscriptions used by Popes, I presume you would not have them fill up whole pages with pompous titles like the grand seignior; or kings of Persia. Nay, every Pope since St Gregory's time has only styled himself, the servant of the servants of God. But this never hindered them from asserting their supremacy against any one, that offered to attack it. Thus much then for Du Pin's words. Let us now consider what you have said yourself.

You tell me, there never was a general council. Sir, if you speak the usual language of christendom, you have it entirely against you. Nay, your own church allows of the four first general councils, and calls them by that name. But if you coin notions, which no man ever thought of, what you say may be true, but I am sure it is nothing to the purpose.

You add, that because the Roman empire had the vanity to call itself the oicumene, hence the councils called within that empire styled themselves oecumenical, or general. But I should be glad to know, where you learned this piece of profound erudition. For pray, Sir, were there not innumerable national and provincial councils held within the empire, which yet never styled themselves oecumenical or general? The true reason therefore why the other councils were so styled, was because the Catholic bishops of all nations were invited to them; and there was a sufficient number present at them to make them the representatives of the whole Catholic Church.

Your observation, that the Latin church was not so much as the oicumene of the empire, is just as much to the purpose, as if you should tell me that Greece is not in Italy, or that it was not subject to the patriarchat of Rome; which no man ever dreamt of. For the Popes pretend not to the supremacy either as bishops or patriarchs of Rome, but as successors of St Peter. And so the question is not, how far the patriarchal jurisdiction of Rome (which is commonly called the Latin church) is extended; but whether the bishop of Rome be not the head of the Catholic Church, precisely as he is the successor of St Peter?

As to what you add, viz., that after the empire was translated to Constantinople, the Greek church contended with Rome for the supremacy, I have already showed the falsehood of it. Sec. 9. So you may now proceed, if you please.

SECTION XIX.—MR TALON'S SPEECH IN THE PARLIAMENT OF PARIS AGAINST INNOCENT XI. MISREPRESENTED.

“ G.—The proceedings of the parliament of Paris (Appen. pp. 39, 40.) tells the Pope, that his bishopric extends only to the diocess of Rome, and his patriarchat to the provinces called suburbicariul. And that by taking upon him to excommunicate others unjustly, and where his power did not reach, he had excommunicated himself. And then he was so far from being head, that he was not so much as a member of the church. And they mind him, as likewise Du Pin, in the treatise above-mentioned, p. 263, of the stout resistance made by the bishops of France to the Pope who threatened to excommunicate all of them, that would not submit to his decision. But they resolutely answered, that they would not submit to his will; and that if he came to excommunicate them, he should go back excommunicated himself. Si excommunicaturus veniret, excom-

“municatus abiret. Now what is that head, can be excommunicated by its members? What is that supremacy can be limited, and controlled by its subjects? And of which they are the judges, and can say to it as God to the sea: hitherto shall thou come and no farther, here shall thy proud waves be stayed?”—pp. 22, 23.

ADVERTISEMENT—N. B. That the piece here quoted by the gentleman is printed in the appendix of his Case Stated. Beginning p. 39, and ending p. 52. And though it be the harangue of an advocate-general in defence of the franchises of the Gallicane church, filled with many warm expressions, but too usual in the heat of disputes, yet the gentleman is pleased to lay as much stress upon it as if it were a dogmatical piece approved by all catholic divines. But, what is still more surprising, though the gentleman had the piece before him, yet in the small part he has quoted of it, he is guilty of two falsifications: whether voluntary, or involuntary I refer to the reader.

L.—Sir, we have the proceedings of the parliament of Paris here before us: that is, Mr Talon's warm speech against the bull of Innocent XI. But you have made him say more, than he really did, or ever thought of.

For first, you say he tells the Pope, that his bishopric extends only to the diocess of Rome, and his patriarchat to the provinces called suburbicarial. Whereas Mr Talon's words are no more than an expostulatory interrogation, and can bear no such meaning, any more than a child can be said to disown the authority of his father, if thinking himself injured he should ask him in an expostulatory way, whether he meant to renounce that title?

Mr Talon's words are these: Is it that the Pope means to have no more commerce with France? Is he persuaded that his power reaches no farther than the diocess of Rome, and his patriarchship than the neighbouring provinces styled suburbicarial? Does he intend to renounce the quality of head of the church and common father of the faithful? (Appen. pp. 43, 44.) Now let any man judge whether you have quoted him fairly. Nay his last words imply no less, than an acknowledgment of the Pope's being the head of the church, and common father of the faithful: which in reality is the point in question betwixt us. For what is it to the purpose how far the bishopric or patriarchat of Rome is extended? Our question is precisely concerning the Pope's supremacy, to which he has no title but precisely as he is the successor of St Peter. And this Mr Talon acknowledges, p. 49. App., and promises that the Gallicane church will always maintain communion with the see of Rome: which you know very well is impracticable without owning the supremacy.

2dly, You quote that part of Mr Talon's speech, where he puts the Pope in mind of the stout resistance made by the bishops of France in the reign of Lewis the debonnaire against Pope Gregory IV. who threatened to excommunicate them, if they did not close with his designs, as it is expressed in the App. p. 42, though you express it, if they would not submit to his decision: I presume, this was to insinuate, that they refused to submit to some decision of faith, whereas the whole dispute was about a mere party-cause. But they resolutely answered, that if he came to excommunicate them, he should himself return excommunicated.

It is very true, that Mr Talon quotes this bold answer of the French bishops to Gregory IV. But you are not content with this, but likewise tell me, that in the proceedings of the parliament of Paris the same language is used to Innocent XI. For your words are these. And the proceedings of the parliament of Paris tell the Pope [i. e. Innocent XI.] that his bishopric, &c.—And that by taking upon him to excommunicate others unjustly, and where his power did not reach, he had excommunicated himself. Yet there is not a word of all this in Mr Talon's speech; as every one may be satisfied, that will but give himself the trouble to read your Appendix.

Nay you make the French advocate-general far outdo the French bishops. For Gregory IV. was by them only threatened, that if he came to excommunicate them he should himself return excommunicated. The harshness of which expression is very much mollified by M. Talon himself Appen. pp. 42, 43. But poor Innocent XI. (if you can make good your quotation) is by the advocate-general positively declared excommunicated for having taken upon him to excommunicate others unjustly, and where his power did not reach. And you make this smart reflection upon it; that he was then so far from being head, that he was not so much as a member of the church. But since the reflection is grounded upon a fact of your own fruitful invention (which I assure you will not make you pass for the nicest lover of truth in the world) we may piously hope, that Innocent XI. died not only a member, but the head of the Catholic Church.

But the French bishops telling Pope Gregory, that if he came to excommunicate them, he should himself return excommunicated, puts you upon these vehement interrogatories. Now what is that head can be excommunicated by its members? What is that supremacy can be limited and controlled by its subjects? Which I shall endeavour to match with some interrogatories of the same kind. viz. What head both of church and state is that man, whose head can be cut off by his subjects? And what is that sovereignty, which can be limited and controlled by laws? Now whatever answer you will give to these impertinent questions of mine, will probably serve to answer yours.

But, to return to what we were saying before concerning councils, though the supremacy was given to St Peter, and by consequence to his successors in order to perpetuate the form of church government established by Christ, yet it is no article of faith with us, that St Peter's infallibility, which he had in common with the other apostles, was likewise to be transmitted to his successors. And therefore we are only sure, that Christ has promised infallibility to his church, the representative whereof is a general council.

SECTION XX.—OF GENERAL COUNCILS.

“G.—Which as I told you, never was, and is next to impossible ever should be. And what you have said gives up your whole foundation. For the Popes, and not councils, pretend to be the successors of St Peter, and heirs of all the promises made to him.”—p. 23.

L.—Not of all with your good leave, Sir. For Christ promised St Peter, that he should be a martyr. John xxi. 18. But all Popes pretend not to be martyrs. The Popes are therefore the successors of St Peter, and as such the supreme governors of the church. But general councils are the representatives of this church, and to her Christ promised infallibility. So that you are grievously out in saying, that we give up the whole foundation in not lodging the infallibility as well as supremacy in the Pope. For this is a question disputed amongst our divines, and the negative as well as affirmative may be held without endangering the foundation of the church.

As to your repeating, that there never was a general council, I refer you to my former answer, and am sorry you can entertain the same whim so long together.

G.—My lord, you are not agreed among yourselves “concerning general councils. Bellarmin (de Conc. L. i. C. 6.) gives a list of general councils, which are to be rejected. Concilia generalia reprobata. Some for not being approved “by the Pope; some for heresy, and some (he might have said all) as not being received by the universal church. But “he meant only the Church of Rome.”—p. 23.

L.—Under favour, Sir, he meant the whole church in communion with the see of Rome; which is called the Catholic or universal Church not only by Bellarmin, but also by St Austin (contra Epist. fund. C. 4.) and indeed the whole current of orthodox fathers. And this church has received a great many general councils; the decrees whereof in doctrinal points are infallible rules of faith. But pray, go on.

G.—Ch. 7. is of general councils partly confirmed and “partly reprobated. And Chap. 8. is of general councils “neither manifestly approved, nor manifestly rejected. This “is going through all the degrees of uncertainty. And “Chap. 5. and de Rom. Pont. L. iv. C. 11. he says, that “several things in those councils allowed to be general were “foisted in by heretics, he knows not how. This was to get “rid of some objections against those councils, he could not “answer otherwise——”

L.—Sir, you should have said, against some private opinions of his own. But let us hear out the rest of your story.

G.—And (de Eccl. Milit. C. 16.) he quotes the last council of Lateran condemning the council of Basil, which he says was at first a true occumenical council, and infallible, “but afterwards turned into a schismatical conventicle, and “was of no authority at all.”—pp. 23, 24.

L.—Well, Sir, the sum of all this is, that Bellarmin rejects some councils absolutely which falsely styled themselves general. As that of Sardica consisting of seventy-six Arian bishops, who separated themselves from the true council of Sardica, yet called themselves by that name, and condemned St Athanasius. The other reprobate general councils mentioned by Bellarmin are of the same kidney; but I hope you do not imagine we place the infallibility in such councils as these. He likewise says that the authority of some councils called general is doubtful, and that some are partly approved, and partly rejected; which you say is going through all the degrees of uncertainty. But what do you pretend to infer from thence?

G.—My lord, I infer from it that no infallibility can be placed in general councils.

L.—Sir, if we had no councils but of a suspected and uncertain authority, I should easily subscribe to what you say. But have we not general councils enough unanimously received and approved by the whole body of the Catholic Church, and in which all doctrinal points of controversy are fully and clearly determined? These then are the councils, the decisions whereof we regard as infallible rules of faith: because they are the true representatives of that church, to which Christ has promised his perpetual assistance, and which in all ages is the pillar and ground of truth no less than she was in the first age of christianity. So that the spuriousness or uncertainty of some councils styled general, and the illegality of some part of others cannot be turned into an argument of any weight against the certainty and infallibility of other councils universally received and approved, any more than the authority of legal parliaments can be questioned, because there have been some very illegal ones, some partly legal, and partly illegal, and others of a doubtful authority.

But, to instance in a case exactly parallel, Sir, there were spurious gospels handed about even in the time of the apostles. And Dr Walton an eminent protestant writer assures us positively (for the fact is unquestionable) that the Book of Revelations, and some other parts of the New Testament were doubted of for some ages. In Proleg. C. iv. Sec. 6. p. 31. Thus likewise the Books of Ezra are partly canonical, and partly apocryphal in the judgment of your church as well as ours: nay you have likewise split the Prophecy of Daniel, the two last chapters whereof are wholly omitted in your Bible. Here then we have certain spurious scriptures entirely rejected, some of the canonical ones doubted of for several ages, and others partly approved and partly rejected: yet I hope no christian will make these parallel facts an objection against the certainty and infallibility of scriptures. And, if these be no objections against scriptures, as most certainly they are not, neither are those you have collected from Bellarmin, of any moment against general councils. For whatever you answer to these, is a full answer to your own objection, which by proving too much, proves nothing at all. And what else then have you done by starting this objection but furnished the enemies of christianity with arms against it? For they cannot be so stupid as not to see, that what you say to weaken the authority of councils, strikes with equal force at the authority of scriptures.

But what must we then rely securely upon both as to scriptures and councils? Sir, if St Paul has not deceived us in calling the Catholic Church the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 13, the weight and authority of her judgment is our only security, and alone sufficient to remove all reasonable doubts. So that whatever disputes are yet remaining either concerning scriptures or councils, the Catholic Church alone has full power given her by Christ to determine them : and he, that does not hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen and a publican. Matt. xviii. 17.

As to what you say concerning the council of Basil, it was at first a regular council, assembled by, and united to its head, till the 25th session ; when there arose a dispute concerning removing the council to a more convenient place for a treaty with the Greeks. The greatest part of the bishops stuck to their head. But a small number of bishops, and many of the inferior clergy remained at Basil, and continued to style themselves the general council of that place ; but were no more the true council than if a few members remaining at Westminster would be the true parliament, if the king by his authority should remove it to another place.

G.—My lord, the church of France receives the councils of Basil and Constance wholly and throughout. But the Church of Rome rejects both in part.”—p. 24.

L.—Sir, you are under a mistake in saying, that the Church of France receives the council of Basil wholly and throughout. For Charles VII. who was then king of France, as likewise the emperor, and other princes, rejected the decree of that council against Pope Eugenius, continuing still to acknowledge him for Pope. Du Pin, Cent. 15. p. 48. And the whole church has received both the council of Basil and Constance as to all their decrees relating to faith. When I say the whole church, I mean neither heretics, nor schismatics, who are cut off from the Catholic Church.

G.—My lord, since there are these disputes about councils, it follows that “they, who place the infallibility in councils, will need another infallible judge to determine these disputes concerning councils ; which are truly general, and which not : and which are partly so, and which throughout : and what part of those, that are throughout, have been corrupted by heretics ; if that can be called true throughout, which is corrupted in any part : and when one council condemns another, which shall we believe ?”—p. 24.

L.—Sir, all these points will be fully cleared by only shewing the mistake of your first proposition, viz., that they, who place the infallibility in councils, will need another infallible judge to determine these disputes concerning the councils. Which I deny. Because every supreme tribunal, from which there is no appeal, is the only judge in all cases relating to itself. Thus a legal parliament, which is the supreme tribunal of Great Britain is the only judge that can decide all parliamentary disputes. As, whether it was legally convened: what number is requisite to make it a representative of the nation: whether the rump-parliament was truly a parliament: whether the long-parliament, which was called by Charles I., and at length cut off his head, was a true parliament throughout, or only in part: and finally, when one parliament condemns another (whereof there are instances enough) which of them had reason on its side and which not? As therefore it is false to say, that they who place the supreme authority of the nation in a legal parliament, will need another supreme tribunal to determine parliamentary disputes, so it is no less false to say, that they who place the infallibility in a general council (which is the representative of the Catholic Church, to which Christ has promised infallibility) will need another infallible judge to determine disputes concerning councils. For the case is exactly parallel.

As to your pleasant reflection concerning true general councils throughout, yet corrupted in some part; I have already told you, that no general council is corrupted in any thing relating to faith: which is a sufficient answer to it.

G.—If we must not believe every council, that calls itself occumenical, we can believe no other council against it “for the same reason.”—p. 24.

L.—No, Sir! that is very strange. For according to this logic every schismatical assembly, that but dubs itself council, is of the same authority as the great council of Nice.

G.—The 2d council of Ephesus is generally condemned “in your church: yet it called itself occumenical, and was “as much as any of the others.”—p. 24.

L.—Generally, do you say, Sir? You should have said universally by all christian churches in the world, except the Eutychians. But as to your saying, that it was as much a general council as any other, really, Sir, this is exposing yourself too much. For the noble council, you are pleased to patronize, was in all antiquity so infamous for the violences and barbarities committed in it, that it never deserved any better character, than that of Latrocinium Ephesinum: that is, the band of Ephesian rioters and assassins.

“G.—But what a thing is it to say that a council is partly right, and partly wrong?”—p. 24.

L.—Or rather what a thing is it to make a wonder of it? Unless you mean, that a council legally assembled, and truly general, should in deciding matters of faith be partly right, and partly wrong; which indeed is impossible, and was never thought of, much less maintained by any catholic divine. But that an assembly, which was legal at first, should by a separation from its head, and the greatest part of its members become illegal afterwards, yet continue to style itself a general council, I think is no such strange thing as you make it. Nay it is the very case of the council of Basil: which therefore may properly be called a council, that was partly right, and partly wrong: like the long-parliament, which was right at first, but very wrong in the end.

“G.—But who is judge of the right or wrong of such councils? Is there any certainty in this, far less infallibility?”—p. 24.

L.—Sir, the church of Christ is the judge of it; as I have already told you. And St Austin calls it a point of the most insolent madness not to submit to her judgment.

“G.—But we must have an infallible method too to preserve the acts of the councils, that they be not adulterated, as Bellarmin says they have been: and they continue so to this day in the volumes of the councils. Why then are they not amended, and these suppositions and adulterated parts (these are Bellarmin's own words) struck out? But the several editions of their own councils are in the hands of other churches, and therefore they can make no alteration in them without being detected.”—pp. 24, 25.

L.—I dare swear, Sir, this is not Bellarmin's reason, why they are not amended. But I can give you a good reason for it, viz.: because, they, who put forth the councils, were not of Bellarmin's opinion. And therefore judging the acts, which he calls suppositions (though they regard no matters of faith, as I have told you) to be genuine, thought fit to make no alteration in them, but left them as they found them.

As to the method of preserving councils from corruptions; I presume the same method which suffices to preserve the Bible, will likewise suffice to preserve the councils from being corrupted.

“G.—My lord, the scheme of infallibility, which you place in councils, stands thus. The Church of Rome makes herself the universal or Catholic Church: in so much that all, who are not of her communion (which are by far the greatest part of christian churches in the world) are out of the pale of the Catholic Church. And schismatics and heretics are no part of a catholic council. Thus a small part of the Latin church (exclusive of the Greek, and all other churches) are the whole Catholic Church. And these little party councils under the direction of the Pope are universal and infallible.”—p. 25.

SECTION XXI.—A GENERAL COUNCIL IS THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH ONLY.

L.—I must own, Sir, the pleasant scheme you have drawn for me, is a good proof of your admirable skill in romancing, as the following plain account of the naked truth will testify.

Christ has established a church on earth, which in the creed is called the Catholic or universal Church, though it never was, and perhaps never will be the church of all nations in such a manner, as to have the universal world all at once in her communion. He constituted St Peter head of this church, when at the third apparition after his resurrection he gave him a commission distinct from what he had given to the apostles in common at his first apparition. And, since the form of church government established by Christ was not to end with St Peter, his successors chosen by the church hold the same station as he did, and Rome is their episcopal see. Hence it is, that the church in communion with the see of Rome, that is, with the successors of St Peter, who are called Popes, is the church established by Christ, and, by consequence, the Catholic Church professed in the creed.

This church admits no heretics or schismatics into her communion: and indeed a catholic heretic or schismatic is a chimera unheard of in antiquity. So that let them be as numerous as they please, they are out of the pale of the Catholic Church, and can have no other place in a catholic council than such as criminals have in a court of judicature. And thus it is, that the church in communion with the see of Rome (exclusive of all heretics and schismatics) is the whole Catholic Church: and such councils, as are true representatives of this church, are general, and infallible in all their decisions relating to matters of faith.

Let me tell you, Sir, this plain scheme will stand its ground against yours in spite of all the artful misrepresentations you have crowded into it, especially that, which is the foundation of your whole sham scheme, viz., that the Church of Rome makes herself the universal or Catholic Church. For you either mean the diocess of Rome, and then what you say is false. Because it is manifest the diocess of Rome never pretended to be the whole Catholic Church. Or you mean the whole church in communion with the see of Rome, and then you are guilty of misrepresentation in saying that this church makes herself the Catholic or universal Church. For she does not make herself; but Christ, who constituted St Peter and his successors the heads of his church, has made her the Catholic Church.

“ G.—My lord, I have shewn, that the Church of Rome has “ no right to the title of the Latin church itself, far less of the “ universal. And she has now but a small part of the Latin “ church left her. The reformed with Russia, and the Greek “ church will outnumber her in Europe. And she has no “ national church in her communion any where else. And, “ though there be some in her communion in most countries,
 “ there are not so many as of the Jews, who by that are more “ universal than your church, and so more catholic. And none “ of the shattered seminaries of Rome in other christian “ churches can be said to represent those churches in a general “ council more, than three or four bishops in England could “ represent the Church of England as it now stands. But “ on the contrary their living in a separate communion in “ other christian churches shows these churches not to be of “ her communion; and therefore cannot be represented in any “ of their councils: and these calling themselves oecumenical, “ as the Roman empire did, shows only, how little criticisms

 “ upon words will avail against plain matter of fact: which I “ have showed to be the case as to those texts urged for the “ supremacy of St Peter. And that if words would do it, there “ are more, nay and facts too for the universal supremacy of “ St Paul, at least over all the christian churches of the Gen- “ tiles, which are all now in the world.”—pp. 25, 26.

L.—Sir, you neither have shewed, nor ever can shew, that the texts urged for the supremacy of St Peter are mere criticisms upon words; unless you can prove that the ancient fathers, I have produced, did only trifle with words; and delivered not in their writings the public faith of the church in their times. For all, that had occasion to write upon that subject, urged those texts for the supremacy of St Peter. And I defy you to name me one father, who ever urged either one single text or fact for the supremacy of St Paul. And how then can you imagine, that any man will believe you, when you say, there are more texts and facts for St Paul, than St Peter?
 Let me tell you, Sir, once more, this is an argument you can never answer.

However I find two things true in the harangue you have made; which is a kind of miracle. 1. That papists living in a separate communion in protestant countries shews those churches not to be of their communion. Which is just as much to the purpose, as if you had told me, that English papists are not English protestants. And 2dly, that protestant churches cannot be represented in a general council by the Roman catholics, that live amongst them. As the Church of England, as it now stands, cannot be repre- sented by three or four popish bishops. Which is likewise very true, and as little to the purpose as the former. For we are in no manner of concern, whether the Church of England, or the other reformed churches be represented in our councils or not: unless it were to be in order to a reconciliation to their mother church. And I must here put you in mind that even that mimic of a general council, the synod of Dort, would not suffer the Arminians to be present at it in any other quality than as criminals to be judged.

But I presume your main drift is to conclude that our councils are not general, because all christian churches are not represented in those councils. But you are under a great mistake. Because a catholic general council is only the representative of the whole diffusive body of the Catholic Church, and not of heretical or schismatical churches, as I have already told you. And you may as well say they are not general councils, because Quakers and Anabaptists are not allowed to send their representatives to them.

Suppose a national council were called in Great Britain, would you allow Puritans, Independents, Anabaptists, Quakers, Brownists, Muggletonians, Freethinkers, and the whole rif-raff of English sects to send representatives of their respective churches to it to judge of matters of faith and discipline as well as your bishops, and the episcopal clergy? No surely. And yet it would be a national council, though all these were excluded: because it would represent the national church of Great Britain. In like manner a general council of the Catholic Church is that, to which all catholic bishops are invited. And when you convince me that the separate communions of heretics and schismatics are a part of the Catholic Church, I will then acknowledge, that they have a title to sit in her councils as judges; and that there can be no general council unless they be invited to send their deputies and representatives to it.

You say, you have shewed that the Church of Rome has no right to the title of the Latin church itself. But, Sir, I must tell you once more, there is a difference between saying and shewing. However if you mean, that the diocess of Rome is not the whole Latin church, no man will dispute it with you. But if you mean, that the bishops of Rome as they are patriarchs of the west (which title never was denied them) have not jurisdiction over the Latin church, all men of sense will give it against you.

You add, that the Church of Rome has now but a small part of the Latin church left her. So when a sovereign is stripped of the greatest part of his dominions by rebellious subjects, he has but a small part of his kingdom left him: but I hope this does not divest him of his title to the whole. However you are somewhat mistaken in your calculation: for the small part you speak of is all Italy, France, and Spain. The kingdoms of Naples and Sicily. Ten of the 17 provinces of the Netherlands. Eight of the 13 Swiss cantons. The vast kingdom of Poland. All the emperor's hereditary dominions. All the Catholic electorats, besides other parts of the empire, &c. And as to what you say, that she has no national church in her communion out of Europe, I must refer you to the maps and the Atlas Geographus for your better information.

But notwithstanding all this you have uncatholic'd the poor Church of Rome, to all intents and purposes. For, if the Jews themselves be more catholic than the Church of Rome, I am sure she can lay no claim to that honourable title. The piece is very curious, and so I shall repeat it word for word. And though (say you) there be some in her communion in most countries, there are not so many as of the Jews, who by that are more universal than your church, and so more catholic. Really, Sir, I know not how far this argument may tempt a man to circumcision, but I am sure it will never tempt me to be a member of the Church of England: since I am very certain that the Jews are more dispersed about in other countries, than those of your church. And by consequence (if your argument be worth any thing) they are more catholic than the Church of England.

But, if Jews be more catholic on that score, than either of our churches, what noble catholics must heathens and Mahometans then be, who are not only far more numerous, but possess a greater tract of land than all the christians in the world! But who would ever imagine a divine capable of arguing in such a wretched manner! In good truth, Sir, I am strongly tempted to suspect you know not what the word catholic means, though you have repeated it many times in your creed. I shall therefore explain it at large hereafter to remove all doubts and scruples concerning this piece of profound divinity. But we have digressed from our subject, which was concerning the infallibility of general councils: and since you will not allow them to be infallible, let us consider where the infallibility is to be placed.

SECTION XXII.—THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE CHURCH.

“G.—No where, my lord. Nor can it be found among men, who are all fallible.”—p. 26.

L.—What Sir! cannot God, if he pleases, preserve men from erring! Or were not the sacred penmen infallible in their writings! If not, then we are not sure that the scriptures contain the word of God, which surely is infallible.

ADVERTISEMENT.—In answer to what the Gentleman spoke last, his Lordship in the former conversation, instead of quoting the promises of Christ, only quotes Isaiah, and Malachie. But his text from Malachie (as translated in the protestant Bible) being nothing to the purpose, is here omitted, and by consequence, the Gentleman's answer to it. The words of Isaiah shall be examined after his Lordship's answer to the following texts produced by the Gentleman against the church's infallibility.

“G.—The word of God tells us, they were all gone out of the way. They were together become abominable; there was none that did good, no not one—that all the world might become guilty before God. Rom. iii. 12, 19.

“And of the church it is said. The whole head is sick, and the whole heart is faint, there is no soundness in it, but wounds and bruises, and putrefying sores. Isaiah i. 5, 6.

“And God says, mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest. It crieth out against me, therefore have I hated it. Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, &c. Jer. xii. 8, 9.

“And we have now long since seen the church of the Jews,

“to whom the promises were made, quite thrown off, and the “church of the Gentiles come into its place.”—p. 27.

L.—I know of no promises of perpetual infallibility ever made to the Jewish church, and the texts, you have produced against that of the church of Christ, are just as much to the purpose, as if you had quoted the first chapter of Genesis.

The first indeed may prove, that both Jews and Gentiles are all under sin. Rom. iii. 9 (till they be justified by Christ). But what is that to the church’s infallibility in matters of faith.

The second (if we believe the prophet himself, i. 1.) is said of Judah and Jerusalem. And how then can you understand his words of the Catholic Church?

The third describes the synagogue crying out against her Lord, crucify him, crucify him. But let us hear, how St Austin answered the Donatists urging the like texts. The scripture (says he) often reprehends the wicked that are in the church, as if all were such, and none at all remained good ——— wherefore these men either out of ignorance or malice gather such texts from the scripture, as are found to be spoke against the wicked, who will continue mixed with the good to the world’s end. Or else of the desolation of the former people, the Jews. And these they endeavour by a forced construction to urge against God’s church: that she may seem in a manner to have failed by a general defection. But, if they will answer these writings, let them never produce such texts any more. L. de Unit. Eccl. C. 13.

Thus, Sir, you see what St Austin thought of these texts, which you have only picked up at second hand after the Donatists, and are full as good to disprove the circulation of the blood, as the church’s infallibility.

But God’s promise delivered by the mouth of Isaiah, that his spirit shall never depart from his church, suffices alone to confute the strained sense, which the Donatists put upon the forementioned texts. His words are these: My spirit that is upon thee, and my words, which I have put into thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth: nor out of the mouth of thy seed ; nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed : says the Lord from hence forth and for ever. Isaiah l. 21.

G.—My lord, this promise was first made to the Jewish church, and belongs literally to her, and much more uncontestably than to the Church of Rome, to whom no promise whatsoever was made. Nor has she any other pretence to the promises made to the church in general, than her supposed supremacy over all the other christian churches, which is disputed with her, and denied by the other churches. But there was none to dispute it with the Jewish church : for she was then the only visible church of God upon earth. And if the promises made to her can fail, in vain does the Church of Rome, or even the whole Gentile church claim these promises as indefeasible and unalterable to her. For if the promises made to the whole church of God upon earth can fail at one time, they may likewise at another, and there can be no certainty.”—p. 28.

L.—Sir, your first proposition, which is the groundwork of all the rest, viz., that the promise of Isaiah was first made to the Jewish church, and belongs literally to her, is without the least foundation of truth. To make good what I say, I ask whether the church, which the Messias at his coming was to establish upon earth, was the Jewish or christian church?

G.—The latter without all dispute.

L.—I ask again, whether it be not the christian church, the future splendour whereof the prophet describes by the concourse of nations flocking to her, Isaiah lx. 1, 2, &c.

G.—There can be no doubt of it.

L.—This, Sir, suffices to decide the whole matter. For the promise in question is literally and solely made to this church; being placed between two prophecies, which are both relating to the christian church alone. It is ushered in by that, which foretells the establishment of the church by the coming of the Messias: which can be no other than the christian church. And it is immediately followed by the other, which contains a description of her future increase and splendour. And I leave any one to judge, whether it be consistent with good sense to understand both the predictions literally and solely of the christian church, and the promise, which has a manifest connection with them, of the Jewish.

Thus, Sir, the foundation you have laid, is rotten, and the superstructure, you have built upon it, must fall of course. However to support it, you have again recourse to that wretched equivocation relating to the Church of Rome, and therefore can mean nothing else but the diocess of Rome, to which you say no promise whatsoever was made. And who says the contrary? The promises were made to that church, whereof St Peter was constituted head, and his successors after him: that is, to the church of Christ, or Catholic Church in general. You add: nor has she any other pretence to the promises made to the church in general but her supposed supremacy over all other christian churches, which is disputed with her and denied by the other churches. Sir, the church in communion with the successors of St Peter is the whole Catholic Church, to which the promises were made: and the supreme government of this church is lodged in its bishop, precisely as he is the successor of St Peter, and Christ's vicar upon earth. And they who dispute that title with him, may much more legally dispute the title to the crown with their lawful sovereign, the one being of divine, the other of human institution only.

What you add, that there was none to dispute the supremacy with the Jewish church: if you mean, that the Jewish church itself was supreme, I have not penetration enough to make sense of it. For since, as you say, she was the only visible church of God upon earth, how could she be called supreme, which implies a comparison? She had indeed a high priest, who governed her as head; and in whom we may say the supremacy was lodged. But let me tell you, Sir, this was disputed by the schismatical churches, that were amongst the Jews, as those of the Samaritans and Saducees, who disowned the supreme authority of the high priest, as much as you do that of the Pope.

The argument, you conclude with, is wholly built upon the supposition, that a promise of perpetual infallibility was made to the Jewish church, which never has been, nor ever will be proved. For, if such a promise had been made, it would certainly have had its effect; unless you will say, that God's promises can fail.

G.—No that is impossible. But we may mistake his promises, and not understand them aright. And we may “not perform the conditions required.”—p. 28.

L.—But, Sir, the promises of infallibility made to the church of Christ are positive and unconditional.

G.—There is still a condition implied. That is, of obedience: which our Saviour has fully exemplified in the parable of the husbandmen, who did not render the fruits of “the vineyard.”—p. 28.

SECTION XXIII.—ALL GOD'S PROMISES ARE NOT CONDITIONAL.

L.—I desire you, Sir, to quote the gospel, chapter and verse, that we may examine the parable, you mention.

G.—The parable is related both by St Matthew, xxi. 33, &c.; and by St Luke, xx. 9, &c.

L.—Very well, Sir. And you produce this parable as a full example, that all promises made to the christian church are conditional.

G.—I do, my lord.

L.—And truly, Sir, you must have a good assurance to do it. For the christian church is not the least concerned in that parable, as the very Jewish priests and scribes, to whom it was spoken, will inform you. Luke xx. 19.

The whole drift of the parable was to forewarn the Jews of their approaching reprobation, and ruin: but particularly the priests and scribes, who came to Christ in the temple to question him concerning his authority and doctrine, saying to him, By whose authority dost thou these things? Or who is he who gave thee this authority? Matt. xxi. 23. Luke xx. 2. Whereupon our Saviour proposed the forementioned parable, which contains a prediction of two things: 1. That the Jews should soon after treat him, as the husbandmen in the parable treated the heir of the vineyard. And 2d. That they should be punished by God, as the husbandmen were punished by the lord of the vineyard. And the Jewish priests and scribes were so fully convinced, that they themselves were the persons pointed at in the parable, that (as St Luke tells us, xx. 19) from that very hour they sought to lay hands on Christ, for they perceived that he had spoken that parable against them. And is not this now a wonderful example to convince us, that all the promises made to the christian church are conditional? You may as well quote it for a prediction of the fall of the monument. For it has full as much connexion with it.

There is indeed a part added to the application of the parable made by Christ himself, which belongs to the christian church. But it implies the very reverse of what you maintain. Christ's words are these: Therefore I say unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruit thereof. Matt. xxi. 43. Which words plainly insinuate this difference between the synagogue, and the church of Christ; that whereas the kingdom of God was to be taken from the former, which did not bring forth the fruits thereof, it should not be taken from the latter, which would bring forth the fruits thereof. Whence it follows, that the church of Christ will never imitate the apostacy and fall of the Jewish synagogue. And, by consequence, the promise of infallibility made to her is absolute and unconditional. Because no condition of obedience can be implied, when obedience itself is a part of the promise; as it must certainly be to verify our Saviour's words saying, that the nation or people, to which the kingdom of God was to be given, should bring forth the fruit thereof.

"G.—My lord, as treason forfeits an estate or honours given by a prince, though in never so positive terms, and without any condition expressed, but that of allegiance to the prince is always implied; so the church may forfeit her charter."—pp. 28, 29.

L.—I answer first, that if a prince could as infallibly foresee the unchangeable allegiance of his subjects, as Christ foresaw the unalterable faith of his church, when he promised, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, the gifts and favours of such a prince might be wholly unconditional.

I answer 2dly, that God's infinite bounty is not to be measured by our short line. And therefore allowing it to be true, that a prince cannot bestow a title or honour, but that a condition is implied, must this be a law to the Almighty, and tie up his hands from bestowing an absolute, and unconditional favour?

G.—God said to Eli the high priest of the Jewish church, “ I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father should “ walk before me for ever: but now the Lord says, Be it far from “ me. For them, that honour me, I will honour; and them that “ despise me, shall be lightly esteemed. 1 Sam. ii. 30. And he “ said, Num. xiv. 34, Ye shall know my breach of promise, or,
 “ as our margin reads it, the altering of my purpose. And “ God has told us plainly, that we are thus to understand “ his promises as well as threatenings. Jer. xviii. 7, &c. At “ what instant I shall speak concerning a nation (or church) to “ pluck up, and to destroy it. If that nation, against whom I “ have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil
 “ I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak “ concerning a nation (or church) to build and plant it, if it do “ evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then will I repent
 “ of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.

“ This was the language of the prophets to the Jewish church, but she understood it not, but leant upon the promises made to her as unconditional and indefeasible, let her be as wicked as she would. And this hardened her against her prophets, whom she persecuted for this reason as enemies to the church; as we find, Jer. xviii. 18. Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah, for the law shall not perish from the priest. Here the Jewish church stuck; and here the Church of Rome sticks at this day.”—pp. 29, 30.

L.—Sir, as to the texts, you have quoted, I shall let you know my mind concerning them immediately. But your observations, particularly upon Jeremiah, are somewhat extraordinary. For first you remark, that this was the language of the prophets to the Jewish church. It is true, the prophet Jeremiah, spoke to the Jews: but their church is not once mentioned in the whole text: And what he threatened them with on the part of God was the ruin and desolation of their country, but not the fall or apostacy of their church; which subsisted no less in their captivity, than when they were in the most flourishing condition. So that your joining the word church twice with the text without having Jeremiah's leave for it, is making too bold with him.

2dly, You observe, that the Jews understood not the prophet's language, but leant upon the promises as unconditional and indefeasible. And you add, that this made them persecute Jeremiah as an enemy to the church. Now I cannot very well conceive how they could persecute Jeremiah for a language, which, as you tell me, they understood not. Though in reality the text quoted by you is so plain, that the meanest capacity may understand it; and I presume you think you understand it, for otherwise you would not have quoted it.

But I desire you to answer this dilemma. Either the Jews understood the prophet Jeremiah's language, or they understood it not. If not, they could not persecute him for it. But if they understood it, as undoubtedly they did, they could not lean upon God's promises as unconditional and indefeasible; since Jeremiah taught them so plainly the contrary. Nay the sad experience of the many calamities, that had befallen them both under their judges and kings, had sufficiently taught them, that the effect of the promises, which God had made to prosper and protect them, depended on their obedience to his commands: and that therefore they could not lean on them as unconditional and indefeasible.

G.—But why then did they persecute Jeremiah, saying, Come let us devise devices against Jeremiah, for the law shall not perish from the priest?

L.—They persecuted him, because he told them ungrateful truths, reproached them with their crimes, and threatened them with God's judgments, if they did not mend their lives. This made them conspire against him, and resolve upon his death. Because (said they) though he should perish, the law will not perish from the priest; and they hoped his successor would be less troublesome to them.

G.—However, I perceive you grant, that God's promises to the Jews were conditional.

L.—Sir, there are uncontestable instances of conditional promises in holy writ. So allowing the texts, you have quoted, I should be glad to know what advantage you can make of them in order to prove, that all God's promises are conditional. Is this a good consequence, some men are born blind, therefore all are born under that misfortune? No surely. Yet your consequence is nothing better, when from a few instances of conditional promises you conclude that all God's promises are so. What do you think of God's promise to Noah, that the world shall not perish by a second deluge? Or the great promise of the Messias? I defy you with all your skill to tack the condition of obedience to either of them, or many others, which I omit for brevity's sake.

G.—But are not all God's threats conditional?

L.—They certainly are. Because God is infinitely just. And punishments cannot be justly inflicted, unless they be first deserved.

G.—And why then are not all his promises equally conditional?

L.—Because he is infinitely bountiful, and may bestow his favours whether they be deserved, or not. That is, where, and in what manner he pleases. So that, though promises may be charged with conditions, their nature or essence requires no such thing.

“G.—The apostle of the Gentiles says to the Gentile church, “thou shalt also be cut off, if thou continuest not in the goodness of God. And that the Jews, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in. For God is able to graft them in again. Rom. ix. 22, 23. This shews, that the promises made either to the Jewish or the Gentile church are conditional, viz. if they continue in the goodness of God. Otherwise, “says St Paul, to the Gentile church, thou shalt also be cut “off. And of all the Gentile churches this was said more particularly to the Church of Rome. For this is in the epistle wrote to her, and to her it was said, thou shalt also be cut off.”—p. 30.

L.—Surely now or never the Church of Rome must be cut off, and destroyed root and branch. However I observe first, that when St Paul wrote his epistle to the Romans, that church was a mixed society of converted Jews and Gentiles brought into one fold. So that your calling them so often the Gentile church, as if the converted Gentiles at Rome were a different church from that of the converted Jews, is somewhat oddly expressed.

I observe, 2dly, (for you have taken care to advertise me of it,) that St Paul's epistle to the Romans was particularly addressed to the Church of Rome as distinguished from the other Gentile Churches (as you call them) which plainly marks out the diocess of Rome, (that dearly beloved equivocation, whereof you are so fond,) and shews, that the diffusive body of the Catholic Church, whereof the diocess of Rome is but a part, is wholly out of the reach of this cutting objection.

Suppose then that the church, or diocess of Rome should be cut off (for I know of no promises of infallibility made to one diocess more than another) or suppose the whole diocess of Rome should be swallowed up by an earthquake, would this destroy Christ's mystical body, the church? Or would she want a head, though there were no such town as Rome?

G.—But why were those words, thou shalt also be cut off, if thou continuest not in the goodness of God, particularly addressed to the Church of Rome?

L.—Because the whole epistle was writ to the Romans, and the chief motive of St Paul's writing to them was, to put a stop to the disputes, that were between the converted Jews and Gentiles, that dwelt at Rome: each party arrogating to itself an advantage over the other. So that if those disputes had happened amongst christians at Corinth, or any other town, the apostle, whose zeal was not confined to any particular place, would in all probability have writ the same epistle to them. And then your argument would have made a most wretched figure by being stript of the equivocation, which is its main support.

I answer then directly, that as no promise of infallibility was ever made to any particular diocess or nation, but to the church in general, so any particular diocess or nation may be cut off without involving the whole church in that apostacy, or being any proof, that the promises made to her are conditional.

SECTION XXIV.—THE CHURCH ALWAYS VISIBLE AND HOLY.

“G.—Of the church in general it is said, Luke xviii. 8, “When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith upon earth?” “Where will then that visibility be, which Rome boasts of “as an essential mark of the true church.”—p. 30.

L.—Just where it is at present, and where it has been in all ages, viz. in the Catholic Church professed in the creed, which will continue visible to the end of the world.

G.—What, my lord, does not Christ here positively declare, that when the Son of Man cometh, he shall not find faith upon earth?

L.—No, Sir, he says no such thing. Nor could St Austin, who was a very clear-sighted person, ever discover this meaning in the words, you have quoted. For he answered that very text of St Luke objected by the Donatists against the church’s infallibility: first by telling them, that those words, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith upon earth? were to be understood of that perfect faith, which few attain to. L. de Unit. Eccl. C. xv. And St Jerome, in his dialogue against the Luciferians, gives the very same answer to it. But St Austin adds a second in the place quoted. His words are these: Or else we understand them of that great number of wicked, and scarcity of good men, concerning which enough has already been said. And therefore our Lord expresses himself under a doubt (pray, Sir, mind what follows), for he says not, when the Son of Man cometh, he will not find faith upon earth, but, do you think he will find faith upon earth? To which he adds, that our Saviour said not this to express any doubt of his own, but because the many scandals, which will arise towards the end of the world, will occasion human weakness to speak in that manner.

Here then, it is plain, that St Austin did not understand, as you do, our Saviour's doubtful interrogation to be equivalent to this positive affirmation, viz., that at his second coming he shall not find faith upon earth, so in his epistle to the Donatist, Vincentius, he tells him those words of Christ were spoken propter abundantiam iniquitatis, to express the abundance of iniquity. And his following words are remarkable. It is a truth (says he) not to be questioned, that they, whose faith Christ will find upon earth, will grow with the tares all the field over. Epist. 93, olim 48, ad Vincentium. Besides, the church of Christ is compared to a city set upon a hill, and I presume a city on a hill is a visible thing.

G.—She is likewise compared to a woman persecuted into a wilderness, Rev. xii. 16.—p. 31.

L.—I answer first, it is more than either you or I can tell, whether the church be meant by that woman: or what is meant by her being persecuted into a wilderness. All explications upon it are but guesses: and guesses are but a weak foundation to build an argument upon.

I answer second, that the Israelites were persecuted into the wilderness by Pharaoh, yet I never read they were therefore become invisible. Nor do I think a church becomes invisible by being persecuted.

G.—She is also compared to a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, and to a besieged city. Isa. i. 8.—p. 31.

L.—Sir, if you will give yourself the trouble to read the text, you will find it is not the christian church, but the desolation of Judah and Jerusalem, which is spoken of by Isaiah.

G.—Lastly, at the coming of Christ she will be so little visible, that faith will hardly be found upon earth. This “ is not to be reconciled but of different states of the church,

“ and at different times.”—p. 31.

L.—What you now say, Sir, is but a repetition of your former mistake, which St Austin has already answered for me. But in whatever state the church is, or ever will be in the world, that is whether in persecution or peace, she can never lose her visibility, but will always have her marks to distinguish her from all heretical and schismatical communions. Nay she will not only be always visible, but always holy, as we profess in the creed. That is, free from errors. And this is also taught by St Paul saying, that Christ loved his church, and gave himself for it, that it should be holy, and without blemish. Ephes. v. 27.

G.—So God called the church of the Jews, the dear beloved of his soul. Jer. xii. 7. Yet says he had forsaken her for her wickedness, and hated her. And Isaiah represents her as most filthy and corrupted. i. 4—6.”—p. 31.

L.—Really, Sir, one would be apt to conclude from your discourse, that the church of Christ has no advantage over the synagogue. Did God ever promise the Jewish synagogue, as Christ has promised his church, that he would be with her to the end of the world? And if God never made her any such promise, but foresaw that she would apostatize, is it a wonder he forsook her for her wickedness, and hated her, who before had been his dear beloved? Or can you conclude from thence, that the same will happen to the church of Christ, to which he has promised his perpetual assistance? Pray, Sir, what means this article of the creed, I believe the holy Catholic Church? I presume it means that Christ has a church upon earth, which is catholic and holy. If, then, Christ's church should ever cease to be holy, that article of the Creed would be false.

G.—My lord, the church is called holy and beloved because of God's covenant with her to be holy and beloved. Which will be hereafter in those that are perfected: when the tares and the wheat shall be separated: but they must grow together till then, when Christ shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity.

“ Matth. xiii. 41. But he has not yet so perfected it. That “ time is not come. She is still in her cleansing state, but “ not yet thoroughly cleansed. And the Scriptures speaks “ of both these states of the Church. But when we distin“ guish not, and would apply to the most corrupt state, what “ is said of the most glorious, we must needs fall into many “ errors and mistakes.”—pp. 31, 32.

L.—That is certain. And therefore to prevent my falling into any such error or mistake, I will distinguish between the two states of the church. That is, the church militant and triumphant, and attribute to each, what properly belongs to it.

It is therefore an undoubted truth, that the words of St Paul to the Ephesians cannot be understood absolutely, and in their full extent, but of the church triumphant, according to St Austin's doctrine. And the reason is clear, because no one entire society but that of the blessed above can pretend to a holiness excluding all spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.

But must we therefore conclude, that St Paul's words, may not likewise be understood of the church militant in a more limited sense? If so, we must make the creed speak absurdly in calling her the holy Catholic Church :
 which is undoubtedly to be understood of Christ's church upon earth. First, then she is called holy, or without spot or wrinkle in her faith ; which admits of no sorts of errors against the revealed word of God. 2d. She is holy in her sacraments and morals. 3d. She is holy, and without spot or wrinkle in all her children, whilst they preserve their baptismal grace entire and undefiled. And 4th, she is holy in the same sense, as she is called the communion of saints. Which is not understood so, as if all in her communion were saints, but because many are, and all may be saints in her communion, and there can be none out of it.

G.—My lord, the difficulty, under which the Church of Rome now labours is this. She first makes herself the Catholic Church—”

L.—That is to say, Sir, Christ has made her so, as I have already shewed.

“G.—And then applying to herself in this her corrupt state, whatever is said of the church even in her perfect, glorious, and triumphant state, creates her infinite trouble, and endless distinctions to reconcile these; which is as impossible to be done, as to make the church in heaven and upon earth to be the same.”—p. 32.

L.—Sir, the creed speaks of the church upon earth, and tells us she is holy. And I hope we do not err in believing the creed. But you blamed us just now for not distinguishing, and now again you tax us with endless distinctions. So whether we blow hot or cold, I find we must be in the wrong. But I have interrupted you, so pray go on.

“G.—My lord, whilst the corruptions of the church of Rome are confessed and lamented by the most learned, and the most pious in her communion, she may as well maintain her impeccability as infallibility. For sin is the greatest error. And therefore I think nothing can be infallible, but what is likewise impeccable.”—p. 32.

L.—Sir, you tell me with a very serious countenance, that the corruptions of the Church of Rome are confessed and lamented by the most learned and most pious in her communion. But pray, Sir, name me one catholic divine, who ever owned any corruptions in the doctrine of the Church of Rome. And if you mean corruptions of particular persons in practice, what you say is nothing to the purpose. He who is free from sin let him throw the first stone: for I am sure no body will be in danger of being hurt by it.

But nothing forsooth can be infallible, but what is likewise impeccable. That is very strange. For cannot God preserve a man from errors in faith, though at the same time he permits him to fall into sin? Now Christ has promised the former, but not the latter to his church, and therefore the one may be maintained without the other.

You say that sin is the greatest error. But I presume every sin is not an error against faith: and if it be not, the church's infallibility cannot be hurt by it. I am therefore surprized at what you add, viz., that nothing can be infallible, but what is likewise impeccable. Pray, Sir, were not the apostles infallible?

G.—No more infallible than impeccable. St Peter erred, “and walked not uprightly according to the truth of the gospel, and many were carried away with his dissimulation, Gal. ii. 13, 14.”—p. 32.

L.—What, Sir! were not the apostles and evangelists infallible in their doctrine, and writings! If not, then we are not sure, that the New Testament contains nothing but the revealed word of God. And what becomes then of christianity? As to St Peter, though he was reprehensible (as St Paul says) in his practice, no christian will surely say, he erred in faith.

G.—St Paul owned, that in some cases he had no commandment of the Lord, only gave his judgment as a private person, and spoke by permission, and not of commandment. But in other cases he said, I command, yet not I, but the Lord—And, it is so after my judgment, and I think also, that I have the Spirit of the Lord. 1 Cor. vii. 6. And no doubt great deference was paid to his judgment, as being an inspired man, but not infallible in every thing, as himself said. The apostles were enabled to work many and great miracles, which gave them full credence as to what they delivered for christian doctrine. But this was no personal, nor universal infallibility.”—pp. 32, 33.

L.—Sir, I have hitherto believed, that all scripture is given by divine inspiration. 2 Tim. iii. 16. And by consequence that the sacred penmen, whether they delivered precepts, or counsels, were equally inspired: that is, to deliver precepts for precepts, and counsels for counsels. But I perceive it is your judgment, that when St Paul to the Corinthians gave his advice concerning celibacy, he wrote not by inspiration, nor was infallible in his doctrine; which in effect is the contradictory to what he tells us, that all scripture is given by divine inspiration. 2 Tim. iii. 16.

I shall therefore put this dilemma to you, viz.: When St Paul wrote to the Corinthians the words you have quoted, either he was inspired to write so, or not. If he was, your quotations from him do no ways prove, that he was not infallible in all his doctrine. If not, that part of his epistle was not inspired. And by consequence it is false that all scripture is given by the inspiration of God.

As to what you say, that the apostles were enabled to work many and great miracles. This, to the best of my judgment is some proof of the infallibility of their doctrine. For our dispute is not concerning their infallibility in things, that have no relation to the christian doctrine, as philosophy, mathematics, or other humane sciences. Neither does the church pretend to infallibility but in defining articles of faith, and christian morality. And she can shew her credentials for it, viz., the testimony of miracles, as the apostles did. For miracles are God's own seal, by which he makes himself a witness to the truth of his doctrine.

SECTION XXV.—OF MIRACLES.

G.—What! Both true and false! Can both be from God? Or can you deny the many false miracles, which have been notoriously detected in the Church of Rome?—p. 33.

L.—I assure you, Sir, that whoever will be so kind as to detect any false miracle in the Church of Rome, will be heartily thanked for his pains; and the author of the cheat be punished according to his deserts.

G.—If but one sham-miracle had been found in the apostles, I am afraid it had discredited all the others, and called their mission in question, whether it was from God, or not.—p. 33.

L.—I am of your mind, Sir: and yet there were sham-miracles told of the apostles themselves: but being not countenanced by them, they did not in the least discredit their real miracles. And if you can find one sham-miracle countenanced by the authority of the Church of Rome, you may discredit her as much as you please.

G.—The devil has power (when permitted) to shew great signs and wonders, Matt. xxiv. ; 2 Thess. ii. 3 ; and the reason is given, ii. 12, viz., as a just punishment of unrighteousness.—p. 33.

L.—But I hope the devil's power to shew signs and wonders is no proof, that God has no power to work miracles by his saints. And pray remember who they were, that attributed Christ's miracles to Beelzebub the prince of the devils. Which was so black a crime, that our Saviour calls it blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which would neither be forgiven them in this world, nor in the world to come. Matt. xii. 32.

“G.—My lord, one false, or pretended miracle is sufficient to disprove all that come from the same hand. Therefore your book of miracles the legends must either be all believed, or all rejected, all coming from the same authority: and the greatest part of them are so very gross and simple, that no man of sense among you will say, that he can believe half of them. And your learned call them piæ fraudes, holy cheats to stir up the devotion of the vulgar, who swallow all implicitly. And your lordship will have difficulty enough to believe all the miracles alledged of their relies. And, as I said, you must take all or none: unless you think, that God can work true miracles, and the devil false ones by the same means, and at the same time.”—pp. 33, 34.

L.—Before I answer this wretched stuff word for word, I shall lay down some principles, whereof you seem to be wholly ignorant. For really, Sir, you oblige me sometimes to deal with you, as if I were instructing a young scholar.

1stly, Then, the Church of Rome does not oblige us to believe any miracles but those, that are related in Scripture. The rest, though never so well attested, may be believed or rejected, and the belief of them was never made a condition of communion. So that, whether many of these be true or not, it is but mere trifling to draw any consequence from it in a dispute about matters of faith.

2dly, I grant, that a person convicted of a forged miracle, or one wrought by the power of art-magic, can never be reputed a worker of true miracles.

3dly, False miracles may be reported of a person, that works true ones, as it happened to the apostles themselves. Whence it follows, that as fabulous relations, or romances do not take off from the credit of authentic histories, so the legendary miracles related by some authors do not sink the credit of all ecclesiastical history.

Athly. The very best historian may be mistaken in some facts. Yet this is no argument or proof that he is to be believed in nothing. Sir Richard Baker has told many untruths: yet I should be a madman to think, he has writ nothing but fables.

These principles being supposed, I shall answer you word for word: First you say, that one false or pretended miracle is sufficient to disprove all, that come from the same hand. This is true in the sense of the second principle, I have laid down, viz., that a person convicted of a forged miracle, or one wrought by the power of art-magic, can never be reputed a worker of true miracles. But if you mean that an historian, who by mistake, or an over-credulity relates one false-miracle, cannot relate any true ones, it is not only false, but ridiculous. So is what follows next, viz. Therefore our books of miracles the legends must either be all believed, or all rejected, all coming from the same authority. As if it were impossible, a man should ever speak truth, because he is sometimes mistaken.

G.—But how then must we distinguish true miracles from false or suspected ones?

L.—By the very same method as we distinguish true facts from mistakes in other histories.

You go on thus. And the greatest part of them are so very gross and simple, that no man of sense among us will say, that we can believe half of them. Sir, I have only your word for it, that the greatest part of them are gross and simple, and your word is no proof. However I am obliged to you for allowing, that there are some men of sense amongst us; and, if that will please you, I freely own, there are also fools in our church as well as yours. But, in the business of salvation, I would hazard myself on the fool's side rather than the knave's. For to be mistaken in a frivolous matter is no sin; but to seduce others by crafty and malicious insinuations is a very grievous one: and this you are guilty of in the following words, viz. That our learned men call false miracles, piæ fraudes, holy cheats to stir up the devotion of the vulgar, who swallow all implicitly. For this imports no less, than that our learned men wilfully impose such cheats upon the people: which is both false and malicious.

You tell me next, that I shall have difficulty enough to believe all the miracles alleged of the relics of saints. And I tell you, Sir, that I am neither fool enough to believe all, nor impudent enough to deny all. And therefore what you add, that I must take all or none, is the same as to tell me, I must either be a fool, or have a face of brass. When I read or hear of a miracle not well attested, I suspend my judgment. But when St Austin or a man of his character tells me that he saw with his own eyes miracles wrought by the relics of such or such a saint, or relates them from unquestionable authority, I confess I want some grains of true protestant assurance to give him the lie.

What you conclude with is to me a perfect riddle, viz.: That I must take all or none. Unless I think that God can work true miracles, and the devil false ones by the same means, and at the same time. For in the name of nonsense cannot I believe some miracles, and deny others without yoking God and the devil together to work both true and false miracles by the same means, and at the same time! This is such a piece of undigested raving, that I really suspect you are talking in your sleep. But let us hear out the rest of your dream.

“G.—Can you believe the quantities, that have been shewn of the virgin's milk at several times and places? And so of the wood of the cross, that is shewed in many places.”—p. 34.

L.—Really, Sir, one would be apt to conclude from your way of expressing yourself, that whole pails of our lady's milk, and whole cart-loads of the wood of the cross are to be seen in our churches. I confess, I have seen several particles of the holy cross well attested. But as to the holy virgin's milk, till I find at least some drops of it either in Pope Pius's profession of faith, or in some of the creeds, I shall not be much concerned about the matter.

“G.—Is it the same head, or body, of the same saint, that

“ is shewn at different churches, each of which contend that they have the true one? And each have miracles to vouch the truth of their relic.”—p. 34.

L.—No, Sir, it is not the same head, nor the body of the same saint, that is shewn at different churches. But they may be the heads and bodies of two different saints bearing the same name. And if God has wrought miracles by them both, pray where is the ridicule of it? Miracles are only testimonies that they are truly the relics of some saint: but they never were pretended to be a proof, that they are the relics of this or that particular saint. And if the owners of them maintain, what they think probably true, will their mistake derogate from the truth of the miracles, which God works by them? Have you any more to say?

G.—You may see a large collection of your miracles, and the monstrosity of the legends, out of which they are taken, in a book entitled, the Devotions of the Roman Church, which will prevent my giving instances in all the points before mentioned.”—p. 34.

L.—And, Sir, to prevent my giving instances of the falsehoods and misrepresentations contained in that infamous libel, you may see it answered in the appendix of the True Church of Christ Shewed, &c. pp. 476, 477, &c.

G.—Upon the whole, this pretence of miracles, the legends, and shops of relics, which are bought and sold, instead of a proof, are the greatest prejudice to men of sense against your church. And it is the sores blow, that christianity has received: while the common people put these legends upon the level with the holy scriptures, as having both the same foundation, that is, the authority of the church. Whence atheists and deists take a handle to render both alike fabulous.”—pp. 34, 35.

L.—Sir, if atheism and deism were the fruits of popery, they would have had the space of nine hundred years before the reformation to grow, and ripen in this nation. But England was a stranger both to professed atheists and deists before the change of religion: and those unclean beasts had never entered into the land, if the fences of the church had been kept up. But when those were broke down by the blessed reformation; when the church's authority was rendered precarious, and the scriptures subjected to the caprice of every private judgment, it was then that deists and atheists began to appear bare-faced, and christianity received the sore blow, you speak of.

But with what face can you call the unanimous testimony of the ancient fathers a pretence of miracles? Have you the confidence to tax St Athanasius, St Basil, St Gregory Nazianzene, St Jerome, St Ambrose, St Austin, and other such eminent persons, either with forgery in relating, or weakness in believing the miracles attested in their writings? What do you think of St Gregory surnamed Thaumaturgus, or worker of miracles, of whom St Basil (L. de Spiritu Sancto, C. 29.) gives this account, that he made the devils tremble—rivers change their course, and by his prayers dried up a pool, which was an occasion of quarrels between two avaricious brothers? So that the very enemies of religion called him a second Moses.

What do you think of St Austin, who (L. xxii. de Civ. Dei, C. 8, and in his sermons) relates above seventy miracles wrought in his diocess, when he was bishop of it, at the relics of St Stephen in less than two years time? And assures us, that there happened more at the relics of the same saint in other parts of Africa. Of this kind he mentions Lucillus, a bishop near Hippo cured miraculously of a fistula. And of a blind woman, who recovered her sight, by putting flowers, which had touched the relics, to her eyes. Of those done in his own diocess he relates three persons raised to life.

The same saint, and St Ambrose inform us of many other miracles wrought at the relics of the holy martyrs Gervasius and Protasius at Milan, An. 386. As of a blind man called Severus, who approaching to the relics was before all the people presently restored to sight: saint Ambrose also being present. Amb. Epist. 54, in Edit. Bened. Epist. 22.

Miracles done at the tomb, and by the intercession of St Felix, priest of Nola are attested by St Paulinus, Carm. xvi. 21, 22, and by St Austin, Epist. 137, and L.

de cura pro mortuis, C. 16. As others at the relics of St Andrew, St Luke, and St Timothy are also attested by St Jerome, Libro contra Vigilantium, and by St Gregory of Nazianzene, Orat. 3, que est prima contra Julianum.

It is true, these and the like miracles are only objects of human faith. But are they therefore false? The authority of St Ambrose, St Austin, St Jerome, &c., is not equal to that of the four evangelists: but are they therefore impostors? Or did those saints encourage deism and atheism, by relating and believing the aforesaid miracles?

As to what you say concerning our shops of relics, which you tell me are bought and sold, if calumny be a deadly sin, you are guilty of one. For our church detests such infamous practices, and simony is a crime severely punished by her.

But what you add is a calumny yet of a blacker die, viz., that the common people put the legends upon the level with the holy scriptures, as having both the same foundation, that is, the authority of the church. Pray, Sir, how should the common people come to take up such a sacrilegious notion! Does our church teach them any such thing? Can you find this abominable doctrine either in our catechisms, sermons, or spiritual books, which are in the hands of every body, and are the only means, by which our doctrine is conveyed to persons of all degrees? Or can you produce one single divine of our church, that ever taught it? If this then be a task you dare not undertake, if you be conscious to yourself, that you cannot produce any solid proof of what you charge us with, then, Sir, give me leave to tell you, you are in a damnable state, till you retract the calumny, you have uttered against us. And believe me, Sir, there is nothing can give men of sense a greater prejudice against your church, than when they find, that even her ablest divines are forced to support themselves by barefaced calumnies to stand their ground against us.

To conclude this whole matter, I tell you once more that the authority of our church is not at all concerned in the legends, or lives of saints. For they have no other authority, than that of the persons, who attest or relate them: nor any other foundation, than what other histories have. But we believe the scriptures to be the pure revealed word of God: and our belief of it is truly grounded upon the authority of the church.

SECTION XXVI.—THE CIRCLE EXAMINED.

“G.—This is the old circle, out of which you can never “conjure yourselves.”—p. 35.

L.—Or rather, Sir, this is the old thread-bare argument, which has been answered a thousand times, and is still repeated with the same triumphant air, as if no answer had ever been given to it.

“G.—You believe the scriptures, because the church bids “you——”

L.—And so did St Austin, when he said, he would not believe the gospels themselves, unless the authority of the church induced him to it. Con. Epist. Fund. C. 4.

“G.—And you believe the church, because the scriptures “bid you.”—p. 35.

L.—Well! and when the scriptures bid St Austin believe the church, do you think he refused to do it?

“G.—This is running round, and proving a thing by “itself.”—p. 35.

L.—It seems then poor St Austin was neither logician nor divine; but danced round in a vicious circle. However I am resolved to keep the good old bishop company, being wholly of his opinion, that the authority of the church is a solid foundation to ground our belief of the canon and inspiration of scriptures upon; and likewise fully convinced, that in all matters of faith we must take the church for our guide, since our own reason is too deceitful a thing to trust to.

“G.—And how do you know that? What have you but “your own reason to tell you so? And if you cannot trust “your reason, you cannot believe the church. So that all “bottoms upon your own reason still, from which you strive “in vain to escape.”—p. 35.

L.—To answer this pretty piece of sophistry, suppose, Sir, you had a lawsuit to commence, what would your reason prompt you to do?

G.—My reason would prompt me to choose some able lawyer, and depend upon him.

L.—But why would you not rather manage your cause yourself?

G.—Because my own reason is too weak to trust to in the management of a lawsuit, and an able lawyer alone is duly qualified for it.

L.—And how do you know that? What have you but your own reason to tell you so? And if you cannot trust your reason, you cannot trust your lawyer.

Is not this fine stuff? Is it not arguing like a profound divine? I answer therefore, that as your own reason may be trusted, when it directs you to an able lawyer, and as the same reason tells you, that when you have chosen one, you must be governed by him, so I can safely trust my own reason, when it directs me to the church to be my guide to salvation. Because nothing is more consonant to reason, than to depend upon a guide appointed by God himself.

Thus far therefore reason is to be followed. But when we have once found the true church of Christ, which the strongest motives of credibility mark out to our reason assisted by God's grace, then we have nothing else to do but to submit to her, and be governed by her in every thing she teaches. So that if this be your meaning, when you conclude, that all bottoms upon reason, I subscribe to it without hesitation. Nor shall I ever strive to escape from my reason, when it demands so just and reasonable a thing of me, as an entire submission and obedience to the judgment and authority of the church. Nay the scriptures themselves command me to hear the church. He who will not hear the church, let him be reputed as a heathen and a publican. Matt. xviii. 17.

“G.—This is running into the circle again to believe the “church for the scriptures, and the scriptures for the church.”

—pp. 35, 36.

L.—What, Sir! would you neither have me believe the church upon the testimony of scriptures nor the scriptures upon the testimony of the church? I should not wonder, if a deist preached this doctrine to me. However I must observe to you, that if the word believe be strictly taken, that is, for an act of divine faith grounded upon its proper motive, I neither believe the scriptures, because the church bids me, nor the church because the scriptures bid me. And so my faith is in no danger of running round in a circle.

G.—Upon what motives then do you believe the revelation of scriptures, or the infallibility of the church?

L.—Precisely, because God has revealed those truths. And this is the whole and sole essential motive, into which all faith strictly taken is resolved.

G.—But how do you know that God has revealed those truths?

L.—Because the church of Christ, which is a society of the greatest wisdom and authority upon earth, tells me so. And, if St Austin may be credited, it is nothing less than the most insolent madness, not to believe her.

G.—But what inducement have you to convince you that the church, whereof you are a member, is the church of Christ rather than any other separate society?

L.—I am convinced of it by the same outward visible marks, or motives of credibility, which held St Austin within the pales of the church, whereof he was a member, and which she would have had, although the scriptures had never been written. As, the continual succession of her bishops, and pastors from the apostles. Her having had innumerable martyrs and miracles in her communion. The agreement of people and nations, &c., reckoned up by St Austin, cont. Epist. fund. C. 4.

G.—But do you not prove the canon and revelation of scriptures from the authority of the church? And then again the infallible authority of the church from scriptures?

L.—We do so.

G.—And is not this running round in a circle?

L.—It is so, but not in a vicious one, as logicians call it. On the contrary, these circular proofs are allowed of by all logicians and divines. Nay they are absolutely necessary, both when causes and effects prove one another reciprocally, and when two persons of unquestionable veracity give testimony for each other. I shall only give an instance of the latter.

St John the Baptist is proved to have been a prophet from the testimony of Christ; and Christ is proved to be the Messiah from the testimony of St John. No christian can reject these proofs as illegal. And why then may not the scriptures be proved from the testimony of the church, and the church reciprocally from the testimony of scriptures? Both proofs indeed are circular: and therefore as the former must be unquestionably admitted, the latter cannot be reasonably excepted against.

G.—Such, my lord, as knew Christ before they knew St John, might upon Christ's word believe St John. And such as first knew St John to be a prophet before they knew Christ, might upon St John's word believe Christ.

L.—I thank you, Sir, for this good hint. It is the best thing you have said this long time: but it opens the old circle for me, and puts me out of all danger of being hemmed in. First then I know the church of Christ by her outward visible marks, or motives of credibility, which are so strong and convincing, that according to St Austin, I must be a madman not to believe her. This church tells me, for example, that the whole New Testament is divinely inspired. I therefore believe upon her testimony, that the New Testament contains nothing but revealed truths. Now amongst other truths contained in it I find Christ's positive promise, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his church. Matt. xvi. 18. Another promise, that he will be with her even unto the end of the world. Matt. xxviii. 19. I likewise find in St Paul, that the church is the pillar and ground of truth. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Upon these and such like testimonies of holy scriptures I believe it to be a revealed truth, that the church is infallible. And thus the church first gives testimony for scriptures, and then the scriptures give testimony for the church. And shew me now a difference, if you can, between this circle, and that of proving St John to be a prophet from the testimony of Christ, and proving reciprocally Christ to be the Messias from the testimony of St John.

G.—But what then is a vicious circle.

L.—A vicious circle is, when two propositions are made use of to infer one another without having any other proof to support them. But if they be proved from other strong and convincing reasons, this opens the circle, and hinders it from being what we call a vicious one. Now this is the very case in reference to the church's infallibility, and the authority of scriptures. The church of Christ as such is first proved from all the general motives of credibility, which clearly mark this church out to us, as the most illustrious, and therefore the most credible society upon earth in matters of religion. Her authority thus established is a legal and sufficient evidence even for those truths, which reason cannot fathom. If then amongst other points she propounds to her children these two articles, viz., the divine authority of scriptures, and her own infallibility in matters of religion, these two like Christ and St John bear witness to each other. Yet having each a sufficient evidence from the motives of credibility, by which the church proves her charter for the delivery of revealed truths, the door is open, and there is no danger of running round in a vicious circle.

But, Sir, there is another thing, which delivers me from this danger. For a circle cannot be called vicious with reference to an adversary, who by his own principles is bound to admit of either of the propositions, which prove each other reciprocally. And therefore when I dispute against a member of the Church of England, who by his own principles is bound to believe the divine authority of scriptures, I may legally maintain the church's infallibility against him from those sacred writings. Neither am I any ways bound to prove that they are the word of God, because it is a principle agreed upon betwixt us, and no man is bound to prove a principle of his adversary's own concession. Nay, though I myself believed not a word of the New Testament, I might legally take the advantage of it against a protestant, who believes it. For this is what we properly call argumentum ad hominem: a certain cut-throat way of confuting a man from his own principles. And therefore, Sir, you cannot accuse us of running round in a vicious circle by proving the church's infallibility against protestants from scripture.

G.—But suppose I should deny the New Testament to be the word of God, would not your lordship then be left in the lurch?

L.—No, Sir, but you would have the credit of denying your own principles, and I the trouble of providing other arms to fight against you as against a Jew, or Deist. That is to say, I should be obliged first to prove the church's authority in matters of religion from such arguments or motives, as the ancient fathers made use of for the conversion of Jews; and then to prove the inspiration of scriptures from that authority.

SECTION XXVIII.—THE BEING OF A GOD MAY BE BELIEVED UPON THE AUTHORITY OF SCRIPTURES, OR THE CHURCH.

“G.—I perceive, my lord, you are fond of your circle, but I will bring you out of it.”—p. 36.

L.—Well then, Sir, let us have a touch of your skill.

“G.—Pray tell me, why do you believe a God? It would be blasphemy to say you believe it upon any authority. For that would be to place such an authority above God. And it would be nonsense to say you believe it either from the church or the scriptures, because you can believe neither without first believing that there is a God. What is it then? We believe a God purely upon our own reason. And we cannot be more sure that there is a God, than we are persuaded of the truth of those reasons, upon which we do believe it. And if God has given us no other guide but

“our own reason with the assistance of his holy grace to believe in himself; if this be all we have or can have for the first and main article of our creed, what further do we require for those of less consequence? And that we cannot have more than this we may perceive by this experiment, viz., whether we believe most firmly, and with greater assurance, what we have only from our own reason, or what we receive from the authority of the church? For example, are you not more undoubtedly assured of the being of a God, which you believe purely upon your own reason, than of transubstantiation, purgatory, or whatever you believe upon the authority of the church?”—p. 36.

L.—Sir, if you have no other way but this to conjure me out of the circle, I may go round in it till doomsday. Here is your argument in other words, which shews its weakness. Reason can perceive the manifest things of God, as his being, therefore it can perceive the hidden things too, as the mysteries of revealed religion. Is this a solid way of arguing, or becoming a divine? Reason can discover the perfections of a deity which shine out in the creation, therefore it can likewise discover its divine emanations, which no way appear; but are as secret as they are wonderful? Or does it follow, that it can find out the Son, whom no man ever knew but the Father; or the Father, whom no man ever knew but the Son, or they to whom the Son was pleased to reveal him? Matt. xi. 27. Finally, does it follow that our reason can discover the incarnation of the Son of God, which St Paul calls the wisdom of God hidden in a mystery? 1 Cor. ii. 7. Suppose I believe a God purely upon my own reason, is it a consequence, that the same natural light of reason without consulting authority can discover to me the divine revelation, which directed the sacred penmen in their writings, or enable me to judge what books are canonical, what not? It is evident that these discoveries are absolutely impossible to natural reason not directed by authority. And so my believing a God purely upon my own reason does not render authority less necessary for those other revealed truths, nor can it do you any manner of service against the circle.

But are you in good earnest when you tell me, that it is blasphemy to believe a God upon the authority either of the church or scriptures? If so, then it follows first, that all young persons are bound to be atheists, till they can understand the natural demonstration of a God. For if they believe a God upon any authority, they become guilty of blasphemy. So that nurses, parents, and masters must be very careful not to tell children that there is a God, for fear they should believe it upon their authority, and so become accessory to their blasphemy. And yet it is the first thing children are taught: because it is the groundwork on which all religion is built. But whether they believe it upon evidence, or the authority of their teachers (as children and ignorant people, who understand not philosophical demonstrations usually do) the effect is the same. And when they once believe it, let the motive of their belief be what it will, I think they may afterwards very safely believe it as a revealed truth upon the authority of the church and scriptures.

But if there be any force in that argument of yours, by which you will needs prove it to be blasphemy to believe a God upon any authority, viz., because that would place such an authority above God, if I say there be any force in this argument, it will follow 2dly, that it is likewise blasphemy to believe a God purely upon our own reason, because that would place our reason above God, if your argument be worth a rush.

Since therefore according to this argument it is equally blasphemous to believe a God either upon reason or authority, and since all men are bound not to be guilty of blasphemy, it will follow 3dly, either that men must believe the being of a God without having any reason or motive for it, or they must all live and die atheists for fear of being blasphemers, both which are most eminently absurd. Thus, Sir, instead of conjuring me out of an innocent and harmless circle, you have used your best skill to conjure me out of all religion.

Now let us examine the rest. You tell me, we cannot be more sure that there is a God, than we are persuaded of the truth of those reasons, upon which we believe it. If you mean, that reason must concur to faith, and that we cannot believe, unless we be first convinced of the reasons, upon which we believe, what you say is true, but it makes nothing against us, who are persuaded as much as you, that our assent to all mysteries of faith is not to be a rash but a rational assent grounded upon the strongest motives.

You go on thus: And if God has given us no other guide but our own reason with the assistance of his grace to believe in himself; if this be all we have or can have for the first or main article of our creed; what farther do we require for those of less consequence? But, Sir, it is not all we have for the first and main article of the creed. For we have over and above the creed itself proposed by the church as divinely revealed: and divine revelation is something more than human reason; which though it may suffice to discover to us the manifest things of God, is unable to discover the hidden mysteries, that are above its reach.

As to what you say concerning articles of less consequence, I hope the belief of the Trinity and incarnation are necessary to salvation as well as that of the being of a God. And can you pretend to demonstrate either of these mysteries by the force of human reason? If not, then something farther is required for our belief of them.

Lastly, as to what you add by way of experiment, viz. whether we believe most firmly, what we have only from our reason, or what we receive upon the authority of the church? Sir, I should guess by this, that you have found by experience, that you do not believe the mysteries of the Trinity and incarnation as firmly as the being of a God, since you have this from reason, and the others from authority. But if this be your experiment, I thank God it is not ours. For we have a greater certainty of what we believe upon the motive of divine revelation declared to us by the church, than what we believe barely upon our reason. And therefore if we had no motive to believe the being of a God but barely our own reason, we should believe transubstantiation, and purgatory with a much greater assurance than the being of a God. But since we believe this also upon divine revelation, we have an equal certainty of all three, though no evidence but of the latter.

ADVERTISEMENT.—His lordship having told the gentleman in his Case Stated, that God is obliged to give every man an outward infallible guide (which certainly is a great absurdity) the gentleman discourses in the following manner.

SECTION XXVIII.—OF JEWS, PAGANS, AND MAHOMETANS.

“G.—My lord, to say that God is obliged to give every man an outward infallible guide is making too bold with providence, and measuring his infinite wisdom and goodness by our short line: God has made creatures as it has pleased him: some incapable of happiness or misery, as the inanimates, some capable only of pleasure or pain; as the animals. And he has endowed others with reason as man; and left him in the hands of his own counsels; set good and evil, life and death before him. Deut. xi. 26. &c., and a free will to choose, which he liketh. Again, of rational creatures some, he has fixed in happiness, as the blessed in heaven. Others are vessels of wrath as the angels that fell. But man is betwixt these two to work out his salvation by his obedience to the will of God, who will render to every man according to his deeds. For as many as have sinned without the law shall be judged without the law; and they that have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law. For there is no respect of persons with God. Rom. ii. 11, 12. But according to you there is great respect of persons with God, and his goodness has failed the greatest part of mankind since the beginning of the world. Pray, my lord, what outward guide is there to Jews, heathens, and Mahometans? And to the many subdivisions among all these? They have all guides of their own, and the blind lead the blind with most of them. It is fact that the generality of mankind do not choose for themselves, but take their religion upon trust as they are educated. And we must leave all this to God, who will require from none more than he has given. For God is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works. Psalm cxlix. 9.”—pp. 36—38.

L.—Sir, you have said very fine things, but very little to the purpose, as will appear, when I have rectified the mistakes you run upon. First, you charge me with saying, that God is obliged to give every man an outward infallible guide. I believe indeed I said so in our former conversation, when I was under tutelage, and spoke as my master bid me. But as I am now at liberty to speak my own thoughts, I utterly disown that doctrine. For in reality the question between us and protestants is not, whether God be obliged to give us such an infallible guide, but whether he has been so good and merciful as to do it? and this is precisely the point I maintain. However,

This first mistake has misled you into a second still more injurious to me. For it represents me as guilty of downright blasphemy in asserting it to be my doctrine, 1st, that there is a respect of persons with God contrary to the express words of St Paul; and 2dly, that his goodness has failed the greatest part of mankind. But you must be very ignorant of St Paul's true meaning; as well as mine to charge me with such impious doctrine. For the respect of persons, which St Paul speaks of as being far from God, is a rewarding or punishing by favour rather than by justice, and without having that due regard to deeds, which is necessary for the just distributing of punishments or rewards. It supposes works on the one hand, and a consideration due to them on the other: the omission whereof is a defect of justice, which God is wholly incapable of. But there is no injustice in bestowing mercies more liberally on some than others: because all acts of mercy are gratuitous, and no man can challenge them as his due. Now the giving us an infallible guide is a pure mercy of God; which therefore he may give to one, and not to another: as every body is free to bestow his favours upon whom he pleases without any danger of respect of persons in the sense of St Paul.

Neither does it follow hence, that God's goodness has failed the greatest part of mankind. For a person can only properly be said to fail one, when he either does not make good his word, or is wanting to the performance of any thing, that is strictly due upon some just title. But it is nothing less than blasphemy to accuse God of either, in relation to any one single creature in the world.

This answers your question concerning Jews, heathens, and Mahometans. For suppose God has not given them any outward infallible guide, what then? Will it follow, that he has not given one to christians? Or will you infer from it, that there is a respect of persons with God? If he were bound to give one to all mankind, you would have reason on your side. But since I know of no obligation on the part of God to give one to any, his having given one to christians is a pure mercy, and being a pure mercy is due to none, and he may give or refuse it to whom he pleases according to these words: I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion. Rom. ix. 15.

You say, God is good to all, and his mercies are over all his works. Psalm cxlv. 9. Very right, Sir, but God is infinitely just as well as merciful, and it is a gross presumption to prescribe bounds to his justice under pretence of magnifying his mercy; so that it is not allowed us to measure the one any more than the other by our short line, but we are bound to believe what the scripture has revealed to us of both; which is, that he will shew his infinite mercy on those, who are in his church perseverantly by a living faith, and his infinite justice on all, who for their sins are justly permitted to be out of it, whether they be Jews, heathens, Mahometans, heretics or schismatics.

As to what you say, that the generality of mankind take their religion upon trust, as they are educated: I should be glad to know, Sir, whether education be a proof of the truth: or whether this plea will be admitted at the great tribunal? If so, then no man needs to examine the grounds of his religion. It is true, the prejudices of education are a powerful bias upon any man's judgment. But if when a person is come to riper years, and has the means of informing himself better, he be so careless, slothful, and indifferent as not to give himself the trouble to consider whether those prejudices be well grounded, nor inquires into the marks of the true church, which are clear, and easy to be discovered, when the heart is sincere; the prejudices he has imbibed from education will not excuse him before God. Pray, Sir, was any body saved from the deluge, that was not in the ark of Noah?

G.—No, my lord.

L.—And it was the constant language of the ancient fathers, that it is as impossible to escape damnation out of the church of Christ as it was to escape perishing out of the ark. For surely no man can be saved but through Christ.

“G.—No. But many may be saved by him, who never “heard of him.”—p. 38.

L.—Can faith then be had without hearing? Or salvation without faith in Christ? This is joyful news for Jews, Pagans, and Mahometans. However, to the best of my judgment, it is the general doctrine of protestants as well as Catholics, that none of these are in the way of salvation.

Does not Christ compare himself to a vine, and in the application of the similitude tell us, that if we abide not in him, we shall be cast forth as branches withered, and cast into the fire? John xv. 6. And can those who have not the faith of Christ, be said to abide in him? And if they abide not in him, will they not be doomed to everlasting flames? Has he not likewise told us that if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch? Did not St Peter filled with the Holy Ghost declare to the rulers of the Jews, and elders of Israel, that Jesus Christ is the stone which is become the head of the corner; neither is there salvation in any other. For there is no other name under heaven, whereby we must be saved. Acts iv. 8. And does not St Paul teach, that without faith it is impossible to please God? Heb. ii. 6.

“G.—My lord, Christ died to make satisfaction to the “infinite justice for the sins of the whole world: and took “our nature upon him to atone for our fallen nature, to be “applied to such as perform the conditions required.”—p. 38.

L.—Very right, Sir, Christ died and has satisfied for all. But (as you observe very justly) his general satisfaction can only profit those, to whom it is applied by their performance of the conditions required. Now I have always been told, that there are two conditions essentially necessary, viz. baptism and faith in Christ.

“G.—My lord, God will judge the Gentiles by the law of morality, which is planted in their hearts, and we call natural religion. But from christians he requires faith in Christ joined with sincere repentance.”—p. 38.

L.—Sir, as God is justice itself, so it is certain the Gentiles will neither be judged, nor condemned but by a law that is infinitely just. And I fear the law morality will not prove very favourable to such as are destitute both of the light of faith, and the fountains of grace the holy sa Sacraments. However according to you, heathens are in a safer and better condition than christians, since you make them capable of salvation not only without faith, but without practising those duties, which our faith obliges us to.

“G.—But is it no advantage then to have the glory of God revealed to us in the face of Jesus Christ? as the apostle speaks, 2 Cor. iii. 6. And the effects of it upon us described, iii. 18, that we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of God, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord. The sight of the wonderful economy of our redemption must needs fill our souls with rapture and joy, when we behold the glory of God in all his attributes each exalting the other to the uttermost, as it is said, James ii. 13, The mercy of God exalts his justice. For justice requires full satisfaction, it cannot remit a farthing. To remit is mercy and not justice. And God is justice in the abstract, justice itself. Here then infinite wisdom finds out a full satisfaction to infinite justice: and infinite goodness affords that satisfaction by the incarnation, perfect obedience, meritorious passion, and glorious resurrection of the only begotten Son of God. This inflames our devotion, invigorates our obedience, and gives compunction to our repentance when we have sinned, and come short of the glory of God. Rom. iii. 23. God has vouchsafed to make a covenant with us in Christ, by virtue of which we may “ appeal to his justice and veracity. It is a pardon signed “ and sealed by the king, which we may plead in court. The “ heathens have not this, but they are still under mercy.

 “ They may say, God is merciful to forgive us. But we may “ say with St John, that God is faithful and just to forgive us
 “ our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. 1 John
 “ i. 9. This is a great a very great advantage over the Gen- “ tiles. But may not we enjoy the advantage we have over “ the heathens with thankfulness, and not damn them all to “ the pit of hell? Because God has made a covenant with “ us, may we not leave them to uncovenanted mercy? Is our “ eye evil because he has been good to us? Or would we “ limit his mercies to his creatures, with whom we have “ nothing to do? For what have we to do with them, that are “ without? them that are without God judgeth.”—1 Cor. v.
 12. pp. 38—40.

L.—I find, Sir, you are the advocate-general not only of heretics and schismatics, whom you have already brought off by their belief of common christianity, but likewise of Jews, heathens, and Mahometans, (for they are all upon the same footing) whose cause you have now pleaded with wonderful eloquence. I shall take your discourse in pieces, and say something to every part of it.

You begin with enlarging upon the advantages we christians have over the heathens. Sir, we should be very ungrateful to almighty God, if we were not sensible of it. All therefore I pretended to advance when I spoke last was, that if heathens can be saved without faith, their condition is safer and in a very weighty and material point than that of christians, who cannot hope for that happiness without both humbling their understandings under the obscurity of the mysteries of faith, and subjecting their wills to the severity of its precepts: and so it is manifest you make heathens have the better of us in allowing them a possibility of salvation, without being subject to any of those difficult and painful duties, by which we are bound to purchase our eternal happiness.

This therefore I only inferred as an absurdity from your doctrine. For the truth of the matter is, we have the advantage over them in every respect, since nothing is more groundless, or more contrary to the word of God than the uncovenanted mercy you have so bountifully provided for them. You tell me the heathens may say, God is merciful to forgive us : and so may any impenitent sinner say it with as much truth as they ; because a heathen continuing a heathen is as incapable of mercy, as a sinner continuing a sinner, according to this sentence of our Saviour against christians not hearing the church ; let him be to thee as a HEATHEN ; that is, as a reprobate, or one in a damnable state. For it plainly follows hence, that to be a heathen, and to be in a damnable state is one and the same thing with our Saviour, who expresses the one by the other.

You conclude your harangue with several questions, the first whereof is, whether we may not enjoy the advantage we have over the heathens without damning them all to the pit of hell? No, Sir, we cannot have a due thankfulness for the great benefit of our faith, if we deny its necessity, and believe as you do, that we might have been saved, though we had been heathens left in darkness as they are. For this is annihilating the benefit, and consequently the gratitude due for it under a specious pretence of mercy to heathens. But it is a false mercy, which can do them no good, and may hurt the rash abettors of it.

But, to turn your fine rhetorical question upon yourself, cannot you enjoy the advantages you have over impenitent sinners, and the devils without damning them all to the pit of hell for ever? For let me tell you, Sir, your uncovenanted mercy is of so very large a size, that it may be extended to these as well as the heathens. And all your other questions may be retorted upon you in the same manner.

But your last question expressed in the words of St Paul, viz. (what have we to do with them that are without? them that are without God judgeth) shews you to be an utter stranger to the apostle's true meaning. For his words bear no other sense than that the church has no right to exercise her power of correcting upon the heathens, as being none of her subjects: and therefore must leave them to God's justice, as belonging to his tribunal, not hers. But he could never intend to entitle them to your uncovenanted mercy without contradicting our Saviour saying, He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. John iii. 18, nor without giving the lie to himself: since he tells us in express terms, that without faith it is impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6. I hope therefore it is no crime to form a judgment of the unhappy state either of Jews, heathens, or Mahometans by the lights the word of God itself has given us to judge by, and that we may without having an evil eye, or limiting God's mercies to his creatures, pronounce those condemned, on whom Christ himself and his apostle have pronounced sentence of condemnation. Now, Sir, you may proceed, if you have any thing more to say upon this subject.

SECTION XXIX.—NONE SAVED WITHOUT FAITH IN CHRIST.

G.—God did judge one, who was without, that is, out of the pale of the church, to be the most beloved of God, and that there was none like him in the earth. Job. i. 8. And he is put upon the level with the greatest in the church, as Noah and Daniel. Ezek. xiv. 14. And proposed as an example of patience by St James, v. 11. And of another Gentile it was said by Christ, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. Luke vii. 9. And he, who said often to his disciples, O ye of little faith: and upbraided the apostles with their unbelief, Mark xvi. 14; yet said to a woman of Canaan (who could not be discouraged with the objections he put against her not being within the pale of the church, but without among the dogs) O woman great is thy faith. Matt. xv. 28. And of the ten healed there was but one thankful, and he was a Samaritan. Luke xviii. 16, that is a schismatic, a stranger, as Christ here calls him, 18, and said to him, thy faith hath made thee whole.—p. 40.

L.—Sir, you certainly take me for an errant blockhead to produce these four examples, viz. of Job, the centurion, the woman of Canaan, and the leprous Samaritan for proofs that persons may be saved without faith in Christ. Did not Job believe in Christ, that is, the Messias to come? And how then can you say, he was out of the pale of the true church?

G.—But was not Job a Gentile?

L.—Sir, if by the word Gentile you mean an idolater, an infidel, or unbeliever, Job was no Gentile any more than Adam, or Noah. And were these out of the pale of the true church? Or had God no church upon earth before the Jewish synagogue, and ceremonial law were established?

But nothing surprises me more than your mentioning the centurion, the woman of Canaan, and the leprous Samaritan. To the first of which Christ said, I have not found so great faith, no not in Israel. To the second, O woman great is thy faith: And to the third, thy faith hath made thee whole. Yet by a strange oversight, these are the three other rare examples you have produced to prove, that men may be saved without faith in Christ, I ask then, whether the centurion, the woman of Canaan, and the Samaritan believed in Christ, or not? If you say they did not, then Christ spoke an untruth in commending their faith, which is blasphemy. If you say they did, then they were saved by their faith in Christ: and these three examples are as wide from the purpose as that of Job.

“G.—The pattern of charity is placed in the person of a Samaritan in opposition both to a priest and Levite. Luke x. 30. Which makes good what St Peter said of Cornelius a Gentile. Acts x. 30. Now I truly see that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.—pp. 40, 41.

L.—That is, God makes no difference between Jews and Gentiles, who seek him with a sincere heart. But did not God even work a miracle to bring this Cornelius to the faith of Christ? And is not this a rare proof that it is not necessary to salvation! But let us hear out the rest of your story.

“G.—This is the doctrine, which Christ taught, Luke iv. 25. When he minded the Jews that a widow of Sarepta a city in Sidon, and Naaman the Syrian were preferred to all the widows and lepers in Israel. Which so enraged the “Jews tenacious of the privilege of their church, that they thrust him out of their city, and led him unto the brow of their hill, whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong. And it is said that they were filled with wrath.”—p. 41.

L.—Here are three examples more, full as good as the four former, and the scriptures equally trifled with. For is not this a strange sort of argument? A Samaritan had more compassion than a priest or a Levite, and took care of a wounded man: a prophet went to the widow of Sarapta, and Naaman the Syrian was cured of a leprosy: therefore heathens may be saved without faith in Christ. Really, Sir, I am weary of hearing the scriptures thus abused, and shall shortly want some grains of Job's patience to hear you out. However, proceed.

“G.—The like fury they shewed, when St Paul told them, that the gospel was to be extended beyond the pale of their church, and that God had sent him to the Gentiles. And they gave him audience unto that word, and then lift up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth. And they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air. Acts xxii. 22. And the like rage is seen among the zealots of your church, when they hear of the gospel being extended out of the pale of their communion, though with christians, who hold the three ancient creeds, and have every thing essential to a church, except what Rome has made so, viz., the universal and unlimited sovereignty of her bishop.”—p. 41.

L.—Sir, your comparison between the Jews and us will not recommend either your judgment or charity; the Jews bore a mortal hatred to the Gentiles: and therefore had not the patience to hear any one say, they could be rendered capable of salvation by having the gospel preached to them, or any other way than by becoming Jews. This was the true occasion of their excessive rage against St Paul, who told them he was sent by God to preach the gospel to them. But was there ever any Roman Catholic in the world guilty of such black malice, as to be enraged to see the gospel extended to infidels? Do we not daily pray for it? Nay have we not seminaries expressly founded for the education of persons, whose whole business it is to sacrifice themselves for that holy end? And where then is the sense or justice of your comparison?

Ay, but the Jewish rage is seen among the zealots of our church, when they hear of the gospel being extended out of the pale of their communion, though with christians, who hold the three creeds, and have every thing essential to a church. Really, Sir, I pity your mistake. For I take it to be a fundamental truth, that the church of Christ, and by consequence the creeds and gospel rightly understood, can only be in one communion, which we heartily wish may be extended to all nations in the world. And we are so far from being enraged against those that have cut themselves off from that communion by apostacy or heresy, that we heartily compassionate their condition, and pray and labour continually for their conversion. But we can never be persuaded that any heretical communion has all the essentials of the true church of Christ, whereof unity of faith (without which there is no salvation according to St Paul) is one. As to the unlimited sovereignty (as you call it) of the bishop of Rome it is neither an article of our faith, nor any term of communion. So you need not be afraid of it. The spiritual supremacy of St Peter's successor is indeed an article of faith; but it is one of Christ's own making, as has been fully proved.

“G.—This is the great bone of contention, wherein Rome stands single, thrusting all christian churches from her, like a man in a boat, who thinks he thrusts the shore from him, whereas he only thrusts himself from the shore: as Firmilian said to Stephen bishop of Rome, excidisti teipsum, noli te fallere. Do not deceive yourself, you have cut yourself off from the church. For he is truly a schismatic who has made himself an apostate from the communion of the ecclesiastical unity. For while you think you can excommunicate all other churches from you, you have only communicated yourself from them. Dum enim putas omnes abs te abstinere posse, te ipsum abstinuisti.”—Cyp. Epist. 75. pp. 41, 42.

L.—Sir, the Pope's supremacy is the great bone of contention with heretics and schismatics, just as the rightful prerogative of the crown is the great bone of contention with rebellious subjects. And the Church of Rome has the same reason to thrust heretics from her, as a lawful sovereign to attain rebels.

As to Firmilian, and St Cyprian, they were certainly engaged in a wrong cause, as you yourself must own. And if you had produced their words to prove that they denied the Pope's infallibility, you would have spoken to the purpose. But infallibility and supremacy are two things. For though it be very probable that they denied the former, they never questioned the latter; but only blamed Pope Stephen for making an ill use (at least as they thought) of his authority against them. And therefore told the Pope, that if he should excommunicate the eastern bishops unjustly, he would only hurt himself by it: which is the true meaning of their words. But you will have some difficulty to shew, that the Church of Rome excommunicates heretics unjustly.

SECTION XXX.—THE SUBJECT OF SUPREMACY AND INFALLIBILITY RESUMED.

G.—My lord, the church of the Jews had a much stronger plea for her universal supremacy and infallibility, because all proselytes of whatever nations must come to her. For there was no other visible church of God upon earth, and the sacrifices were limited to the temple at Jerusalem. Accordingly we find, Acts viii. 27, that the eunuch came out of Ethiopia to Jerusalem for to worship.—p. 42.

L.—Sir the Jewish church had perhaps as strong a plea for the supremacy of her high priest over all the Jews, as the church of Christ has for the supremacy of St Peter's successor over all christians. And where is the inconveniency of it? We shall consider her infallibility hereafter, which is a very different thing.

But what you add, viz., that all proselytes, of whatever nations, were bound to come to the Jewish church, is the same as if you told me, that all who turned Jews, were bound to come to the Jewish church: which is very true indeed, but nothing to the purpose. Because none of those, who were true believers among the Gentiles, were bound to turn Jews; that is, embrace the law of circumcision; neither were these obliged to come to Jerusalem to offer their sacrifices, but were at liberty to offer them to the true God, wherever they pleased. It is true, many of the Gentiles themselves, especially the true believers among them, had a great veneration for the temple of Jerusalem, where God was truly worshipped: and, if the eunuch you speak of, was a Gentile, this was doubtless the occasion of his coming thither to worship. I ask you then, whether this eunuch was a Jew or Gentile? If a Jew, your argument is frivolous. For there is no doubt but Jews could sacrifice no where but at Jerusalem. If he was a Gentile, then all Gentiles were not infidels. For he, who came to adore the true God, could not surely be an infidel.

But, Sir, I am still in expectation of the inferences you will draw from what you said last.

G.—My lord, the last thing I said was, that the sacrifices were limited to the temple at Jerusalem. “Now if the christian sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ (the most solemn worship of God) were confined to St Peter’s church at Rome, and could be had nowhere else; as the most solemn worship of God (the legal sacrifices, which were the types of the christian) were confined to the temple at Jerusalem: and if the Church of Rome like that of the Jews, were the only church in the world, yet after all would the Church of Rome have no more pretence to infallibility, and perpetuity, than that of the Jews had.”—p. 42.

L.—Sir, with your good leave, the Church of Rome, that is, the church in communion with the see of Rome is the only true church of Christ upon earth: and the christian sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ (which we call the mass; and you, to my most agreeable surprise, call the most solemn worship of God) is so confined to the church in communion with the see of Rome, that it cannot be legally offered in any other communion.

But all this is foreign to the purpose. For that which gives this church her title to a perpetual infallibility, and which the Jewish church never had, are precisely the promises of Christ. If you can prove that these are of no weight, then you will say something to the purpose.

G.—My lord, as the church of the Jews has been cut off for her disobedience to the law of God, so (as before mentioned) has it been said to the Church of Rome particularly, thou shalt also be cut off, that is, upon the same condition, if thou continuest not in the goodness of God. Rom. xi. 22.—p. 43.

L.—Sir, this wretched objection has already been answered (sect. 23.), so pray go on.

G.—And we cannot imagine there should be a Church of Rome visible as now with a Pope at the head of it, and a number of bishops, cardinals, &c. under him holding the true christian faith, when that time comes, which our Saviour foretold, when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith upon earth? For then it would be found, and very visibly at Rome.—p. 43.

L.—Sir, I hope it will be visibly found at Rome as well as in many other places. And since the Pope, and his bishops have in all former persecutions been the strongest bulwark of the church of Christ, so I have no reason to doubt, but they will be so in the days of anti-christ, though their residence should be in caves and deserts.

But suppose Christ at his second coming should not find faith at Rome, what is the consequence? Is the city of Rome essential to the preservation, or visibility of the church of Christ? If Rome were buried under ground by an earthquake, would Christ lose his church? Or would the church be disabled from choosing a successor to St Peter? However you do well to give me this plain hint that by the Church of Rome you mean precisely the city or diocess of Rome. And this is already your fifth or sixth relapse into the same wretched equivocation. As to your text from St Luke, it was fully answered before (sect. 24.), and so you may once more go on, if you please.

SECTION XXXI.—NO GENERAL DEFECTION FORETOLD BY CHRIST.

“ G.—My lord, that state of the church (viz. at the second coming of Christ) is better represented by the seven thousand, who had not bowed to Baal, but of whom Elijah knew none, was a state of segregation. There were particular persons, who kept the faith, but invisible to the world, or to one another: without any public worship, or so much as private meetings. For Elijah would surely have known of these, and been the principal amongst them. Far less could they have had an organized church with pastors and rulers over them without being known to Elijah, and to many more, even to their persecutors, who found out the most private recesses of the primitive christians, and their meetings, though in the most secret manner for divine worship; and their bishops too, whom they hauled to prisons, and to martyrdom: for they could not lie hid. And the faith was then visible, though under persecution. Therefore it must be a much more universal depravity and corruption of the church, of which our Saviour spoke, when faith should not be found, at least visibly, upon earth.”—pp. 43, 44.

L.—Sir, our Saviour never said nor meant any such thing, if we may believe St Austin, and St Jerome above mentioned [sect. 24.]. The Donatists indeed, whose company you have no reason to be proud of, maintained your doctrine, and quoted the same passage of St Luke, which you now repeat the third time, as if not answered. But the whole Catholic Church opposed them, and St Austin and St Jerome were her principal champions. Both of them refuted the corrupt interpretation of the Donatists, and both explained our Saviour’s words in a sense opposite to yours. So that your saying, that the state of the church at the second coming of Christ is represented by the seven thousand, who had not bowed to Baal, is begging the question. For you confidently suppose that your interpretation of our Saviour’s words, though contradictory to the sense of the ancient fathers, stands good: which will never be granted. And so your flourish upon Elijah’s not knowing the small number of true believers, and his imagining himself to be alone, might have been spared. In effect, all you can prove from it is, that as the church of God was in the days of Elijah almost utterly ruined in Israel, so it may at other times fail in any other particular nation: which no man ever doubted of, since there are but too many deplorable examples of it. But this is no argument to prove, that the true faith will ever be so hid, and suppressed throughout the whole world, that they, who have a desire to embrace it will not know where to find it. Neither was this the condition of the church in the days of Elijah. For though it was oppressed to a very great degree, and almost utterly extirpated in Israel; it flourished at that very time as much as ever in the kingdom of Juda under the pious Josaphat, who was contemporary with Elijah. But this you did not think fit to mention because you knew it would spoil your fine flourish to all intents and purposes. If you have any thing more to say, pray let us have it.

“G.—The state of the church before the second coming of Christ will be like to that before the flood represented by the ark. Wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved. And as the corruption of the old world was great, we may suppose the corruption to be greater before the second coming of Christ, as the destruction by fire is more terrible than that by water. However such a general corruption is here foretold, as will in no ways consist with the least sort of that visibility, which the Church of Rome requires as a mark of the true church, and to continue with her for ever.”—p. 44.

L.—Sir, you are still begging the question, and building upon your former modest supposition, that your interpretation of St Luke is preferable to that of the ancient fathers: which I make bold to deny, and shall always do, till you either convince me that the Donatists, who have taught you your lesson, were no heretics; or that the interpretation of heretics is to be preferred before that of the orthodox fathers of the church.

It is true indeed the world will be very corrupt before the second coming of Christ; and it is of this great abundance of wicked and scarcity of good men our Saviour's words of St Luke may be understood according to St Austin. But the wheat and tares, that is, the good and wicked are to grow together in the same field [the church] and this field will be very visible even until the harvest: when both the good and wicked will be consumed by fire: which spoils in some measure your witty reflection upon the difference between the two elements of fire and water.

But pray, Sir, does not Christ tell us that the last terrible persecution of antichrist will be shortened for the sake of the elect? Now I presume the elect will not dissemble their faith, but profess it openly, and if they profess it openly, will not the church be visible in their persons? Will not Enoch and Elijah appear visibly upon earth to maintain the true faith against the wicked antichrist? Finally, does not the word of God expressly tell us, that the Jews will be converted, and brought into the fold of Christ's church before the end of the world? And how then can it be true, that faith will not be found upon earth at his second coming? For surely the Jews will not be converted by invisible pastors, but by men openly professing and preaching the faith of Christ. All which are sufficient proofs to convince any man, that the church of Christ will be visible to the end of the world, and that faith will be found upon earth at our Saviour's second coming.

“G.—But, my lord, allowing now that there will be a “visible church in those days, then that church, at least the “generality, which is the visibility, will fall from the faith, “else it will be visibly to be found upon earth. And then “men will be misled by the church, and those marks of visi- “bility, which the Church of Rome gives her; in like manner “as they were misled by the church before, when she com“manded them to reject the Messias. He came unto his own,
 “the church of the Jews, the only visible church then upon “earth, but she received him not. John i. 11. For she was “corrupt and blinded under the mark of pharisaical sanctity, “and strict obedience of the law, even the tithing of mint, “anise, and cummin: she was zealous in the outward obser“vances, but neglected the weightier matters of the law, “judgment, mercy, and faith. Matt. xxiii. 23. And so it may “be at the second coming of Christ, as it was at the first: for

“there is no more promise of infallibility to the one state of the church than to the other.”—pp. 44, 45.

L.—What, Sir! May it be so at the second coming of Christ in spite of his positive promise made to the christian church, that he will be with her to the end of the world! Matt. xxviii. 20. This alone, Sir, is an unanswerable proof that the visible church at that time will not fall from the faith, but that faith will then be visibly found upon earth: and that by consequence men will not then be misled by the church’s visibility.

However I must here beg the favour of you to explain to me the dark riddle you have just now proposed, viz., that allowing a visible church in those days, yet that church will then fall from the faith. Sir, if you mean that church, which will be modelled by antichrist, who in all probability will be the last reformer in the world, there is no doubt but his church will be both visible, and wholly void of faith. But I think you and I have been hitherto disputing concerning the true church of Christ: and the question between us is precisely this, viz., whether this true church of Christ will be visible in those days? Now allowing (as you do) this church to be visible in those days, I should be glad to know how it can at the same time be the true church of Christ, and a church fallen from the faith, nay and misleading people by its visibility? This I confess appears to me to be a contradiction not easy to be reconciled.

But the words you conclude with, are very surprising; viz., that there is no more promise of infallibility to the one state of the church than to the other. That is, to the church of Christ, than to the Jewish synagogue. For surely, Sir, you can never flatter yourself, that any man in his senses will believe this, unless you first convince him that God made a promise to the synagogue, that the gates of hell should never prevail against it, Matt. xvi. 18; and that he would be with it all days even unto the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. Nay, on the contrary, the fall of the Jewish church is clearly foretold in the Old Testament.

"G.—And in the New Testament, that Christ at his second coming should not find faith upon earth."—p. 45.

L.—Sir, the Donatists with their protestant brethren may find this in the New Testament, but the ancient fathers could find no such thing; whereas they all clearly saw the prophesies foretelling the apostacy of the Jews.

SECTION XXXII.—THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE SYNAGOGUE, AND THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

"G.—My lord, the Jews did not understand the prophesies against themselves. They said, that the church was the only interpreter of scriptures, and she must take the law from the mouth of her priests. And the church did interpret these scriptures otherwise than Christ did."—p. 45.

ADVERTISEMENT.—To these last words of the gentleman his lordship in the former conversation is so weak as to answer, that Christ being come he was then the church, and the gentleman refutes him in a very serious manner. Which trifling stuff is here omitted.

L.—Sir, as to what you tell me, viz. that the Jews did not understand the prophesies against themselves, I must make bold to put you in mind of what you said in your Christianity Demonstrated where after having mentioned the prophesies concerning the rejection, sufferings, and death of the Messiah you make no difficulty to say, p. 99, that before the coming of Christ the Jews understood those texts as we do to be certainly meant of the Messiah and no other. But since that time they have forced themselves to put the most strained and contradictory meanings upon them.

There then you attributed the infidelity of the Jews to the perverseness of their disposition, and to the most affected and culpable ignorance that can be: such as came from their forcing themselves to put the most strained and contradictory meanings upon the texts rightly understood by their own forefathers. But here you impute it not to their malice as before, but to the great deference they had for their church. And pray, Sir, what gave you this new light, but the good inclination you have to catch at any colourable pretence to run down the church's authority, and condemn our submission to her judgment as a source of seduction? Whereas Christ has established her authority in the plainest and strongest terms. First, by a positive promise, that he will be with her to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20; 2dly, by this unalterable maxim, viz., he that hears you hears me, and he that despises you despises me, Luke x. 16; and 3dly, by declaring that he who will not hear the church shall be reputed as a heathen and a publican, Matt. xviii. 17.

G.—But were not the Jewish people also obliged to receive the law from the mouth of the priest? And did not Christ himself command them to do as they were bid by the Scribes and Pharisees, because they sat in the chair of Moses? Yet their blind obedience to them was the occasion of their ruin. And this is the case of the Church of Rome.

L.—Sir, it is certain the Jews were bound to obey the authority of their church in every thing, wherein there was not uncontestable evidence against it. But no authority upon earth can oblige any man to a thing, that is evidently unlawful. Now this was the case in relation to Christ and the Jewish church. There appeared in his sacred person all the marks of the true Messiah foretold by the ancient prophets even as understood by their own forefathers. Particularly those relating to the time, place, and manner of his birth; the holiness of his life; the purity of his heavenly doctrine; the death he was to suffer through the malice of his own people, and above all the stupendious miracles wrought by him: the evidence whereof was so strong, that it could not be contested but by the blackest malice. Here then there was an uncontestable evidence of the truth of his doctrine, and by consequence of the unlawfulness of obeying that authority, which condemned it. And till you can produce an evidence as uncontestable as this against the Church of Rome, a parallel between her and the Jewish church (which is the thing you drive at) is all froth and nonsense. But whenever you produce an evidence against her equal to this, I promise to become your proselyte.

As for instance, when you can shew me a reformer of the faith professed by the Church of Rome, that has been plainly foretold by the ancient prophets or apostles under the character of a person sent by God: that has given sight to the blind, speech to the dumb, hearing to the deaf, health to the sick, and life to the dead in testimony of the truth of his doctrine, and by consequence of the falsehood of the doctrine taught by the Church of Rome, I assure you, Sir, I will renounce that church to embrace the reformation. Because no authority upon earth can oblige me to believe any thing, that has such uncontestable evidence against it. But since the very reverse of all this is manifestly true, I tell you once more that your comparing the danger of our submission to the Church of Rome with that of the Jewish people to the synagogue is as nonsensical, as it is malicious.

In a word, the difference between the synagogue and the church established by Christ, that is, the church in communion with the successor of St Peter, is manifest to any one, that will but open his eyes to see it. For whereas Christ has promised that the spirit of truth shall abide for ever with his church, John xiv. 16. And that he will be with it even unto the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. No such promise was ever made to the Jewish church; on the contrary her apostasy at the coming of the Messiah, was manifestly foretold.

G.—My lord, it is perfectly begging the question of “the Jews to suppose that Christ was the Messiah. For “that they deny, and bid us prove it. That is the whole “question between them and us.”—pp. 45, 46.

L.—Under favour, Sir, proving is not begging the question, and we prove it with the utmost evidence from their own prophets as explained by their own interpreters, and all verified in the person of Jesus Christ.

“G.—My lord, the Jews answer all this by the authority of “the church; which said, Have any of the rulers or Pharisees “believed in him? But this people, who knoweth not the law “is cursed, John vii. 34. And they said that Christ worked “his miracles by Beelzebub, Matt. xii. 24. And who was to “be the judge in this case, the people or the church? Upon “the foot of the authority of the church it was impossible at “that time for any man to be a christian. And therefore “of all men christians have the least reason to insist upon

 “this.”—p. 46.

L.—What, Sir, have christians of all men in the world the least reason to insist upon the authority of the church established by Christ himself! This would sound well in the mouth of an independant; but if this be the doctrine of your church, I pray God to preserve me from ever being a member of it. I am sure St Paul preached no such doctrine. On the contrary in his epistle to the Hebrews he takes care to instruct them in the important lesson of submission to their spiritual guides. Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves, Heb. xiii. 17. And surely when Christ said, He that will not hear the church, let him be to thee as a heathen and a publican, he did not intend her authority should either stand for a cypher, or be a source of seduction to those who should pay a submission to it.

You say the Scribes and Pharisees insisted upon the authority of their church. I answer, they might have lawfully done it, if there had not been uncontestable evidence against it: and therefore Roman Catholics have a full right to insist upon the authority of their church, till the like manifest and uncontestable evidence be produced against it by protestants: which is the very thing we have always most earnestly demanded ever since the pretended reformation, but never could obtain.

You add, that the rulers or Pharisees attributed Christ's miracles to Beelzebub, and ask, who was to be the judge in this case, the people or the church? I answer neither the one nor the other. For Christ was then the only infallible judge, and his works gave testimony that his commission was from God, and could not be questioned but by such as were rotten at heart, poisoned with malice, and resolved not to yield to the truth. I heartily wish it may not be the case of many at this time.

As to their attributing Christ's miracles to Beelzebub, I answer, this was the most flagrant instance of the corruption of their hearts, and of the most consummate malice reduced to its very last shift. Nay Christ himself calls it blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. That is, denying the manifest truth, and shutting their eyes against the clearest light. In effect this proceeding was as exorbitantly irrational, as if they had attributed all the wonderful works of God to the operations of Satan.

Lastly you tell me, it was impossible at that time for any to become a christian upon the foot of the authority of the church. To which I answer briefly as before, viz., that the authority of the Jewish church was not to be regarded, or obeyed, when it commanded the rejection of our Saviour; because there was uncontestable evidence against the lawfulness of it: as a child is not bound to obey his father, if he commands him to commit murder: nay he is bound not to obey him.

But I presume, that all you have now said is only to prepare me to relish your darling doctrine of private judgment in opposition to church authority.

SECTION XXXIII.—OF PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

G.—My lord, private judgment is all we have for the “belief of a God, and of Christ, and by your own concession “for the choice of a church. And then we may well trust “to it in smaller matters. In short, we must trust to it in “every thing without exception. For it is as impossible to “believe any thing without our understanding, as to see “without eyes.”—p. 46.

L.—Sir, if you mean nothing more when you say, that we must trust to private judgment in every thing without exception, than that we must never believe any thing unreasonably, that is, without a sufficient motive to believe it, I know not where you will find an adversary to fight against, and you only trifle with words instead of disputing. For in this sense I believe all the dark mysteries of Christianity by my own private judgment. Because my own judgment tells me, that nothing is more consonant to reason than to submit in things, that are above my understanding, to the decisions of the church, which is the greatest authority upon earth, and established by God himself to direct me in the way to salvation.

Nay I likewise agree to what you say, that private judgment is all we have for the choice of a church: because the marks of the true church are of such a nature, as not to be above the reach of a man's understanding to make a judgment of them: whence it follows, that my own private reason, after a diligent and impartial examination of those marks, suffices to direct me to the church I ought to choose for my guide.

But when this choice is once made, and when I have now found the true church of Christ by the marks that lead me to it, then the same reason tells me, that it is most reasonable to depend upon her authority with an entire confidence, and trust to her in every thing she proposes as a revealed truth; without pretending to examine or canvass the mysteries proposed by her, or to dive into them by the mere light of human reason. And therefore if your meaning be that we must employ our private reason in examining and scanning those very mysteries, which are above our reason, and that we ought not to believe any thing, but what our reason can comprehend, nothing is more false or pernicious than your saying, that we must trust to it in every thing without exception. For if we must thus trust to its examination in every thing without exception, I cannot see, how it is naturally possible but that we must be misled into a thousand errors, and that there must be as great a variety of religions, as there is of private judgments. Pray tell me, Sir, is your private judgment capable of discovering, examining, or understanding the sublime mysteries of the holy trinity, incarnation, &c.

“ G.—My lord, my reason tells me, that there must be “ many things in the nature of God, which I cannot under“ stand or explain : because he is infinite, and incomprehen- “ ble. And these I take purely upon revelation, that is given “ of them in holy scriptures. For my own reason could never “ have found them out, nor can perfectly understand them.
 “ They are dark to me like a country I never saw. I cannot “ have a right idea of it till I come thither : as I cannot of “ heaven or the state of separate souls. Yet I cannot help “ framing some conception to myself of what I know never “ entered into the heart of man to conceive: that is, aright, and “ according as these things are. Therefore I take not upon “ me to explain them. For that would be to involve myself,
 “ and I know that I must greatly err.”—p. 47.

L.—That is very right, Sir, and you do very prudently in not taking upon you to explain such dark mysteries.
 But did not your reason tell you just now, that private judgment is to be trusted to in every thing without exception? And does the same reason now tell you again, that there are many things, which must be taken upon pure revelation? Or do you call this trusting to your private judgment? You may as well say, that a blind man trusts to his own eyes, when he follows his guide. On the contrary I call it subjecting our private judgment to the revelation of God. I call it, as St Paul does, captivating our reason and understanding unto the obedience of faith.
 In a word, I call it submitting in all matters of faith to the decisions of the church. Because whatever I take purely upon revelation, I take upon the authority of the church declaring such and such mysteries to be truths divinely revealed. For the church is then properly my guide, and the revelation of God is the motive, upon which my faith is built : and my reason acts no other part than that of an entire submission. So that the true and only use we are here to make of our reason is in this one act of judging, that it is most reasonable, that men should submit to that authority, which Christ himself has established. And upon this head faith is always rational, though reason can never discover, nor understand, nor explain the mysteries proposed.

“G.—My lord, it would be as much against reason to deny these, as to deny there is any country in the world, or star in the firmament, which I had not seen.”—p. 47.

L.—Very right, Sir; pray go on. For with a little practice you will learn to speak truth.

“G.—And it would be much more unreasonable to think there is nothing in the nature of the infinite, which I did not comprehend; or because that cannot be expressed but in words adapted to our understanding, therefore to measure his nature by ours. And because Peter, James, and John are three men, therefore to think, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost must be three Gods.”—p. 47.

L.—This, Sir, would be denying the first article of our creed, and making reason dictate blasphemy to us. Therefore we must take care not to trust to it in every thing without exception.

“G.—But when I say three persons with relation to the divine Trinity, there comes not such a thought in my head as three persons of men. But because personal actions are attributed to each of the divine Three, therefore we call them persons. Which words the scripture applies to God. Heb. i. 3. But it is only ad captum, as the schools speak. That is, condescending to our capacity, as when God is said to repent, to grieve, &c., it is not that we should think it really so; for that would be contradictory to the nature of God. But it conveys a notion to us that we should act as if it really were so, that God were angry and grieved at our sins, and would repent of the blessings he has given or promised to us, if we take not heed to walk in the ways, he has set before us.”—p. 48.

L.—Sir, though you have expressed yourself somewhat oddly, I am willing to put the best construction upon your words, not doubting but you believe the incomprehensible mystery of the blessed Trinity as we do: which deists and Socinians deny: because, say they, it is a contradiction to the first principle of reason; and they will have nothing to do with revelation, but think themselves easier without it.

“G.—They will not find it so, when they consider, that they are in no less difficulties upon following their own reason only. For example. They allow a first cause and “ creator of all things, because nothing can make itself. And “ that first cause must have a necessary being, and conse“ quently from all eternity: and that eternity is a duration “ without succession or time, or having any beginning; where“ in all is present without either past, or to come. This the “ deist is forced to confess upon the conviction of his reason.

 “ But he will not pretend to have so much as any idea or “ conception of what this eternity is, or can be: nor can he “ imagine a duration without beginning, in which there is “ nothing past, nor any thing to come. Nor can he express “ this any otherwise than in words of time, which we must “ own are not at all proper, nor applicable to it. The word “ beginning is inconsistent with eternity, and to say before “ the beginning is a contradiction. Here then the deist is “ lost, and must have recourse to the same excuse, which he “ ridicules in revelation, viz., that we cannot speak properly
 “ of God, nor in other words than belong to men: and that “ therefore these words are not to be taken strictly, nor “ argued upon, nor consequences drawn from them. For that “ would involve us in numberless contradictions. And there “ is not an objection, which the deist or Socinian makes against “ the doctrine of the holy Trinity, the incarnation, &c., but are “ of this sort* by arguing from the nature of man to the na“ ture of God, from the persons of the one to the persons of “ the other, &c., which these men of reason think highly un“ reasonable in their own case, as to argue from time to etern-
 “ nity.”—p. 49

L.—This, Sir, makes it plain to a demonstration that they, who will needs trust to their own private judgment in every thing without exception, must unavoidably involve themselves in a labyrinth of errors and absurdities, from which they can never extricate themselves. And it follows from it, that, in all points of revealed religion, the safest, nay the only rational course we can take, is to submit our private judgment to that authority, which Christ himself has established upon earth; viz., his holy church, which St Paul calls the pillar and ground of truth.

As for instance, how can you convince any man of the inspiration of scriptures but from the authority of the church? For if you will not build your belief of it upon that authority, I see not what other authority you can allege for it.

* Which is, according to logicians, the sophism “Transitus a genere ad genus.”

“G.—Nor I neither. For I put it upon no authority. It is evidence, and not authority, upon which my belief of scriptures is founded.”—p. 50.

SECTION XXXIV.—OF THE INSPIRATION OF SCRIPTURES.
AND WHETHER OUR BELIEF OF IT BE FOUNDED UPON EVIDENCE EXCLUDING AUTHORITY.

ADVERTISEMENT.—His lordship's answer in the gentleman's Case Stated to what he said last, is so remarkable a piece of nonsense, that the gentleman himself gives him a civil reprimand for it; and goes on thus:

“G.—Authority and evidence are two things. If I believe a thing for your telling me so without any other reason, then I believe it purely upon your authority. But if a man I never saw before makes a thing very evident to me, and convinces my reason; I believe not then upon his authority; for he has none with me, but upon the evidence he gives me. And what that evidence is upon which we believe the holy scriptures is set forth in a little book, I had the honour to present your lordship, entitled the Truth of Christianity Demonstrated, &c., which was wrote to convince deists, who believe no church, nor church authority. And if you have no other evidence but the authority of your church to prove the truth of scriptures, I see not how you will convince a deist, who denies both.

“But if I tell him that I believe the scriptures, and the facts therein related upon the same and much stronger evidence than I have for believing that there was such a man as Alexander or Cæsar, that there is such a town as Rome or Constantinople, though I was never there, yet I believe it not upon the authority, far less the infallibility of any man or number of men, that tell me so, but from the nature of the evidence, which makes it impossible for mankind to concert such a lie, or to carry it on without being detected: and if the truth of christianity, that is, of the scriptures, can be demonstrated, as plainly, as these other “ facts (which I think is done in the book I mentioned)

 “ then a deist must either be convinced or confounded.

“ Now if you will let your church come in as a part of the “ evidence of christianity, she will not be refused so far as “ her share goes. But upon her authority, and upon hers “ alone, the truth of scriptures and christianity, will be a jest to “ the deists, since her authority can be proved no otherwise “ than by scriptures, and then back again the scriptures by “ her authority.”—pp. 50, 51.

L.—Sir this is repeating the old thread-bare objection concerning the circle, whereof enough has already been said. But as to what you say concerning your Christianity Demonstrated, I have read it with attention, and own you have proved clearly enough against the Jews and deists, that the sacred person, whom we call Christ, is the Messias foretold by the ancient prophets. But as to any proof, that either the Old or New Testament were writ by divine inspiration (which renders them precisely the word of God, and a rule of faith) I do not remember one single argument in your book relating to that subject. There is certainly a large difference between proving that the facts contained in a book are true, and that the person, who wrote it, was divinely inspired. For several persons have writ the history both of the Old and New Testament, and yet their books are neither canonical scriptures, nor received by the church as divinely inspired, though the facts contained in them be certainly true.

Now, Sir, the point, we have before us (and it is a point of very great importance) is, how the revelation of scriptures has been conveyed to us. I maintain that our belief of it is wholly grounded upon authority, and so did St Austin, when he declared, that he would not believe the gospels themselves, unless the authority of the church induced him to it. Contra Epist. Fund. C. 4. You on the contrary pretend, that it is evidence and not authority, on which your belief of the revelation of scriptures is founded. Your evidence, therefore must be such, as is wholly independent of any authority. But for my part I know but two sorts of evidence, which are not founded upon any authority, viz., the evidence of our senses, and the evidence of our reason, which is properly the result of a philosophical or mathematical demonstration. Now I presume, Sir, your eyes were never sharp enough to see the revelation of scriptures. And if you ever gratify the world with a philosophical or mathematical demonstration of it, you will deserve to have your statue set up in all the universities of Christendom.

I have therefore reason to suspect, that the whole evidence you boast of (though you assert positively that it is evidence and no authority) is in reality no other than the evidence of authority. That is, an authority so strong and uncontestable, that all men of sense ought to yield to it. Nay I do not only suspect you guilty of this trifling equivocation in asserting one thing, and meaning another, but I will prove it plainly upon you from your own words.

For first you tell me, that the evidence upon which you believe the revelation of scriptures is of the same nature as that, upon which you believe that there was such a man as Alexander or Cæsar, and that there is such a town as Rome and Constantinople. Now nothing is more certain than that these, and other such like historical facts are believed purely upon the testimony of men, and the testimony of men is what we call authority. And if you in your Christianity Demonstrated have effectually proved that the canonicalness, or revelation of all the parts of scripture has been as universally acknowledged by the testimony of all mankind throughout all ages from the time of the apostles, as that there was such a man as Julius Cæsar, which no man in his senses ever doubted of: if I say, you have proved this effectually, I am heartily glad of it. Nay you deserve immortal honour for so noble a performance; though I fear it is as yet to be begun. However I desire you to give things their proper names; and tell me no more that it is evidence, and not authority, upon which your belief of scriptures is founded; since, according to your own concession, it has the same foundation as your belief of any unquestionable historical fact: and that is no other than the universal testimony of mankind: which, if you please, you may call the evidence of authority, and then our dispute is at an end: but you must never call it evidence excluding all authority; since authority is the only ground and foundation of it.

Which I prove 2dly, from your telling me that you believe the scriptures from the nature of the evidence, which makes it impossible for mankind to concert such a lie, or carry it on without being detected. For is not this plainly owning that all the evidence you pretend to is grounded upon the testimony of mankind incapable of concerting such a lie? And can you call this believing upon evidence and no authority without designing to convince the world that you are only playing with words?

Thirdly, you tell me that if our church will come in as a part of the evidence of christianity, she will not be refused as far as her share goes. This is very obliging indeed. However it seems then, that the testimony of our church (which to the best of my judgment is the testimony of men) may be a part of the evidence you speak of. And is this any other than the evidence of authority? It is therefore manifest from your own words that (though out of an over eager desire to run down all church authority, you will needs pretend that our belief of the revelation of scriptures is founded upon evidence, and no authority) you mean no more than a wretched equivocation in taking the word evidence, not as it is understood by philosophers and divines, for a demonstrative knowledge, but as it is used in our courts of judicature for testimony, or witness. Which in reality is granting the thing, and trifling with words.

G.—My lord, I have already told you, that if I believe a thing for your telling me WITHOUT ANY OTHER REASON, then I believe it purely upon authority. And can this be called the evidence of authority?

L.—No, Sir. And therefore the authority, you have described, is such, as none but fools and children would depend upon. For who but fools and children will believe a thing merely because they are told it, and without any other reason? Wise men proceed otherwise. They examine the capacity and veracity of the author, before they give credit to his relation. And this is something more than barely being told so. And according to your notion, an authority well established ceases to be authority, and you will needs have it called evidence: though at the same time you mean no more than the evidence of authority: of which I am ready to allow you as much as you can possibly make out for the canonicalness and revelation of scriptures, or any other article of faith. Nay the more the better: provided you tell me no more, that it is evidence and no authority upon which your belief of the scripture is founded. But pray, Sir, upon what grounds do you reject those books of the Old Testament, which you call apocryphal, and receive those you call canonical?

G.—As to the apocryphal books, we received the canon of the Old Testament from the Jews, who never admitted them into the canon of their scriptures. And how should we know their canon better than themselves?—p. 52.

L.—A pretty sort of question for a christian to ask! For this is the true English of it: How should the church of Christ be wiser, or know scriptures better than the Jewish synagogue? Or thus, Is not the authority of the Jewish synagogue preferable to that of the church of Christ in the decision of an article of christian faith? For my part, as I profess myself to be a christian, and no Jew, I think the judgment and authority of the church of Christ preferable to that of the Jewish synagogue; especially in so weighty a point as is the true canon of scriptures whether of the Old or New Testament. For they are equally sacred. And if I dare not trust the judgment of the Catholic Church in the one, I may as well question it in the other.

You tell me however, that we received the canon of the Old Testament from the church of the Jews: and here you fairly own at least, that you believe the canon of the Old Testament upon the authority of the Jewish church. But is not this a contradiction to what you told me just now, viz., that you take the scriptures upon no authority? And that it is evidence und no authority, upon which your belief of the scriptures is founded? Or is the Old Testament no part of scripture? If therefore you receive that part of scripture upon the authority of the Jewish church, how can you after that refuse to receive the New Testament upon the authority of the Catholic Church without a manifest preference of the Jewish synagogue to the church of Christ?

G.—My lord, as to the apocryphal books of the Old Testament we were speaking of, we are sure they were not in the christian canon in the days of St Jerome, if he knew what was received by the church as the canon of scripture. For in his Prologus Galeatus, printed before your own vulgar Latin he rejects them as apocryphal, and says they were not in the canon of holy scriptures.—p. 52.

L.—It is true, Sir, he does so. Yet in St Jerome's time Innocent I., the third council of Carthage, and St Austin held them for canonical. To these the Catholic Church at last inclined, and weighed down the balance.

G.—My lord, to say nothing of the books of Toby, Judith, and Wisdom rejected by us, I shall only make a short reflection upon the books of Maccabees. For let any one but read the conclusion in exense for the weakness of the performance, and then think it possible, if he can, that the Holy Ghost should make such a speech as this. If I have done well, it is what I desired. But if I have not done my work as it ought to be, I ask pardon for it.

“But as to a full examination of apocryphal books, and their authority, I refer your lordship to Dr Cosin's scholastic history of the canon of holy scriptures, not yet answered that I can hear of.”—pp. 52, 53.

L.—Sir, how far Dr Cosin's sincerity and fairness in writing may be depended upon shall in some measure be examined hereafter. But as to your notable query, whether any man can think it possible that the Holy Ghost should make such a speech? I shall set the following queries against it. Was it the Holy Ghost or St Paul, that left his cloak at Troas, desired Timothy to bring it with him, and gave his service to Prisca and Aquilla? 2 Tim. iv. 13, 19. Was it the Holy Ghost or St Paul, that begged pardon of the Corinthians? 2 Cor. xii. 13. That desired their prayers? 2 Cor. i. 11. That was an idiot in speech? 2 Cor. xi. 6. That says, he speaks foolishly? 2 Cor. xi. 21. Could the Holy Ghost say all this? But might not St Paul have the humility, and be inspired by the Holy Ghost to say it? It is what I answer to your query.

But since you have already told me, that the canon of the Old Testament was received from the Jews, though I should rather think we are obliged more immediately to the apostles for it, I hope at least you will allow, that the canon of the New Testament was established by the authority of the church of Christ.

“G.—No, my lord, not at all by her authority.”—p. 53.

L.—For shame, Sir! But go on.

“G.—I say it was not at all established by her authority,
 “but plainly by evidence. They proceeded wholly upon evi“dence, viz., whether such an epistle was sent to such a church;
 “as to the church of Corinth, Ephesus, Galatia, &c., who “carefully kept the originals, and sent copies to other church“es, as was commanded, Col. iv. 16. And by this commu“nication of the churches one with another the true scriptures “were known; and it is commonly set down at the end of “his epistles by what hand they were sent. And by this “method the spurious epistles and gospels forged by heretics
 “were at first detected: as you will find in the last chapter “of the fifth book of Eusebius’s Ecclesiastical History: where “it is told, that the heretics were brought to this test, and “could not produce the originals, whence they took their “copies: and that their copies did vary from one another;
 “every one adding what opinion came into his own head:
 “and that they could not tell from whom they learned such “doctrines. Thus the canon of the New Testament was settled “in those ages, when these evidences were fresh and notorious;
 “and has been received since that time by all the christian “churches in the world so unanimously, that there is no dis“pute betwixt any churches concerning the canon of the New “Testament. And this is an evidence too strong for the caprice
 “of some particular men, who would shew their wit in making “objections against this or that part. But they cannot hurt
 “the faith, because the whole faith is over and over again “fully expressed and contained in those gospels and epistles, “which are acknowledged by all.”—pp. 53, 54.

L.—Really, Sir, such a wretched defence of scriptures, as you have here made, is worse than a satire or lampoon upon them, and exposes them more than any thing to the contempt of atheists and deists. For, to say nothing of the bold falsehood, you have asserted, viz., that since the first ages there has been no dispute betwixt any churches concerning the canon of the New Testament, I shall only shew, you are still in your trifling mood, and calling that evidence, which in reality is nothing but authority. But, to convince you how ill grounded your evidential system is, I will not exemplify in the Revelations, or the epistle to the Hebrews, or those other epistles, which, notwithstanding your plain evidence, were doubted of for some ages (as Dr Walton confesses, Prol. C. iv. sect. 6, p. 31). Nor will I instance in those parts of the New Testament, which were not directed to any particular church, and in reference to which your whole system of pretended evidence is altogether useless; but I shall pitch upon the very first epistle of St Paul, which never was doubted of, was directed to the Church of Rome, and brought thither by the hands of a faithful servant called Phebe.

Now I allow of all the particulars of your evidential system in relation to this epistle. As, that it was writ by St Paul; that it was sent to the Church of Rome, by a faithful hand; that the Romans kept the original (which however is now lost, and of no use to us) and sent copies of it to other churches, to the end that if heretics should attempt to corrupt the text, or hand about any spurious epistle of St Paul to the Romans, their forgery might be detected by this communication of the churches with one another, and by comparing the copies with the true original.

This, Sir, is the evidence, you speak of, placed in as advantageous a light as it will bear. But all the strength it has is built upon authority. For first, the churches, to which the copies of this epistle were sent, could have no other evidence of its containing the pure word of God, than what the Romans themselves had, from whom they received those copies. And 2dly, the Romans could have no other evidence, that the original contained the pure word of God, than what Phebe had, who brought it to them from St Paul. If therefore Phebe herself had no other evidence of its containing the pure word of God than the evidence of authority, your whole system of pretended evidence without authority is a mere chimera.

Now it is manifest, that Phebe could have no other evidence, than what I speak of. For let us suppose, if you please, that Phebe not only received the epistle to the Romans from St Paul's own hands, and heard him declare that it contained the revealed word of God, but even that she stood by, and saw him write it. It is true indeed, that in the supposition, I have made, it was evident to Phebe's sight, that the epistle was written by St Paul; and evident to her hearing, that St Paul declared it to be the word of God. But that it was really the word of God, (and pray remark that our question is chiefly concerning the revelation of scriptures;) this was neither evident to her senses (for she could not see the revelation), nor to her understanding convinced by any necessary conclusion drawn from first and known principles. The ground therefore of her belief of it was not evidence properly so called; but she believed it upon the credit, and unquestionable authority of a person, whose veracity she could not suspect. So that her belief of that epistle's containing the word of God was resolved into the revelation of God declared by St Paul, whose miracles gave weight and authority to all he said or wrote. Her reason told her indeed, that St Paul was a man to be believed; as my reason tells me, that the church of Christ is to be believed: and therefore St Paul having told her (as we will suppose) that the epistle she carried, contained the word of God, she concluded that she ought to believe him. But who sees not that this is both reasoning and concluding barely from authority; and that the evidence she had was not an evidence excluding authority, but wholly built upon it.

SECTION XXXV.—THE SCRIPTURES NOT FALSIFIED BY THE CHURCH OF ROME.

ADVERTISEMENT.—Pp. 54, 55, Case Stated, the gentleman answers an objection of the deists against scriptures. But his answer containing nothing, but what a Roman Catholic may subscribe to, is here omitted. Then the discourse falls upon various translations of scriptures, and the gentleman objects against our Latin translation thus :

“ G.—What signifies the Latin, which is not the vulgar language of any nation in the world? I say, what does this signify to the people, who understand it not?”—p. 55.

L.—Sir, to say nothing of thousands amongst the laity in all catholic countries, who understand Latin as well as the clergy, pray what signifies the law of Great Britain to the common people, who understand it not? Yet they cannot fail to have the benefit of it as long as there are judges and lawyers who understand it. And so will the people have the benefit of scriptures, as long as there are bishops and pastors to interpret it to them. But the Bible is now translated into all languages.

“ G.—This instead of an answer to the objection is owning it to have been just and necessary. And thus much the people have gained by the reformation.”—p. 55.

L.—It was indeed very just and necessary, that when corrupt translations were put into the hands of ignorant people to poison them, true translations should be published to hinder the poison from spreading. It is likewise certain, that the reformation has obliged us to answer many childish objections never thought of before. Now our translating the Bible into all languages is an effectual answer to the frivolous objection of protestants telling the people, that we lock up the scriptures from them.

“ G.—Alas, what has the people gained? There is something worse than even a total locking up of the scriptures in these translations: that is, a corrupting the text to deceive the people, different from even your own vulgar Latin translation, which you have authorized. This is made apparent in a collection printed here at London of the many texts thus evidently abused both by adding to them, “ and taking from them, and misrepresenting them in the “ French New Testament printed in France for the new “ converts there. And this has occasioned the suppression “ of that New Testament, in so much that few of them are “ to be found. At least they are not publicly to be sold at “ Paris.”—pp. 55, 56.

L.—This is one of the most extraordinary objections, that ever was heard of. A corrupt translation of the New Testament is printed at Paris. The book is suppressed by public authority, and scarce a copy of it is to be found. Ergo, we seduce the people by corrupting the text. Ought you not rather to infer, that therefore we are the sincerest people in the world in not suffering corrupt translations to appear abroad, or suppressing them as soon as is possible?

G.—But there is a Louvain translation printed and sold at Paris with approbations before it, and in this there are many mistranslations. I will show your lordship one: it is said, Acts xiii. 2. As they ministered to the Lord. The vulgar Latin has it ministrantibus illis Domino; which is the same word for word. But this French translation has it thus: As they were offering to the Lord the sacrifice of the mass.”—p. 56.

L.—Well, Sir, but suppose that be the true meaning of those words.

G.—Your lordship may suppose it if you please. But what the import of the words is, or what consequences may be drawn from them is what we call exposition, or commenting upon the text. But to alter the words of the text is of another nature, it is a false translation, and not an interpretation, and comes under that terrible curse pronounced, Rev. xxii. 18, 19, against those who add to, and detract from, or pervert the holy words of scripture. And to show that this was not done by chance, and what use they intended to make of this text thus translated they put upon the margin, the holy mass: that the people might here find a plain text of scripture for the mass, and the sacrifice of it. And in the index (which is done by the same authority) upon the word mass this text is named as a proof, that the apostles did celebrate mass.”—pp. 56, 57.

L.—Sir, if every addition of a word or two to clear the text be the same as falsifying, or perverting the sense of it, then the English protestant translation is as guilty as any. For nothing is more common in the protestant Bible than to find words inserted in a different character to make out or explain the text. Now I think it very probable, that it was merely a mistake of the printer, that these words of the mass, were not set in a different character. And if this be the case (as I am sure you cannot prove the contrary) then the translator is blameless, and your objection frivolous.

But let us suppose it to be otherwise, if he has delivered the true import, or meaning of the text, all he can be charged with is, that instead of a verbal translation of the text he has gone beyond his task, and given a faithful exposition of it. But it can never be strained into what you call a corrupting of the text to impose upon the people. For a text is then properly said to be corrupted for that end, when by adding, detracting from, or changing any word it is perverted from the sense, in which it is usually understood. Now, Sir, the Louvanian translator has done no such thing. For Erasmus himself translates the text in question, as they were SACRIFICING to the Lord: and it is now near 1300 Years, since the christian sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ (which you yourself [Case Stated, p. 42] have owned to be the most solemn worship of God) was called the mass. For the apostolical use whereof this text is a good proof, translate it as you please. And therefore the Louvanian translator cannot be called a corrupter of the text: since he has only delivered that sense, in which catholic divines usually understand it.

“ G.—My lord, I shall now give you an instance of subtracting from the text. It is said, Heb. xi. 21, that Jacob worshipped ἐπι upon, or leaning upon the top of his staff. But this French translation leaves out the word ἐπι upon, and renders it, that he worshipped the top of his staff. And in the index at the word adoration this text is quoted for the adoration of wood. Belike they thought there was some image carved or painted on the top of Jacob's staff, which “ he worshipped. And so this is made a text for worshipping “ their wooden images and pictures. Especially the solemn “ worship of the cross upon Good Friday. And who knows “ but the head of Jacob’s staff was not round, but crutchways “ set across (as is usual with old men) and then the staff “ was a perfect cross.”—p. 57.

L.—A most ingenious reflection, and worthy of a learned divine! I presume, Sir, it is the antiquity of our church (for she is full 1500 years older than yours) has made you so charitable as to provide for her this protestant crutch to support her. For to be sure no Roman Catholic ever had so good a fancy as to think of it. But, Sir, by the staff (which you are so very witty upon) is not meant Jacob’s staff, but Joseph’s rod or sceptre, as I shall shew immediately. And this utterly spoils your merry conceit upon old Jacob’s crutch. However, since you are in so pleasant a mood, it is a pity to interrupt you. So let us have your whole tale out.

G.—My lord, in the former text concerning the mass “ this French translation adds to the words of your own “ vulgar Latin as well as the original. But in this last the “ vulgar Latin as well as the French subtract from the “ original, and both render this text the same way. But to “ do justice to all, the port royal Bible delivers this text from “ the gross interpretation put upon it by means of a false “ translation to favour the worship of wood.”—p. 58.

L.—Sir, I have already answered your objection relating to the former text. So now let us consider the latter; and see whether the Louvanian, or the English protestant translator be in greater danger of St John’s curse.

You granted just now that the Louvanian translation of the text before us agrees exactly with the vulgar Latin; which (though disliked by protestants, because it will not do their business) has had the approbation of the universal church for many hundred years before the reformation.

But, Sir, I must tell you moreover, that the Louvanian translation agrees not only with the vulgar Latin, but with St Jerome also, who renders this text word for word the same way, viz., adoravit fastigium virgæ ejus [Tom. i.

ult. Edit. Par. p. 1665]. So that you have both the vulgar Latin, and St Jerome against you. And he must be a bold man, who has the confidence to accuse this great saint and doctor of corrupting the scriptures. And if he has not corrupted the text in question, the vulgar Latin, which renders it as he does, cannot be taxed with it, and the Louvanian translator, who follows both, must likewise be acquitted.

As to the preposition ἐπι upon, which you complain is left out; the objection is so very childish, that I am almost ashamed to answer it seriously. However, to prevent its being put into the catalogue of unanswerables, I answer, that the same sense is very often expressed either with or without a preposition even in the same language. As in Latin: oravit dominum, or oravit ad dominum. And the same in English. He prayed God, or he prayed to God: but in different languages nothing is more common. So that provided the sense be faithfully rendered, whether it be done by the same turn of phrase, or otherwise, there can be no corruption, or falsification in the matter.

The only question then is, whether the Louvanian or English translation be the more faithful of the two in delivering the genuine sense of the text, we dispute about? I have already told you that the Louvanian translation has a person of no less credit and reputation than St Jerome himself to vouch for it. But I shall now present you with an old French protestant translation printed An. 1540, which perhaps will please you better than St Jerome's. Now this translation renders the text thus: I shall repeat the whole verse. Par la foy Jacob mourant beneist un chacun des fils de Joseph, et adora VERS LE SOMMET DE LA VERGE D'ICELUY. Heb. xi. 21. The English whereof is thus: By faith Jacob blessed each of the sons of Joseph, and worshipped (or bowed down) towards the top of his rod. Meaning the rod of Joseph, which was his badge, or mark of authority. For Joseph was the second man in the kingdom, and governor of all Egypt.

Now I presume you will easily grant that a protestant translator will not corrupt the text in favour of popery.

Let us then see whether this French protestant translation comes nearer to the Louvanian or English translation. The Louvanian translation is thus: By faith Jacob dying blessed each of the sons of Joseph, and worshipped the top of his staff. And the French protestant translation thus: And he worshipped towards the top of his rod or sceptre, which is very different from the English version, leaning upon the top of his staff; but agrees with the Louvanian translation. For to worship the top of his staff means in that place the very same as to make a bow to, or towards the top of his staff; and is no more an argument in favour of idolatry, than bowing to the chair of state to honour the king. But it is a very good proof for the lawfulness of our worshipping Christ by bowing to his images or pictures. For Joseph's sceptre, to which Jacob bowed, was a type of Christ's spiritual power and kingdom: and his bowing to it was a prophetic action, as the most learned commentators observe. Nay St Paul says that it was done by faith.

I observe 2dly, from this French protestant translation, that the preposition ἐπι, for which you are so zealous, does not only signify upon, but also to or towards: and therefore was not omitted with design to change the sense of the text: since it may be kept without any alteration made in the true import of it.

I observe again, that the French word iccluy points plainly at Joseph; as does the Greek word αυτου, which signifies ejus. Whereas if Jacob's staff, and not Joseph's rod or sceptre had been spoken of, the Greek would have been αυτου, and the Latin sue.

I observe lastly, that your saying, that this is made a text for worshipping our wooden images and pictures is a false and malicious insinuation. Because it is false to say that we worship images and pictures in the sense that the word worship is generally understood by your church. That is, for an act of divine honour. Though it be true that this text is made use of to prove that it is lawful to worship Christ by paying a relative honour to his images and pictures: as it was lawful for Jacob to worship Christ in spirit by bowing to Joseph's rod or sceptre, which was a type of him. Now, Sir, you may proceed, if you please.

G.—In the other French translation I mentioned before made for the use of new converts, this expression, 1 Cor. iii. 15, of some that shall be saved with great difficulty, as if passing through the fire, is boldly rendered the fire of purgatory, as the words of the text without any different character, as is used with us, when a word is put in to make English of an Hebrew or Greek idiom. But in this Louvanian translation the text is let stand, so as by fire. Only purgatory is put in the margin in this edition made since the objections against the other translation; in which the addition of purgatory to this text is particularly taken notice of.—p. 58.

L.—Sir, I find then that the Louvanian translation is wholly blameless as to this text, since it only explains it in the margin; and that in the very same sense as St Austin, and many more of the ancient fathers have done in their writings. But, as to the other translation made for the new converts, I refer you to my former answer, viz., its being entirely suppressed. Which suffices abundantly to convince any man of the frivolousness and injustice of your reproaching us with it. And let me tell you, Sir, if the rulers of your church were as honest and sincere, as those of ours, your English Bible would have undergone the same fate a hundred and fifty years ago.

G.—My lord, I could give you more of the corruptions of texts in the French translations. I have now only named three. One of the sacrifice of the mass; another for the adoration of the cross and images, and one for purgatory.—p. 58.

L.—I doubt not, Sir, but you have picked out the most notorious ones; and, it is a sign you are but ill provided, since these are the choicest of your whole stock. For I cannot think you are disposed to favour me. But pray take notice, Sir, that in the odious subject, we are now upon, you have been the aggressor. You cannot therefore take it ill, if I make reprisals, when occasion shall serve. It seems your conscience is very squeamish as to some unauthentic translations of ours. You cry out, Alas!

What has the people gained? The least gnat chokes you. But, as to your own protestant translation put forth, approved, and maintained by the whole authority of your church, you can swallow camels without the least alas, or pious groan to lament the danger the people is in of being poisoned by it; as I shall show hereafter, when we come to the subject of communion in one kind, and the single life of priests. In the mean time I refer you for full satisfaction to the Church of Christ Shewed, &c. Part I. C. vi. sect. 7. Where you will find reason enough to employ your zeal more usefully in taking care that your own people be not here seduced by false translations, than in shewing so much concern for your protestant brethren or new converts abroad.

G.—But the people are seduced by them. The people believe as they are taught. There is small security to them in the abstruse questions concerning infallibility; how far it extends, and in the disputes between popes and councils about it. These are questions, of which I suppose your lordship will easily grant the common people are no judges. They know nothing of the matter. How should they, when the learned are divided among themselves concerning them?—p. 59.

L.—Sir, the people understand nothing of the abstruse questions concerning the blessed Trinity, yet I hope they can believe it, when they are told they must, without understanding it. And so they can believe the church's infallibility without understanding the questions about it.

G.—However this infallibility, if it could be found and fixed, would be of little use to the generality of the people, unless their curates, and their fathers and mothers, who instruct them were likewise all of them infallible. For, as I said, they believe as they are taught, and examine no farther.—p. 59. B

L.—Sir, if they be taught by, and follow an infallible guide, I am sure they will not err. And as long as men, though fallible themselves, can, and do but faithfully deliver the doctrine of an infallible church, I am likewise very sure, that even the most ignorant people, who suffer themselves to be instructed by them, are in no danger of being seduced. So that I am surprised at what you say, viz., that this infallibility, though it could be found and fixed (as I shall shew hereafter it can), would be of little use to the generality of the people, unless their curates, and fathers and mothers, who instruct them, were likewise infallible. This, I say, surprises me, because it follows from it, that the scriptures themselves, though infallible in what they teach, are of little or no use to us, because they, who read them are not infallible.

SECTION XXXVI.—WHETHER INFALLIBILITY EXCLUDES EXAMINATION.

G.—My lord, we suffer our people to examine. But yours are forbid to examine. For that implies a doubt: and they are not to doubt of the religion they are taught, but to receive without any doubt what has been told them by the curate, their fathers, mothers, and nurses, and what is current in the country where they live. This is all the infallibility, of which they are capable. And this is the way of all the earth. It is thus that the generality of mankind, whether heathens, Jews, Mahometans, or christians receive their religion. And without examining into what we have been taught no man would change his religion. None could ever have become a christian, especially a Jew, who had the authority of his church against Christ, to which church he alleges promises of perpetuity, and infallibility."—pp. 59, 60.

L.—Sir, we shall never make an end, if I am bound to repeat my answers as often as you repeat your objections. And therefore, as to what you say concerning the generality of mankind choosing their religion by education, I refer you to what I have already said to it (sect. 28). And, as to what you add concerning the Jews alleging their promises of perpetuity and infallibility against the authority of Christ, I have fully answered it (sect. 32). All then I have now to do is to consider, first, what truth there is in your saying, that we forbid the people to examine the grounds of their religion? And 2dly, whether all such examination implies a doubt?

As to the first, I assure you, Sir, there is nothing we desire more, than that every one, who is come to maturity of judgment, should examine seriously the grounds of his religion: because we are sure there is nothing will contribute more to strengthen them in the faith they profess. What was it that kept St Austin steady in his faith against all the crafty reasonings, and allurements of the Manichees? Let us hear his own words.

Not to speak of that wisdom (says he) which you do not believe is in the Catholic Church, there are many other things, which most justly keep me in her communion. 1st. The agreement of people and nations holds me. 2d. Authority begun with miracles, nourished with hope, increased by charity, confirmed by antiquity holds me. 3d. A succession of bishops descending from the see of St Peter, to whom Christ after his resurrection committed his flock to the present episcopacy holds me. Lastly, the very name of catholic holds me: of which this church alone has, not without reason, so kept the possession, that, though all heretics desire to be called catholics, yet if a stranger asks them, where catholics meet, none of the heretics dares point out his own house, or his own church, &c. Contra Epist. fund. C. 4.

These were the motives, that kept St Austin stedfast and immoveable in the faith he had embraced. And these motives are so plain and intelligible, that every man's private reason is capable of making a true judgment of them. Therefore the more they are examined, provided it be done without prejudice or passion, the more firmly they will fix those, who consider them, in the security they have in that religion, which is founded upon them. And has not every Roman Catholic the very same motives, that St Austin had to keep him stedfast in his faith? Truly, Sir, it is no small comfort to us, that when we are questioned about our religion, we can answer for ourselves word for word what St Austin said to the Manichees, which no member of any reformed church can do without talking nonsense.

Pray tell me, Sir, in what nation under heaven beyond the British dominions has the religion of the Church of England as distinguished from popery and the other reformed churches, ever been received? That nation is not yet discovered. You cannot therefore pretend to what St Austin calls the agreement of people and nations: much less to the antiquity, St Austin speaks of. Since your church or religion is not yet 200 years old.

2. What evidence of miracles can you shew, that may be a rational inducement to any man to believe that the reformation is of God, and has his seal to it? On the contrary you ridicule all miracles, because you are conscious to yourself, that you have none to lay claim to. Whereas our religion was never planted in any idolatrous nation, but had undoubted miracles to vouch for the truth of it.

3. How can the name of catholic belong to you, since you have no universality either of time or place, as I have observed already, and shall shew more fully hereafter. (sect. 54.)

4. How can your bishops and parsons derive their succession from the apostles? Can you satisfy me in this one thing? viz., by whom your first protestant bishops were sent, or who gave them their commission to preach, and administer the sacraments? Was it the secular power? That is nonsense. For no man can give that power to another, which he has not himself. Were they the catholic bishops their immediate predecessors? That is wholly incredible. For what king was ever so mad as to grant commissions to levy forces against himself? And it would have been the same extravagant madness in catholic bishops to have commissioned their immediate successors to preach protestant doctrine, and cut the throat of their own church. Add to this, that in the reign of queen Elizabeth the ancient catholic bishops disowned your pretended bishops and parsons as a spurious race; and were violently deprived, and condemned to prison or banishment for refusing to comply.

Nothing therefore can be more ridiculous than to pretend to have a mission from our church: and hence it follows plainly, that your first pretended bishops and their inferior clergy had no mission from any authority originally derived from the apostles, and that, by consequence, they entered not by the door, into the sheepfold, but as thieves and robbers. John x. 1.

You have not therefore so much as any one of those marks of the true church, or motives of credibility, (as divines call them) which not only drew St Austin from heresy, but fixed him immoveably in the Catholic Church. Whereas I defy you to shew that any one of these marks is wanting to ours.

We have therefore no reason to debar our people from examining the grounds of their religion. For it will stand the test of the strictest examination; and we only wish protestants would examine impartially the grounds both of their own religion, and ours. For if the considerations of interest, and prejudices of education were laid aside, they would find antiquity, catholicity, miracles, succession, and mission derived from the apostles on our side, and not one of these marks on theirs. Nay they would find the reformation, whether considered as to the motive of its beginning (which was to satisfy the luxury of a wicked and arbitrary prince) or the means used for its progress, viz. violence, sacrilege, and plunder; they would find it, I say, branded with such marks of infamy confessed by their own writers, as would convince them, that the Holy Ghost had no part in such counsels. I will only add, that there is not a protestant in the world, but if he traces the reformation of the church, whereof he is a member, to its source, he will find, that either avarice, ambition, revenge, or some other criminal passion gave a beginning to it.

It is therefore plain, we are not afraid to have the grounds of our religion looked into either by catholics or protestants. Now let us consider whether all examination implies a doubt. For my part, I have often examined my religion; yet I do not remember I ever doubted of it in my whole life. But give me leave to ask you, Sir, whether you doubt of the scriptures?

G.—Not at all, my lord.

L.—Yet you examine and search the scriptures. And, by consequence all examination does not imply a doubt. I ask again, whether the scriptures be not infallible in what they teach?

G.—I cannot deny it.

L.—As therefore infallible scriptures do not hinder us from examining our education, and how we came by our religion, so neither does an infallible church bar any such examination. St Paul exhorted the Thessalonians to prove all things. 1 Thes. v. 21. But I hope he did not exhort them to doubt of all things: that is, of all the mysteries of christian religion.

G.—My lord, when we discoursed of private judgment (sect. 33.) you required nothing less than an entire submission to the church. Now I cannot comprehend how submitting and examining can be reconciled together. This looks something like a contradiction.

L.—It will do so, if you remember but one part of what I said, and forget the other. For I distinguished then between the motives of credibility, which lead us to the true church of Christ, and the mysteries of faith, which that church declares to be revealed truths. The motives of credibility, or marks of the true church of Christ are the proper subject of our examination. Nay we cannot examine them too seriously. For they are proportioned to our understanding, and it is by this examination we prove all things, because all depends upon it. But when by this examination we have once found the true church of Christ, we are then bound to submit to her in every thing: and nothing is more reasonable than this submission. Because nothing is more consonant to reason than to submit in things, we do not understand, to that authority, which God himself has established.

It is thus a wise man acts in all temporal concerns. If he has a journey to go, and wants a guide, he seeks out the best that is to be found, and then is wholly guided by him. If he be sick, he inquires after the ablest physician. But when he has made his choice, he suffers himself to be governed by his prescriptions. If he be engaged in a lawsuit, his whole inquiry is to find out the best lawyer to manage it. But when he has found him, he is directed by him in every thing.

And it is thus we must proceed in the great concern of our eternal salvation. God has revealed many truths, and we are bound to believe them. But these truths being dark mysteries, and above our comprehension, how must we know that God has revealed them? We must hear the church of Christ, which being the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 15, all revealed truths are deposited with her. But how must we know the church of Christ from other heretical communions, which pretend to be that church? We must know her by the marks, I have already mentioned; which are so strong and clear, that they render it morally evident, that the church, they belong to, is that, with which God has deposited all truth according to the promises of Christ. Now whoever has a moral evidence that God has deposited all truth with this church, lies under an indispensable obligation to believe whatever she declares to be a revealed truth. Because, as a moral evidence that God has commanded any thing, obliges us to do it, so a moral evidence, that God has revealed any thing, obliges us to believe it. Nay a man would act most unreasonably, if he did otherwise. Because reason tells a man, that he ought to believe every thing, of the truth whereof he has a moral evidence or certainty; which of its own nature excludes all rational doubt or fear of falsehood. And thus it is, that faith is always rational, though the mysteries we believe be above our reason; and therefore cannot be scanned or searched into by human reason. Whence it also follows, that we always stand in need of a living judge, or visible guide to direct us in the way to salvation; and Christ himself was this living judge, whilst he was upon earth.

SECTION XXXVII.—THE NECESSITY OF A LIVING JUDGE.

“G.—This is gratis dictum, and begging the question of “the Jews, as I have already said: who upon the authority “of their church deny Christ to be the Messias. I will not “repeat; only ask these few questions——”

L.—Hold, Sir, you say you will not repeat; and yet you do repeat. And it is now the third time you tell me that I beg the question of the Jews in saying that Christ was the Messias, and by consequence the living judge. But under favour, Sir, I have fully proved it. So let us hear your questions.

“G.—I ask then first, who was the living judge before the “flood? For you say there must be always one, and so does “the bishop of Meaux. 2d. Was Abraham who was known “only to a few neighbours, and wrought no miracles to convince others, was he, I say, given as such a guide or judge “to the whole earth? And Christ was not so great a traveller as Abraham.”—p. 60.

L.—It seems then it is your opinion, that as Abraham was not sufficiently known to be the living judge to the whole earth, so Christ, who was not so great a traveller as Abraham, was still less qualified for it. Really, Sir, I think you are too free with the sacred person of Christ; and your observation of his not being so great a traveller as Abraham is both frivolous and disrespectful. Christ came to preach the gospel to the Jews alone, and I presume he made himself sufficiently known to the Jewish church to be their judge of faith. The conversion of the Gentiles was reserved for the apostles, who founded that church, which was to continue to the end of the world, and be governed (according to God’s own appointment) by their successors the bishops united like them under one head: now these compose that body, which to the world’s end is to be that living judge of faith, concerning which the dispute precisely is between protestants and us. So that your questions concerning the living judge before the flood, and in Abraham’s time, are wholly out of the way. This however we are sure of, viz. that God always had a true church upon earth, that is, a church visibly professing the true faith: which was handed down throughout all generations from Adam and his children to Noah: from Noah to Abraham, and from Abraham to Moses; who was the founder of the Jewish church, which in her priests and prophets was the living judge of faith, and interpreter of the law till the coming of Christ. Now since christians have likewise a written law, which they regard as a rule of their faith, and this law contains many sublime mysteries, about which there have been, and will be frequent disputes to the end of the world, how can these ever be determined, if there be not a living interpreter vested with full authority to pronounce a definitive sentence? It is manifest, that since the dead letter cannot speak for itself, the christian law without a living interpreter can be no rule of christian faith.

Suppose there were a nation, that should give full liberty to every one to interpret the law by his own private judgment; would it be possible in that case either to condemn any criminal, or put an end to any law-suit? Nay would not anarchy and confusion be the unavoidable consequence of it? The matter is beyond all dispute. And therefore there is not a civilized nation in the world, but has a supreme tribunal established, from which there is no appeal. I only desire you to apply this to the church of Christ, and you will soon find the necessity of a living judge of controversy. If you have any questions to ask concerning this church, I am ready for you.

G.—Pray, my lord, where was the living judge when Christ was dead? And, if there was none for three days, it might be so for three or four hundred years, and for good and all. Because the argument fails for the necessity of a judge always in being. You will not say the church of Christ can fail for three days. The promises of God can never fail; no not for a moment.”—pp. 60, 61.

J.—That is very right, Sir; I am glad to hear you speak truth sometimes. God's promises to his church can never fail; no not for a moment. Nay this is the very foundation of her perpetual infallibility, against which the gates of hell will never prevail. But what do you infer from thence? You ask me, who was the living judge, when Christ was dead? I answer, there was none for those three days. For Christ was dead, and the apostles had not yet received their commission.

G.—Then, my lord, it is false what you say, that there must always be a living judge. And as I told you, if there was none for three days, it might be so for three or four hundred years, and so for good and all.

L.—Most stoutly argued! But let us see, whether bishops, pastors, and the whole hierarchy be not rendered useless, and a mere unnecessary lumber by the force of this killing argument. God preserved his church for three days without bishops or pastors to govern her. Therefore neither bishops, nor pastors, nor hierarchy, nor government, are necessary for the church's preservation. Whatever answer you give to this trifling argument, will fully answer yours. For either the church fell at the death of Christ, and that will shew the necessity of a living judge: since it could not subsist without one even for the short space of three days. Or it did not fall, and then it is no more an argument against the necessity of a living judge, than against the necessity of bishops and pastors for its government. But I hope you will upon second thoughts find some difference between three days, and three hundred years or more. However since you insist with that rigour upon the word always, I must crave leave to understand it morally; which suffices to verify any assertions of this nature, unless men are disposed to be childishly scrupulous about the matter.

SECTION XXXVIII.—THE CHURCH DID NOT FAIL AT THE DEATH OF CHRIST.

G.—But will you then own, that the church and promises of God failed in those three days?

L.—No, Sir, our Saviour's promise of infallibility to his church neither did, nor could possibly fail at his death, as not being then yet in force; for a promise cannot be broken before it is in force ; and the promise we speak of, was not to begin to be in force till after the coming of the Holy Ghost, the author of its infallibility; as is expressed in the very words of the promise. Her infallibility is therefore dated from that time forward: so, though it were true that she failed at our Saviour's death, this failure would be no argument against her infallibility after the coming of the Holy Ghost, but only against her infallibility before it. But I absolutely deny, she failed even at that time: prove it, if you can.

“ G.—Of the apostles, one betrayed Christ: another forswore him; and that was St Peter: all forsook him.”—p. 61.

L.—This is a signal mark of your great respect for the apostles in treating them all alike as apostates. But with your leave, Sir, I shall make a great difference between Judas and the rest, though you make none. For as to that traitor, I yield him up at discretion. But as to St Peter, (whom I suppose you specify by name for honour sake) and the other apostles, I shall not part with them upon such easy terms. For their running away was the effect only of a sudden fear, and not of any formed design to forsake their master; as is manifest both in St Peter and St John, who after their flight gave undeniable proofs of their continuing to adhere to him by returning immediately to him, and following him again. It is true, St Peter denied him; but it was but for a moment, and barely in words: which he retracted the moment after with tears of the sincerest repentance: and this shows it was not for want of faith but courage to profess it, that he denied his master. But St John followed him not only to his trial but execution, stood by his cross, and took our blessed lady to his mother at his recommendation: which was not only owning our Saviour, but a being owned by him as a trusty disciple at the time, that you are pleased to treat him as an apostate. The rest of the apostles likewise retained still the same esteem and love for their master, nor does the scripture accuse them of that error in faith.

“ G.—Yes, my lord, the greatest that could be. For as “yet they knew not the scriptures, that he must rise again from the dead. John xx. 9. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain. 1 Cor. xv. 17. And the reason given for choosing Mathias in the room of Judas was that he might be a witness with the other apostles of the resurrection of Christ. Acts i. xxii.”—p. 61.

L.—As to your first text, pray, Sir, is there no difference betwixt an inculpable ignorance of dark and unintelligible scriptures, and the sin of incredulity after revealed truths have been sufficiently proposed? This you charge the apostles with, whereas the other was evidently their case. For though the scriptures had foretold the resurrection of our Saviour, yet these prophecies were so obscure, that they could not be understood especially by ignorant men, much less oblige them to a distinct faith, till the event had explained their meaning. The truth then of the matter is, that the apostles before they had been eye-witnesses of our Saviour’s resurrection neither believed nor disbelieved it. But it was to them as a thing unthought of, and of which they had no manner of idea; the divine wisdom having thought fit to conceal these mysteries, till their accomplishment should make a clear discovery of them.

Your text from St Paul to the Corinthians is nothing to the purpose. For the apostle’s design in that place is to establish the future resurrection, which he proves from the resurrection of our Saviour; and this he proves from the absurd consequences which would follow, if Christ were not raised: for then their faith of it would be false and vain; and then they would be still in their sins which cannot be remitted without true faith. But suppose he had told the Corinthians that their believing in our Saviour would be vain, unless they believed his resurrection, this was true at the time of his writing that epistle, when our Saviour’s resurrection was become a necessary and principal article of faith; but it was not so at the death of Christ, there being no obligation to believe him risen before he was. And thus you see, Sir, how wretchedly you have misapplied this text.

Your third text from the Acts is trifled with in the same manner by your applying that to the time before our Saviour's resurrection, which relates only to the time after it, when it was to be preached to the whole world.

"G.—Pray, my lord, what faith could they have in him, whom they had quite given over, and never expected to see more? They trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel? Luke xxiv. 21. But when he was dead, all their hope was gone. They expected no redemption from him. This was far from a christian faith: and could there be a christian church without this faith?"—p. 61.

L.—This, Sir, is imputing the personal defect of one or two to the whole society; which is not only false reasoning, but great injustice also. For the text you have quoted, and on which you lay so great a stress, speaks only of the two disciples of Emaus, who were neither the whole church, nor the principal members of it: and so it might have subsisted, though they had quite fallen off from our Saviour; which yet is not true. For they continued to love him, as is plain from their discoursing of him, and being sad for what had happened to him; as also from his appearing to them to comfort them. It is true, they knew not that Christ was to effect the redemption of Israel by that very means, which seemed to hinder the effecting of it, to wit, his death. For they imagined he would have effected it during his life; and being disappointed of that hope, they were at a loss what to think of it. But there is a great deal of difference betwixt a formed judgment against a thing, and a doubt or uncertainty about it by reason of its obscurity; as there is likewise betwixt their absolutely despairing, and their being between hope and despair in the trouble of their mind for the death of our Saviour, and disappointment of their present hope. Which is the utmost import of the forementioned words.

"G.—However, my lord, to avoid the force of this objection and secure the promise of indefectibility to the church some of your authors of greatest name have said that the church was then preserved in the Virgin Mary: and thence infer that the Catholic Church may be preserved in one “ woman as it was then. And so it may be again in the time “ of antichrist and the great defection foretold before the “ second coming of Christ, when faith shall not be found upon “ earth; that is, very hardly: when it may be confined to “ one laick, or woman, or a baptized infant. As Bannez “ (Com. in ii. 2. Q. in Art. x. dub. 1.) and others of your “ doctors allow. They are no less men than Alensis the “ author of the Gloss upon the Decretals. Lyra, Occham, “ Aliaco, Panormitan, Turrecremata, Peter de Monte, St “ Antoninus, Cusanus, Clemangis, Jacobatus, J. Fr. Picus, “ &c. and to save repetition, your lordship will find their “ books and words quoted in a small treatise entitled, the “ Incurable Scepticism of the Church of Rome, printed here “ Ann. 1688, p. 22, &c. I name this little tract, because it “ is short, and will give your lordship no great trouble: and “ proceeds upon the same argument I have undertaken with “ your lordship instead of the particular points in dispute “ betwixt the Church of Rome and us: as Invocation of Saints, “ Purgatory, &c., to go at once to the bottom of the cause,

 “ and examine the ground and foundation of faith as taught by
 “ the Church of Rome: which is shewed, I think, to a demon“ stration to be wholly precarious, and uncertain; and that “ there is no greater difference and confusion among any sort “ of men upon any subject whatsoever, than there is among the “ divines of the Church of Rome concerning her rule of faith, “ and infallible judge of controversy. And every one of the “ different opinions about it is in flat contradiction to all the “ others. So that if any one of them be true, all the rest “ must be false. Yet they all pretend to believe with divine “ faith, and think ‘it necessary in this case, because it is the “ foundation of their faith.’

“ Now if according to these learned doctors the whole “ church failed upon our Saviour’s death, then the gates “ of hell did prevail for a time. And if the Virgin Mary
 “ were exempted, that would not do much as to the standing “ of the church. But have they any revelation to ground “ divine faith upon? Or upon what grounds do they believe “ that the Virgin Mary knew the scriptures, or the resurrec- “ tion of Christ more than the apostles, and was not under the “ same despondency as they were? This seems to be that “ sword, which Simeon told her, should pierce through her “ own soul also. Luke ii. 35.”—pp. 62, 63.

L.—Sir, you have here impannelled a jury of twelve Catholic divines against me, who (as you tell me) maintain, that at the death of Christ the church was preserved in the Virgin Mary, and may for ought they knew, be reduced to a single woman, or laick, or baptized infant before the second coming of Christ. But I doubt very much, whether those divines ever maintained either of these opinions; and a very good reason of my doubt is, the little credit, that is to be given to your voucher, the author of the Incurable Scepticism, which you magnify into a demonstrative piece against us; whereas it proves but one thing to a demonstration, to wit, that the author of it is a notorious misrepresenter and falsifier of our divines. For the truth whereof I refer you to the Appendix of the true Church of Christ shewed, &c. from pp. 455—476, where you will find enough to convince you how little your unanswerable author is to be depended upon in his quotations.

But suppose those divines had really taught what is imputed to them by that author relating to the points in question, I have no obligation to follow them in particular opinions, which appear contrary both to reason and clear facts. You tell me, that to avoid the force of your objection they said the church was at the death of Christ preserved in the Virgin Mary. They allow then that it was preserved, contrary to your opinion. But I see no manner of necessity of their being reduced to that answer: because there were others enough besides the blessed Virgin to uphold the church. For, to say nothing of the many Samaritans, who believed in Christ, John iv. 39, or of many of the multitude, who also believed in him, John vii. 31, what do you find in scripture against Lazarus, the blind man of the temple, Joseph of Arimathea, Nicodemus, Zaccheus, St Mary Magdalene, and other pious women? Is it credible that Lazarus could so soon doubt of that power which but a few days before had raised him out of the grave; or that he was less devoted to Christ after that stupendous miracle wrought in favour of him than before? What reason can you invent to suspect the blind man, who stood up so boldly in defence of him against the whole Jewish council, at a time when they were resolved to make an example of any that should declare for him? For if he stood up so courageously for our Saviour before he did him the special favour to reveal his divinity to him, how much more firm must he have been to him after that? Nay so far was our Saviour from being forsaken by all at his death, that there were some, who stuck to him then more openly than ever. Joseph of Arimathea, who before was but his disciple in private for fear of the Jews, was now barefaced for him, and went boldly to beg his body, which he and Nicodemus embalmed, wrapt up in clean linen, and laid in a virgin tomb, venturing every thing to give him an honourable burial. St Mary Magdalene and other holy women were remarkable for their devotion to him not only before but after his death: witness their standing by him, whilst he hung on the cross; their mourning at his sepulchre; their preparing their perfumes the evening of the sabbath; their going early the next morning to embalm his body, and their other pious offices, which were the effects of their faith in him. All these, I think are proofs enough that the church was far either from failing, or being reduced to a single person at the death of Christ. And that she will not fail before his second coming I have fully proved already. First, from this plain promise of Christ, that he will be with her even unto the end of world, Math. xxviii. 20; and Christ cannot be with a church, that has no being. So that when the world ends, then indeed the church will end, and not before. 2dly, Because the church will be persecuted by antichrist; and she cannot be persecuted, unless she has a visible being. 3dly, Because the elect will not be seduced by him; and surely the elect will not dissemble their faith, but profess it openly. 4thly, Because Enoch and Elijah will appear visibly upon earth, and maintain the true faith against the wicked antichrist; and 5thly, Because the Jews will be converted, and brought into the fold of Christ not long before the end of the world; and these will not be converted by invisible pastors, but by men openly professing and preaching the true faith of Christ. And is all this consistent with your saying and repeating it so often as you do, that there will be no faith upon earth at Christ's second coming?

But, to return to the chief point under debate, you are not content to treat the church as a desertress of Christ at his death, and his apostles as apostates, but have the boldness even to attack the mother of God. For you not only question her faith, but even argue seriously against it. You ask me what revelation we have, that she was not guilty of unbelief and despondency? But it is you, who are to be asked what revelation you have to prove that she was guilty of that fault? It being not only against decency but common justice to impeach her faith upon the bare want of a positive revelation for it. You may as well accuse the apostles of having been high-way men, because there is no positive text which says the contrary. Nay it is a crying injustice to accuse the meanest person upon earth of any crime without a positive proof of it: but it is not barely injustice, but downright impiety to charge the sacred mother of God with the crime of apostacy from her faith in Christ upon a bare negative argument, which would be of no weight against the vilest of creatures.

But, Sir, to give you full satisfaction, there is even revelation enough to acquit her. For has it not been revealed to us, that she was assured even by an archangel, that the blessed fruit she was to bear, should be the son of the Most High, the Saviour of his people, and the possessor of a kingdom that should never end? Has it not been revealed to us, that she not only received this heavenly message, but believed it, and was declared happy for believing it? And would you then have us think, that she who believed this mystery upon the word of the angel before it was wrought in her, could ever doubt of it after her miraculous conception, and undoubted experience of its truth? Has it not likewise been revealed to us, that she had the same divine assurance again from St Elizabeth's saluting her as the mother of the Lord and admiring not only her goodness in honouring her with a visit, but also her faith? Luke i. 42—45. And could such a mother doubt of such a son, who had been promised her by an angel from heaven; whom she knew she had conceived of the Holy Ghost; whom the shepherds sent by angels, and the kings conducted by a star had adored in her presence, and whom Simeon and Anna had by divine instinct proclaimed the Saviour of Israel in her hearing? Have we not here scriptures and revelation enough to convince any christian of the moral impossibility of her entertaining the least doubt of the divinity of her son, even amidst the most shocking circumstances of his sufferings and death? the deep sense whereof pierced indeed her soul with the most sensible grief, and was truly that sword foretold by Simeon; whose prediction you have turned to her dishonour by a no less scandalous than senseless interpretation of it: as I leave any one to judge, who pretends to know any thing of scriptures.

Thus, Sir, you have undertaken three noble exploits, which cannot but redound very much to the honour of your cause; viz. to make the apostles false to their master, the mother of God false to her son, and Christ himself false to his word by your declaring that the gates of hell prevailed for a time against his church; which is declaring peremptorily, that the contradictory to his word was true at that time.

G.—My lord, you are too sharp upon me. For I pretend not to dispute against Christ, or his church; but only against your pretended popish infallibility.

L.—Pardon me, Sir. For our pretended popish infallibility, as you call it, is wholly unconcerned in what happened at the death of Christ. Because the Holy Ghost was not then come down upon the apostles. And the question concerning the church's infallibility (as I have already told you) is not whether she was infallible before she had the promised assistance of the divine spirit to lead her into all truth, but whether she has been a fallible or infallible church since her establishment upon the foot of the promises? So that whatever happened before, is wholly foreign to the main question: and it follows from it, that all you have attacked, though, God be praised, with vain efforts, is the infant church of Christ, the mother of Christ, and the veracity of his sacred promises.

As to what you have said concerning the pretended difference and confusion in our church about our rule of faith, and judge of controversy, when you give yourself the trouble to prove it, which I presume you will endeavour to do hereafter, I shall be ready to give you the best satisfaction I can. But as at present you barely affirm it without any proof, so I deny it without any farther answer. If you have any thing more to say relating to our present subject, you shall have a fair hearing.

G.—My lord, I shall propose a short dilemma to you.

L.—I own, that is a cut-throat sort of argument; however let us have it.

“G.—If the christian church was not formed, as some think, till after the resurrection, because our redemption was not till then completed: or as others think till the Ascension, when Christ commissioned his apostles to go and teach all nations: or till the descent of the Holy Ghost, when they were endued with power on high, Luke xxiv. 49. Yet any of these ways it will follow, that there was no christian church before the death of Christ, and then that the Jewish church was the only true church, whilst Christ lived in the world. For the Jewish church was to last, till the christian was formed; else there was no church at all after Christ came till his resurrection. And then it will follow, that the only true church in the world did reject Christ. And then there will be no choice left us but either to acknowledge the fallibility of the church, or to reject Christ from being the Messias. But if the christian church was formed upon the first appearance of Christ in the world, or upon his ordaining the 12 apostles, and sending them out to preach, or upon any other act done in his life, then (as I said before) the whole church failed upon his death.”—pp. 64, 65.

L.—Sir, your dilemma is a very harmless one; and I answer you directly, that the christian church was formed long before our Saviour's passion. That is, as soon as there was a visible society of men believing in Christ. But I deny your consequence, viz. that then the whole church failed at his death: as indeed you said before; but I have already both said and proved the contrary so fully, that there needs no farther answer to it. Now then you may go on.

SECTION XXXIX.—THE QUESTION CONCERNING THE NECESSITY OF A LIVING JUDGE RESUMED.

G.—If the church cannot fail, no not for a moment, “because of the necessity of a living infallible judge always in being, the succession of the monarchy of the church ought to be hereditary, where the king never dies. For this scheme will not admit of an interregnum for months and years, that may be spent in the election of a Pope, all which time the church has no head or monarch. Much less when there are Popes and antipopes, which has occasioned 26 schisms in the Church of Rome, some of them of a long continuance. And who is judge in such a case? Is every man left to his private judgment? And is it all one which of the contending Popes he adheres to? Whether to the right or wrong? Or can the church have two or three opposite heads at the same time?”—p. 65.

L.—No, Sir. But she may be without a ministerial head for some time; as when the Pope dies. Nor does she then cease to be the living infallible judge of faith: because her infallibility is derived from Christ himself, who never dies, nor ever leaves her for a moment, but will according to his promise be with her even unto the end of the world. And therefore whilst her visible head is either dead, or the legality of his title disputed, she continues vested with full power to take such measures as are necessary either to terminate disputes, that may occur about doctrinal points, or remove all uncertainties relating to the due election of her supreme pastor. And so, Sir, with your good leave there will be no occasion of leaving every man to his own private judgment, nor will there be any danger of inconveniences from the short vacancies, or interregnums, as you call them, betwixt the Pope's death, and a new election.

As to the several schisms you have numbered up, I know but one, wherein the true Pope could be questioned with any colour of reason; I mean the great western schism, which I presume you chiefly speak of. But I cannot imagine what argument you can draw from it against the necessity of a living judge always in being. For, though the Pope was doubtful during those troubles, the church of Christ was not doubtful; but shewed herself to be a living judge to all intents and purposes, by assembling a general council, and taking the most vigorous measures to terminate the schism.

G.—I told your lordship before, there never was a council truly general: and that there are disputes in your church concerning general councils, some receiving those, or part of them, which others reject. And who shall be the judge in this case?—p. 65.

L.—Sir, as all this has been said before, so has it also been answered before.

G.—But suppose you were agreed among yourselves concerning councils, and that they were infallible, yet they are not a living judge always in being. You have not had one since that of Trent, which began Ann. 1545, and was concluded Ann. 1563, now 150 years ago. And there may not be another in twice that time, if ever. Where then is the living judge always in being, which the bishop of Meaux and others think necessary?—pp. 65, 66.

L.—I dare swear, Sir, neither the bishop of Meaux, nor any man in his senses ever meant, that a general council must be always in being. It is an extraordinary tribunal assembled upon extraordinary occasions: but the other tribunals suffice for ordinary ones; especially that of the principal and supreme Church of Rome, by whose authority numberless heresies have been suppressed without any general council. For whenever the Pope pronounces juridically, or ex cathedra (as divines call it) upon any doctrinal point, his sentence being received by the diffusive body of the church is an unerring rule of faith.

It was thus the Pelagian heresy was condemned, first by the bishops of Africa, and upon their request by Innocent the first: and by Lozimus in his circular letter to all bishops, who received his judgment. Upon which St Austin said, jam finita causa est; the controversy is now ended. This, Sir, is that standing tribunal, or living judge, for which you seem to be so much in pain. But methinks, Sir, even past general councils may not improperly be called living, that is, always in being, because their canons are so, and determine all controversies at least between catholics and protestants. And if necessity requires it, new councils may be called.

G.—And ages may pass before that can be done. And “the church may be corrupted in the mean time for want of such a living judge.”—p. 66.

L.—Sir, you need not be solicitous about that matter. For the diffusive body of the church is always in being, and will take effectual care to keep out any heresy though her supreme pastor should not think fit to call a general council.

G.—As Europe is now situated, it would be pretty difficult to have a general council. And it may be long enough before any Pope may be of opinion to call one, and hazard his supremacy upon it.”—p. 66.

L.—Sir, I never read of a general council, that ever offered to prejudice, or call in question the Pope’s supremacy.

SECTION XL.—THE DEPOSING POWER.

G.—But, my lord, the canons of past councils are not living, nor can speak for themselves. There are volumes printed of the learned in your own communion giving contrary expositions of the canons. I will instance in one, the 3d canon of the 4th, commonly called, the great Lateran council, acknowledged to be a true general council by all of the Church of Rome, established in most express and positive terms, the Pope’s power of deposing princes, and absolving their subjects from their allegiance, not only if he please to call them heretics themselves, but if they do “not extirpate all heretics out of their dominions. This is maintained in the literal sense by Bellarmin, and the Italian doctors. On the other hand the Gallican church, who have condemned the deposing doctrine, and yet own this council of Lateran, are put to hard shifts, and many distinctions to solve this. But it is impossible. For either that doctrine must be true, or this council has greatly erred.”—pp. 66, 67.

L.—Sir, under favour, neither the one nor the other. For you mistake the sense of the canon you speak of; and therefore whether the deposing doctrine relating to the Pope be true or false, the council did not err.

G.—That is very strange, my lord. But I should be glad to know, what sense that canon will bear, if it does not give the Pope full power to depose heretical princes, and absolve their subjects from their allegiance.

L.—Sir, the third canon of the Lateran council contains no doctrinal point of faith, but the whole subject of it is a mere regulation of discipline relating to the methods that were to be observed during the holy war against the Turks. And the chief import or design of it was to provide an effectual expedient for the suppressing of the Albigenses, who were become open rebels both against the church and state: and to hinder them and others from taking an advantage of the absence of their neighbouring catholic princes, and invading their dominions, whilst both their persons and troops were employed in that holy cause. However nothing was done without the consent of all the crowned heads, that were concerned in the matter. For they all had their ambassadors at the council, and not one of them opposed the canon, or made any objection against it. Which is an unanswerable proof, that they did not look upon it as any ways prejudicial to the just rights and prerogatives of their respective sovereigns.

G.—But Bellarmin, and your Italian divines are of a contrary opinion, and build their deposing doctrine upon the authority of that canon.

L.—They do so. But for one catholic divine, that is of their opinion, there are forty against it: and for one catholic that believes it, there are a thousand that believe nothing of it [Case Reviewed, p. 57. 1 Edit.]. Nay if any subject of a catholic sovereign prince on this side of the Alps should venture to maintain it, he would pass his time but very uncomfortably.

G.—This, my lord, is at least an undeniable instance, that the canons of past councils are not living, nor can speak for themselves. And (as I told you just now) there are volumes printed of the learned in your communion giving contrary expositions of the canons.

L.—Sir, I grant there are some few canons, the sense whereof is disputed among divines; and these cannot speak for themselves, nor are they any rules of faith. So that till the sense of them be determined either by another general council, or the unanimous agreement of the diffusive body of the church, every body is free to take what side he pleases without danger of heresy, or breach of communion with the see of Rome. However the greatest part of the canons speak so very plainly, that they interpret themselves to any man of common sense. Nay I believe you think that they speak but too plainly. For they are all on the popish side. But let that be as it will, the third canon of the Lateran council, about which you make such a heavy splutter, contains no matter of faith.

“ G.—But is it not matter of salvation, for which we shall “ be judged at the last day? St Paul says, Rom. xiii. 2.
 “ They that resist (lawful) powers, shall receive to themselves “ damnation.—Wherefore (says he, v. 5.) ye must needs be “ subject not only for wrath (or fear of temporal punishment “ from these powers) but also for conscience sake; that is,
 “ towards God. And what are these guides of conscience “ who lead us wrong in this? In the description of the “ last judgment given by Christ, Matt. xxv. 31, &c., men “ shall be judged chiefly for their practice. There is nothing “ mentioned there but what men have done. And have we “ no guides as to practice, while we raise such contentions “ about a guide in faith? Or is not the church a guide in prac“ tice too? And is not a general council the church? Then
 “ the church has led us into a damnable practice, unless the “ Pope has power to depose princes at his pleasure, and that “there is no sin in rebellion, and all the blood and desolation that follows it, if his holiness so commands.”—pp. 67, 68.

L.—Believe me, Sir, rebellion is a most grievous and damnable sin, and the authors of it are accountable for all the blood and desolation that follows it, let him command it that will. But, Sir, if all deposing be rebellious, I know what I know. However let it suffice for the present, that you may be a very good Roman catholic without subscribing to the deposing doctrine.

G.—And may not I be as good a Roman catholic, if I do believe it, and defend it, and practise it too?—p. 68.

L.—And may not I be a very good protestant, if I believe the people's deposing power, and defend it, and practise it too?

G.—Have I not all the encouragement the Church of Rome can give me? The frequent practice of Popes themselves, and here the canon of a general council for it? And have any of the Popes ever renounced it?—p. 68.

L.—And have not I all the encouragement, the whole body of reformed churches in the world can give me, and the authority of all the reforming apostles into the bargain, who not only taught, but practised the deposing doctrine, and some died martyrs in the cause, only shifting the question from the Pope to the people? Either therefore deposing and rebellious are not the same; or, if they be, all your railing at the Pope, and Church of Rome upon that account is but lampooning the reformation, and making satyrs upon your own church. As to the canon, you speak of, I have already told you, it admits of various interpretations.

G.—Then your lordship sees that canons are but a dead letter, and that there may be disputes about them. And where then is the living infallible judge always in being?—p. 68.

L.—I told you, Sir, just now. But great wits have bad memories.

G.—You see the canons of past councils cannot be this judge, there must be another judge to determine their true sense.”—p. 68.

L.—The very same, Sir, as determines the true sense of scriptures.

“G.—And who should that judge be but the Pope, the “head of the church? I am sure, if I were a Roman catholic, I should be on that side.”—p. 68.

L.—The Pope, Sir, is very much obliged to you for your good inclinations towards him. However I presume he will not be less infallible, if the diffusive body of the church, or a general council (when he thinks fit to call one) be joined with him.

“G.—I could show your lordship several other canons “of councils, that are in dispute among your doctors. But “what wonder is it, when I have already showed, that they “are in dispute about councils themselves. It follows how- “ever that there is no certainty, what the judgment of your “church is. Or rather it is certain, that it is most errone- “ous; and in matters that concern eternal salvation, as well “as the peace of the world, that is, rebellion amongst other “things, which is as witchcraft and idolatry.”—pp. 68, 69.

L.—What, Sir! Is her judgment certainly erroneous; though there be no certainty of what her judgment is! That is very hard indeed. But you need not be in pain about the judgment of the Roman Catholic Church concerning the deposing doctrine. For it is certainly her judgment, that it is no article of faith, and may therefore be either held or rejected without danger of heresy. Nay it is generally rejected, as I have already told you. So that you may bestow your witchcraft and idolatry upon what church you please. For the Church of Rome has nothing to do with them.

“G.—My lord, I have instanced in this sin, because I know “your lordship is tenacious of your loyalty.”—p. 69.

L.—Sir, I am obliged to you for your good opinion of me, and I hope I shall always deserve it.

“G.—And now, my lord, since the saving of our souls is “the end for our being in any church, I leave your lordship “to judge whether the people are safest in the communion “of Rome, or in the Church of England as to this point.”—p. 69.

L.—Sir, to prevent all equivocation in my answer, the deposing doctrine may be considered either relatively to the Pope alone, or as it regards all sorts of persons indifferently : that is, precisely as it is justifiable or unjustifiable in the court of conscience. If you consider it with relation to the Pope alone, then the dispute is not whether deposing princes be lawful or unlawful, but whether the power of doing it ought to be acknowledged in the Pope : which reduces it to a mere political controversy, and the holding or not holding it makes no more difference as to the safety of salvation than maintaining contrary opinions about a point of law. So that, although a protestant government (which denies the Pope's deposing power as all protestants do) may indeed have a political advantage over that of a catholic kingdom, which allows it ; yet the church on either side is wholly unconcerned in the question thus stated.

But I presume, Sir, our dispute is not about what is safest in politics, but what is safe in conscience : since you have positively declared the deposing doctrine to be inconsistent with salvation, and contrary to the express doctrine of St Paul. Nay you have equalled it with the crimes of rebellion, witchcraft, and idolatry. Least therefore I should mistake your meaning, give me leave to propose some questions to you. Is the deposing doctrine inconsistent with salvation, only as it regards the Pope? Again, when St Paul says, that they who resist powers shall receive damnation to themselves (which is the very text you have quoted) does he only speak of Popes? Finally, when you told me that deposing is the sin of rebellion, which is as witchcraft and idolatry, did you mean, that it is a sin of this heinous nature, only when it is commanded or authorized by the Pope? Pray, Sir, answer me these questions.

G.—My lord, it is plain my meaning is, that deposing a lawful prince is a most grievous sin, let him command or practise it that will.

L.—I confess, Sir, I took this to be your meaning ; because I could not easily comprehend how a man of your wisdom should maintain that deposing is inconsistent with salvation, and contrary to the word of God, nay stigmatize it with the odious names of rebellion, witchcraft, and idolatry, unless you regarded it as a most grievous sin in its own nature, that is, independently of the character or religion of the persons concerned in it. So that, whether it be practised by protestants or papists, by the Pope, or by protestant bishops, the sin is the same. For though (as I have already observed) there may be very good politic reasons for disallowing a deposing power in a foreign prince, which perhaps will not hold with equal force in relation to the natural subjects of any sovereign, yet reasons of conscience, such as its being inconsistent with salvation, and contrary to the word of God regard all equally: nor is rebellion, witchcraft, and idolatry any more lawful in one person than another.

G.—My lord, I see not what all this drives at, or that it is any answer to what I said last.

L.—Sir, it leads me directly to it. You told me, that since the saving of our souls is the end for our being in any church, you left me to judge whether the people are safest in the communion of Rome, or in the Church of England as to the deposing doctrine. My judgment then is, that whether deposing be lawful or unlawful (for all are not of your mind) you can claim no advantage over us. For if it be lawful, there can be no danger of salvation in a church that holds it: and we are thus far upon equal terms as to the point in question. But if it be unlawful (which is your opinion) believe me, Sir, your church is in a very ill way, and has no reason to challenge any advantage over the Church of Rome. Witness first the revolution, in which your church had the greatest hand; though she was afterwards bubbled out of the best part of the fruits of it. Witness 2dly, the following act passed by both houses of parliament some time after the revolution. If the king and queen shall be reconciled to the Church of Rome, or profess the popish religion, or marry a papist, then such persons shall be excluded to inherit the crown, or have regal power in the realm, and the people shall be absolved of their allegiance. This act was assented to not only by the representatives of the people, but likewise by the representatives of the Church of England, I mean the bishops. Now I believe you will be puzzled to find any thing so clear, so strong, and decisive for the Pope's deposing power in any canon of the Church of Rome, as this act of parliament is for the deposing power of the people of England. And therefore I think I shew myself very moderate in advising you to come to a fair composition as to the point in question; and not to boast or swagger, as if you had some signal advantage over us.

But let all this be as it will; if after all you will needs maintain, that deposing is the same as *rebelli*ng, and stigmatize it with the odious names of witchcraft and idolatry, you may do as you think fitting. But for my part I am not fond of a lodging in Newgate, and therefore will give it no such names; which may perhaps offend the government. This I maintain positively, that the Pope's deposing power is disowned by far the greatest number of Roman catholics. So that there is no danger on that score in the communion of the Church of Rome. Nay in France, where they are sound catholics, no divine dares teach it.

G.—My lord, my dispute is with the Church of Rome. “And if the church of France differs from the Church of Rome in matters, whereon salvation depends, they cannot be said to be one church, or to have the same guides to heaven.”—p. 69.

L.—I take you, Sir, to be extremely out in your casuistry in pretending that French and Italian divines cannot be of the same church, because they differ in their opinions concerning a moral duty; which only obliges a man to follow in practice, what in his conscience he judges to be most reasonable. Is there any thing more common either among protestant or catholic divines than to be of different opinions in deciding cases relating to moral duties? And yet there is not a moral duty, but salvation is more or less concerned in it. Yet this difference makes no breach of communion. And why then will you not vouchsafe to say, that Italian and French divines, though they differ in a moral question, may yet be truly in one church, and have the same guides to heaven?

SECTION XLI.—THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

“G.—But, my lord, the Pope's deposing power extended “itself even to France: of which you will find frequent “instances in history. And even so late as the holy league “against Henry III. All the Popes in that time joined with “the league against the king, and supported the rebellion by “their authority. And the generality of the bishops and “clergy of France, and their universities took part with the “league, and justified it by principle and in print. The “book of the just abdication of Henry III., king of France “was then writ upon the foot of the deposing power, not “only of the Pope, but also of the people.”—pp. 69, 70.

L.—Ay marry, Sir, the deposing power of the people is something: for without it, that of the Pope will do but little execution. But what need of running back as far as the French league for an instance, I mean not of the Pope's, but of the people's deposing power? Have we not one of a much fresher date at home? To wit, the English league, which produced the revolution. And did not the generality of the bishops and clergy of England, and the two universities take part in this league? Was it not justified by principle, and innumerable books writ in defence of it upon the foot of the deposing power lodged in the people? Now, Sir, you may go on.

“G.—D'Avila, in his history of the civil wars in France, “tells us a great and solemn procession was made by order “from the cardinal legate to implore God's assistance (for “the success of the league against the king) in which the “prelates, priests, and monks of the several religious orders “walked all in their accustomed habits. But besides them “armed openly with corslets, guns, swords, and all kind of “arms offensive and defensive: making at once a double “show both of devotion, and constancy of heart to defend “themselves. Which ceremony, though it seemed undecent

“ and ridiculous (says d'Avila) yet was of great use to augment and confirm the courage of the common people. And “ the cardinal legate says in the declaration he published “ to the leaguers; that to acknowledge an heretic for their “ king is the dream of a madman, which proceeds from nothing “ else but heretical contagion.”—pp. 70, 71.

L.—Sir, the ceremony described by d'Avila was certainly indecent and ridiculous. But, as to the cardinal's declaration, does it not express the present sentiments of the Church of England in relation to a popish successor? And where then is the difference as to the safety of salvation?

G.—My lord, the leaguers showed, wherein they placed “ their confidence, and said, they are the most holy fathers “ (the Popes) and the most holy see, that have sent us relief. “ And though many have been called to that holy dignity “ since the last troubles, yet has there not been one of them, “ who has changed his affection towards us. A most certain testimony that our cause is just.”—[D'Avila p. 598.] —p. 71.

L.—Sir, the French leaguers were certainly very much influenced by the authority of some Popes, who sided with the league. But were not the people of Great Britain at a certain time influenced in the same manner by their spiritual guides? I mean, the bishops and clergy? Remember but the history of the seven golden candlesticks, and the prince of Orange's printed declaration, that he was called in by the lords spiritual and temporal, and there will be no room left to doubt of it. I am sorry, Sir, you oblige me to the odious task of recriminating. But since you are so very tart upon the Church of Rome, because some of that communion teach, and some have practised the deposing doctrine, and you even claim a mighty advantage over her upon that head, you lay a necessity upon me to put you in mind of these ungrateful truths, that you may not be so warm in condemning your enemies abroad, for what you practise yourselves at home without any scruple.

G.—To return to the French league, there were six Popes “ during that time, viz. Gregory XIII., Sixtus V., Urban VII., “ Gregory XIV., Innocent IX., and Clement VIII. And they supported that rebellion not only with their blessing it and the authors of it, and cursing the king and all his loyal subjects, who adhered to him; but they sent more substantial relief, viz. 300,000 crowns for the service of the cardinal of Bourbon, whom they had chosen by the name of Charles the tenth against the next in blood, only because he was a protestant: and 15,000 crowns a month to carry on that rebellion with an army of 6000 foot, and 1200 horse to assist these holy leaguers.”—p. 71.

L.—Just so, Sir, did queen Elizabeth the head and foundress of your church assist the Dutch leaguers with men and money against king Philip. And your royal martyr king Charles I., assisted the rebels of Rochelle against Lewis XIII., their undoubted sovereign.

“ G.—The Pope went heart and hand into the work, which he accounted excellently good (says d’Avila) and of wonderful glory and advantage to the apostolic see. And afterwards when the success of the king’s arms had induced several of the clergy, and others to come over to him, the Pope sent his monitory letters to the prelates and catholics commanding them under pain of excommunication, and of being deprived of their dignities and benefices, and of being used as sectaries and heretics, that they should withdraw themselves from those places, that yielded obedience to Henry of Bourbon (so he styled the king) and from the union and fellowship of his faction. D’Avila L. 13, p. 613. And the authority of the Pope prevailed so far at last, that those catholics, who had joined with the king, formed a conspiracy against him upon his delay of changing his religion; wherein the princes of the blood were most violent, and told him plainly to his face, that if he did not perform his promise (to turn Roman catholic) they would desert him, and join with the league. Ibid. pp. 611, 612.”—pp. 71, 72.

L.—Sir, I must beg leave to interrupt you for a moment. You have named six Popes, that sided with the French league. First, it is nothing to the purpose whether they did or no. For if the deposing doctrine be false, the Popes that joined with the league were to be blamed; and it is a convincing proof, that they are not impeccable. But, whether that doctrine be true or false (for it is not my business to decide the question) they did no more than the English bishops and clergy did at the revolution, and have done ever since upon revolution principles. So that, whether right or wrong, they and the Popes have nothing to reproach one another. However you are somewhat mistaken in your number of those Popes that sided with the league. For Maimbourg, whom no man can accuse of being too favourable to the court of Rome, tells us in his history of the French league translated by Mr Dryden p. 67, that Pope Gregory XIII., constantly persisted in refusing to approve the league: and Urban VII. enjoyed the pontificat for so short a time that he could have no part in their counsels. Now, Sir, you may tell your whole story out if you please.

“ G.—After the conversion of Henry IV. and his being “ by that established on the throne, they feared his power,
 “ and therefore the Pope (as now) made less noise with the “ deposing doctrine, which yet he would not disown, but kept
 “ it in petto till a fitter opportunity. But yet it was not car“ ried so covertly, but that even in their sermons wise and “ willing men might know their meaning. Ravaillac, upon his “ examination, alleged the Lent sermons before his assassina“ tion of Henry IV., as the ground and encouragement to “ that execrable fact. But after that magnanimous prince “ had thus fallen a sacrifice to their restless furious zeal, and “ his son succeeded young and fenceless to the government, “ then they set up again the deposing doctrine on high; be“ cause then they durst do it. With which our king James “ does justly upbraid them, particularly his opponent, the “ cardinal of Perron, in his preface to his book entitled a “ Defence of the Right of Kings; for it was but five years after “ the murder of Henry IV. viz. Ann. 1615, that cardinal Per- “ ron, in the assembly of the three estates of France, and in “ the name of the first estate, that is, of the clergy, did reassert
 “ the power of the Pope to depose kings, with this reason, “ that otherwise there had not been any church for many ages “ past, and that indeed the church (he meant the Church of “ Rome) would be the very synagogue of antichrist.

“ But, to come to a fresh instance now on foot, Pere Jou- “ vency, a French jesuit, has lately printed a book at Rome, in “ defence of the Pope's power to depose princes: and the “ unwillingness and shifts of the jesuits at Paris to disown “ him in this, and to disclaim that doctrine fairly and above “ board shews, that it is not yet quite extinguished in France, “ but kept up in the embers as in the reign of Henry IV.

 “ For all, who understand that order of the jesuits, know full “ well that none of them dare print, especially upon such a “ subject, without the approbation of their superiors, and “ that France is not entirely free from the infection. And, “ though the vigour of this king has depressed it very much,
 “ we cannot say it is totally extinguished, or that there is no “ danger of a relapse, whilst the authority of the Pope is “ revered as head of the Catholic Church, and the council of “ lateran is still owned as truly general and infallible, and “ the bishops of France still take an oath of fidelity and obe- “ dience to the Pope.”—pp. 72—74.

L.—Well, Sir, I presume you have now finished your satyr upon the deposing doctrine. But what is it you chiefly drive at?

G.—My lord, I have told you that already. It is to convince your lordship, that the people are safer in the Church of England, than in the Church of Rome.

L.—Truly, Sir, if deposing be a godly work, I own the people to be very safe (as to that article) in the Church of England. But if it be true what you say, viz. that deposing is the same as rebelling; then all you have said, nay though you could say ten times more against the Church of Rome upon that head, is fully answered by these two verses in St Matthew, c. vii. : Why beholdest thou the mote, that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam, that is in thy own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thy own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye. Matt. vii. 3, 5.

However I desire you not to expect that I shall join issue with you in your notion of it, or call the practise of it rebellion, witchcraft, idolatry, and what not! For I am not so void of sense as not to reflect that I live under the protection of a government, which will not perhaps relish such harsh expressions. I likewise remember that not many years ago a certain protestant divine was upon the very brink of utter ruin for presuming to preach up the doctrine of passive obedience, and non-resistance; and an eminent member of parliament, who was one of the managers against him, stuck not to say, that if the doctrine of passive obedience and non-resistance were maintainable, queen Anne had no more title to the crown of Great Britain than my lord mayor's horse. Nor have I forgot that the bold author of Hereditary Right, &c. was condemned to eat the bread of sorrow, and drink the waters of tribulation for two whole years together in the Marshalsea, even whilst the high church had the reins of government in their hands. Now, to deal plainly with you, I have no ambition to be a boarder in that place, and therefore will not meddle with politics. But, whoever will but give himself time to reflect upon the part your church has had in the transactions of above thirty years past, must be surprised to find you so very sharp upon the deposing doctrine, and practice of a few papists, when it was your business to consider first, whether all were well guarded at home. For let me tell you, Sir, this caution is very necessary in disputes: since without it you only put stones into the hands of an adversary to throw at you: nor are any privileged to throw the first stone, but they, who are free from sin.

Now, Sir, I have shewed from undeniable facts, that a man may be a very good protestant, nay a good Church of England-man, though he holds the deposing power of the people, and believes it, and practises it too. Whether therefore that doctrine be true or false, right or wrong, it is certain you cannot condemn those amongst papists, that hold that power lodged in the Pope without condemning your own church in the highest degree. For it is beyond my comprehension, that deposing should be rebellion, witchcraft, and idolatry, when it is commanded by the Pope against a protestant prince, and have nothing of this foul aspect, when it is executed by protestants against a popish prince.

Nay, Sir, you quarrel with us merely for the speculative doctrine of the Pope's deposing power (for there is no great danger of its taking effect) when at the same time the practice of the people's deposing power runs violently on the protestant side; as may be clearly proved from the histories of all the protestant countries in Europe. Alas, Sir, the deposing power of the Pope is but a fleabite to that of the people: and give me leave to tell you, that one act of a British parliament does more execution in the business of deposing than twenty papal bulls. For the Pope can never depose without the people, but the people have deposed many a prince without the Pope. So pray, Sir, let the good old gentleman live quietly at Rome, and meddle no more with him, till he meddles with you.

SECTION XLII.—THE OATH OF THE BISHOPS TO THE POPE IS NO PREJUDICE TO THEIR ALLEGIANCE.

G.—My lord, I must beg your pardon; I have not yet done with him. Nor have you said any thing to what I objected concerning the oath of fidelity, which the bishops of France, as well as others, take to the Pope.

L.—Why should they not? that oath is not inconsistent with their fidelity to the king.

G.—Pray, my lord, let me ask you, is not an oath to be “taken in the known and declared sense of the imposer, for “whose security it is taken?”—p. 74.

L.—Well, what then?

G.—Then the question will be, what the Pope means “by the regalia of St Peter, and all the rights, prerogatives, &c. of the apostolic chair, as he calls his own; to which the “bishops are sworn contra omnem hominem, against all men “in the world? For it is the Pope who imposes this oath, “and it is taken for his security.”—p. 74.

L.—Very right, Sir. But, if the Pope's sense of it be known and declared, as you told me just now, how can there be any question about the meaning of it? I think it very plain, that neither the imposer nor taker of the oath can mean any thing more, than the just rights and prerogatives of the apostolic see.

G.—But, my lord, has he not sufficiently declared what “ he means by the oath? Take it in the words of the proceedings of the parliament of Paris in the Appendix, p. 42, “ where they say that by this decree (of the bullæ cœnæ) the “ Popes declare themselves sovereign monarchs of the world.” —pp. 74, 75.

L.—Surely, Sir, you are seized with a more than ordinary dissipation of mind, to talk thus wildly from the purpose. Our dispute is concerning the oath, which bishops take to the Pope, and you refer me to Mr Talon’s speech in parliament interpreting the bullæ cœnæ according to his own notion. Is Mr Talon an authentic interpreter of the bull? What is it then to the purpose, if in the violence of his heat he tells us, that the Popes by that decree make themselves sovereign monarchs of the world? For my part I find no such thing in the bull; nor do I think it can be drawn as a legal consequence from it.

I add, that rights and prerogatives in an edict signify those, that are certain and uncontested. For in the eye of the law a disputed right is not one absolutely, but at most a probable and reasonable pretension to it. [The Case Reviewed in the preface.] Whence it follows, that the oath taken by the bishops at their consecration to maintain the regalia of St Peter can only be understood of the uncontested rights and prerogatives of the apostolic see; for they swear to no more than what the words of the oath expressly import; and the Pope himself knows very well, that no bishop in the world intends to bind himself by that oath to maintain him in any pretensions, that are prejudicial either to his lawful sovereign, or the ancient liberties of his own particular church.

G.—My lord, this (viz. the Pope’s absolute sovereignty over kings and bishops) is no more than is given at their coronation: as you have it in the Roman pontifical; where “ the triple crown is put upon the Pope’s head with these “ words, receive this diadem adorned with three crowns and “ know yourself to be the father of princes and kings, the “ governor of the world, and vicar upon earth of our Saviour “ Jesus Christ.”—p. 75.

L.—Sir, the words of the pontifical are not improper, and express no more, than the Pope's spiritual supremacy over the whole church, which in scripture language is called the church of all nations, or the whole world; as I have said before. He is vicar of Christ upon earth, as he is the successor of St Peter, to whom Christ committed the care of his whole flock. He is likewise the spiritual father of princes and kings, and the governor of the world in spirituals: because he has a spiritual jurisdiction over the whole church of Christ. Yet all this comes not up to the ridiculous title of sovereign monarch of the world. Because a sovereign monarch is properly one, under whom all others in employment are no more than substitutes, or vicars, placeable and displaceable at pleasure: whereas each bishop governs his respective diocess in his own right; and, as to all manner of episcopal functions, has an independent jurisdiction in it, nor can he be deprived without a canonical fault.

G.—But must not this governor of the world have power “to dethrone all petty kings and princes, that are under him? Else how can he govern the world?”—p. 75.

L.—Just as a bishop can govern his diocess without having the power to absolve children from their duty to their parents, or take their estates away from them, or turn them out of doors.

G.—The Popes think, that this their power of deposing “princes is fully recognized to them in the foresaid canon of the Lateran council: and no Pope has ever yet been brought to disown this power.”—p. 75.

L.—And princes think, that this power is not recognized in that canon. And they have the great body of catholic bishops and divines on their side. And these have never yet been brought to disown their opinion, and yet they are united in communion with the bishop of Rome. Which shews, that the faith of the church is not at all concerned in it.

G.—Nay the Pope is so far from disowning this power, “that he, who most of any asserted this bullæ cœnæ, and set it up high, causing it to be affixed and published not only at the doors of the churches in Rome, but in the field of Flora, that all might take notice, as you find at the end of

“ the bull p. 37. Append. and who practised the deposing power the last in England upon queen Elizabeth, absolving their subjects from their allegiance, and commanding all the catholics in England to pay no more obedience, nor taxes, &c. I say, this same Pope has been picked out to be canonized for a saint this very last summer, Ann. 1712, by the present Pope with all the solemnity and requisites in the Church of Rome for making a saint.”—pp. 75, 76.

L.—Sir, it is God alone makes saints, and the church only declares them to be so. But she never declares any to be so without a moral certainty of the holiness of their lives past, which without a positive revelation is all we can have of the the greatest saints. It is true Pius V. was the last Pope, that exercised the deposing power. But he exercised it upon a person, whose illegitimacy he was convinced of: and he thought it his duty to do justice to an injured princess, the queen of the Scots, whom the crown was judged to belong to by many more besides himself. So that I see no reason why that action should unsaint him.

SECTION XLIII.—THE BULLA CŒNÆ.

G.—My lord, to return to the bullæ cœnæ, this present Pope, as well as his predecessors, do every year thunder out the excommunications of this bull by bell, book, and candle, which like dracansor cuts down friends and foes. For there never was a Roman catholic king in England, or in any other kingdom either before the reformation or since, but is excommunicated by the bull; and by the 24th article past the power even of the Pope to absolve him, unless he first abrogates and annuls all the laws of his country, which are contrary to the tenor of this bull. And this never yet was done, and I daresay never will be done in any popish country in Europe. And there is not, nor ever was any popish country in any other part of the world, unless you will except the late Spanish plantations in America.”—p. 76.

L.—Sir, according to my small knowledge in geography, neither Asia nor Africa are in Europe; and yet they were in communion with the bishop of Rome, and acknowledged his supremacy for many hundred years together, as I have shewed before. But this being wholly foreign to our present purpose, let us consider what you have said concerning our terrible dracansor, which indeed is both curious and new. For it seems he makes clear work once a year, and cuts down friends and foes without distinction: and I presume when friends themselves are cut down, neuters must expect no quarter. So that, as you have ordered the matter, the Pope sends his whole flock to the devil regularly once a year in holy week to prepare them for their Easter devotions. Miserable condition of papists! I hope however matters are not quite so bad as you make them. There are some news-writers, who destroy whole armies in their papers, whilst they are perfectly sound and safe in their quarters: and I am apt to think you have done more execution in two lines, than all the Pope's bulls have ever done since the time of the apostles.

But to give some serious answer to this ridiculous gasconade I shall recite the words of an ingenious author upon this subject. We believe (says he) the Pope is head of the church jure divino. But how far this prerogative reaches is not agreed upon. The council of Florence seems to limit it to the canons of general councils. Quemadmodum et in sacris canonibus continetur. And although many divines stretch it so far as to make all his decrees laws for the whole church, yet this is opinion only, not faith. Nor can we find this doctrine defined in any council, or proposed in any profession of faith, or in any book put out by the authority of the church for the instruction of the faithful. Nay the rules of discipline prescribed by the very council of Trent are not received in many places and provinces, though we believe a general council to be the highest tribunal ecclesiasticul upon earth.

Now the bulla cœnæ regarding discipline and not faith, and containing some things derogatory to the authority of princes (as they think) several states have not received it: and this the Pope knows; yet he never put out another bull to exact obedience, or censured those who refused submission.

Which is a mark, that though he went not beyond his power in publishing it, he left to all states the liberty to receive or reject it, except his own subjects. And besides he communicates as freely with those states that do not receive it as with those that do. Is not this an evident sign, that he regards them not as aliens, but as domestics, and true sons of the church?—But where it is received, it has the force of a law, and the transgressors are as liable to the penalty of this bull, as to that of other laws. [The Case Reviewed. Preface, first Edit.]

The same author (as I mentioned before) observes very judiciously, that liberties and rights in an edict signify those, that are certain, and uncontested. For in the eye of the law a doubtful privilege, or a right disputable on both sides is not a right absolutely, but a probable or reasonable pretension to it.

Whence it follows, first, that the excommunications of the bullæ cœnæ fall only on the transgressors in those kingdoms or states, where it has been received: as the canons of the council of Trent relating to discipline oblige only those countries, that have received it without limitation.

It follows, 2dly, that it only reaches such princes, as invade the known liberties of the church, or the uncontested prerogatives of the apostolic see. And so you will be hard put to it to find a king in danger of dying without absolution, though he never thinks of abrogating and annulling the laws of his own country; which, as you observe very well, never was, nor ever will be done in any popish country: because I presume there never was, and perhaps there never will be any occasion for it. And so the numberless excommunicated kings and princes, you have thrown into your black list, will prove to be like Dr Oate's army of 30,000 Spanish pilgrims,

*Which lay hid on the shore,
And never were heard of since or before.*

But you have said one thing, which is very remarkable, viz., That there never was a Roman catholic king in England or in any other kingdom either before the refor- mation or since, but is excommunicated by the bullæ cœnæ. That is very strange indeed. For several kings of England, and other countries have been canonized by the Pope. And does he then canonize them first, and excommunicate them afterwards! But I long to hear some more news of this terrible dracansor.

“G.—Not only the kings themselves, but all their parliaments, councillors, judges, officers, even to printers and publishers, or any whosoever, that either directly or indirectly, tacitly or expressly violate, depress, or restrain the ecclesiastical liberties or rights of the apostolic see, and holy Church of Rome howsoever and whensoever obtained, or to be obtained, are all here together excommunicated: as likewise archbishops, bishops, and clergy, who shall do the same; and all who shall presume to attempt any opposition or contravention to any thing contained in the bull, are left under the displeasure of almighty God, and his blessed apostles, Peter and Paul; which is the concluding sanction of the bull. And here saints must be joined with God, lest his displeasure should not be sufficient. By all this it appears, that there is hardly any Roman catholic in the world, above the condition of a ploughman, who is not excommunicated by this bull.—pp. 76, 77.

L.—Sir, I think I am something above the condition of a ploughman, yet I thank God, I do not know I ever was excommunicated by the bullæ cœnæ. But I shall put this short dilemma to you. Either the persons mentioned in the bull invade the known liberties of the church, and uncontested prerogatives of the apostolic see, or not. If not, the bull cannot hurt them. If they do, why should they not be punished for their injustice? Has not the church, and her supreme pastor as just a title to the immunities and rights, that have been granted them by the canons of councils, and the liberality of christian princes and emperors, as the people has to liberty and property, or any secular prince to the prerogatives of his crown? Or is the church and clergy so despicable a part of the universe, that they must be treated like bandits, and any man shall be permitted to invade their rights impune? Kings are armed with secular power to do themselves justice; if they be wronged by any other king. But when the church, or her common father is wronged by any prince, they have nothing, but spiritual arms to defend themselves. And therefore the Pope does but act within his proper sphere, when he uses the spiritual sword, I mean, the power of excommunicating, which God has undoubtedly put into his hands, to punish the invaders of his own or the church's rights, together with their accomplices and abettors, let them be as numerous as they please.

However where are those vast numbers of excommunicated offenders? Who are the kings, archbishops, and bishops, that violate, depress, or restrain the ecclesiastical liberties, or undoubted rights of the apostolical chair? I know not where to find them in Europe. Nor have we any news of them from the Spanish plantations in America. I hope then by the grace of God, there may be a good reasonable number above the condition of a ploughman, who as they never transgressed against the bull, never incurred the penalty of it. So that you will be obliged to make some amendments and deductions in your bill; before I shall give my assent to it.

“G.—At least, my lord, you plainly see the Pope assuming a temporal or civil power over all emperors, kings, and princes; limiting them by the 5th article as to the raising taxes upon their own subjects without his express license, and exempting all ecclesiastics from being taxed by them, Art. 18, or being under their power either in civil or criminal causes, as by Art. 19, though it were treason, murder, &c. For which noble principle Thomas Becket, archbishop of Canterbury was canonized for maintaining the liberties of the holy church.”—p. 77.

L.—Sir, had Thomas Cranmer had the honesty and courage to maintain the liberties of the holy church, as his predecessor Thomas Becket did, the English clergy would not be so overawed by the secular power, as they now are. But Thomas Cranmer had something nearer to his heart, than his holy spouse the church, whom he basely betrayed to the cruelty and avarice of an arbitrary prince. And the memory of the one will always be as contemptible and odious, as that of the other is venerable in God's church.

However I never read, that Thomas Becket (as you call him) was ever guilty of murder or treason. For he neither stirred up the people against his sovereign, nor levied troops against him, nor called in forces from abroad, nor met him armed in the field. But tears and prayers were all the arms, he used against his violent persecutor, because he was the Lord's anointed. He truly practised the doctrine of passive obedience and non-resistance; not indeed by a base and wicked compliance, but by a patient suffering of persecution, banishment, and death for justice's sake. For this, and the holiness of his life, attested by undeniable miracles, he was canonized by the church, and Christ himself has canonized all such. Matt. v. 10.

G.—I perceive, my lord, I have warmed your zeal. But what do you say to the three articles of impeachment against the bullæ cœnæ?

L.—Sir, the first is a mistake, and the two latter are frivolous. It is a mistake, nay a thing unheard of, that sovereign princes are limited by that bull as to their raising taxes upon their lay-subjects. Neither has the papal sentence, you refer to, any relation to sovereigns, but only to inferior princes, who without leave from their respective masters oppressed their subjects with unjust taxes. So that the Pope's pretended tyranny, you complain of in this point, is a real vindication of the people's liberties, and the rights of sovereigns.

But, as to the exemption of the clergy from taxes, and secular tribunals, these two privileges of the church are as ancient as the first christian emperors. So that when St Thomas of Canterbury (if I may call him so without offence) stood up for the privileges of the church against the encroachments of Henry II., he only maintained what he had found established before him. And let me tell you, Sir, it is no dishonour to the memory of a good shepherd to leave his flock in as good a condition as he found it.

“G.—But, my lord, I leave it now to yourself, whether,

“ if you were a king, you would desire all the bishops of your kingdom to be under an oath of fidelity to another, who pretended an absolute and civil power over you with authority to depose you, as he has done to several of your predecessors, and would by no means be brought to disclaim such a power, but on the contrary made a fresh claim of it every year, and of his being the sovereign monarch of the world ?”—p. 77.

L.—You say, you leave it to me, whether, if I were a king, I would desire all the bishops of my kingdom to be under an oath of fidelity to another, &c. To deal plainly with you, Sir, if I found by experience, that bishops under that oath were generally more loyal and faithful to their lawful sovereigns than some other bishops, who take no such oath, I should have no reason to be against it. Now I have already shewed that the oath of fidelity, or canonical obedience, which bishops take to the Pope, can never prejudice the just rights of any sovereign. For surely men can render to Cæsar what belongs to Cæsar at the same time that they render to God what belongs to God. And, as to the bullæ cœnæ, it neither calls the Pope sovereign monarch of the world, nor gives him an absolute and civil power over catholic crowned heads, whom all the world knows to be in temporals as absolute in their dominions, as any protestant prince in Europe. Nay far more absolute than the kings of Great Britain, who cannot raise one farthing of money, nor impose any taxes without the consent of the people. For this is the great bulwark of the liberties and properties of English subjects. And why then is it a disparagement to catholic princes not to have the power of levying taxes on the clergy without their own, or the Pope's consent, which never was refused by either in any reasonable exigency of the state ?

Nor does the exemption of the clergy from secular tribunals even in capital causes any ways obstruct the course of justice. For when a clergyman is first tried before the ecclesiastical tribunal, it is not done to shelter him from justice, but to shew a respect to the character he has dishonoured. For, if he be found guilty, he is first degraded, and stripped of the marks of his dignity : and being thus secularized, as I may call it, and thrown into the rank of laymen, he is delivered up to the secular power to be punished as he deserves. So that there is no danger of the Pope's putting in his caveat against it, or intercepting the course of justice in any kingdom whatsoever, though you will needs make him the sovereign monarch of the world.

G.—Nay, my lord, he puts in his claim for more, if more can be thought of, as it is worded in the bullæ cœnæ Art. 24. All the rights of the apostolic see, and holy Church of Rome, howsoever and whensoever obtained, or to be obtained, &c. Howsoever obtained : that is, you are not to enquire whether right or wrong : and whensoever ; that is you are not to go back to antiquity, or the institution, or look farther than the present possession, which with him gives right, when it is for him. And, to be obtained, secures any new acquisitions he can make, and all future pretensions. This is like swearing to et cæteras. And now, I think the plenitude of his power is sufficiently guarded. And all this is included in the regalia of St Peter, and the rights of the Roman church, to which the bishops of France, as well as of other popish countries are sworn, if they take that oath sincerely, that is, according to the known and declared sense of the imposer.”—p. 78.

L.—Sir, it is the first time in my whole life I have been informed, either that the word [rights] signifies prerogatives or possessions got right or wrong : or that the Pope has ever declared, that when his interest is concerned, right and wrong signify the same thing. And, if he never has made such a declaration, a person must be void of shame and conscience to tell me, that this is the known and declared sense of the imposer of the oath in question.

G.—Why, my lord, what do these words then mean, howsoever, whensoever obtained, or to be obtained ?

L.—What do they mean, Sir ! why, every man of common sense and honesty will tell you, that howsoever obtained signifies, whether got by donation, or bargain, or any just way whatsoever, whereby a lawful possession is acquired. And whensoever obtained, imports, whether the title be of a fresh or ancient date. Because a title is equally just and valid, whether it was obtained yesterday, or a thousand years ago. Finally, a right not yet obtained may be obtained hereafter; and when it is obtained, it is as just as those, whereof we are already in possession: and they who wrong the possessor in it are as much guilty of injustice, as if they invaded the rights of a thousand years' standing.

This, Sir, is the true, natural, and obvious sense of the 24th article of the bull. And therefore you are bound to retract your injurious comment upon it; unless you will die guilty of slander in representing the Pope as a profligate villain for imposing a wicked oath, and all the catholic bishops in the world as perjured wretches for taking it.

SECTION XLIV.—SOME TOUCHES OF THE GENTLEMAN'S POLITICS.

G.—My lord, I suspect the bishops of France take that oath but with a very ill will. For it would certainly have been taken away, if that model of government, which was once proposed by the parliament of Paris had gone on. “And it had gone on, but for the success of that confederacy formed by Innocent XI., against the king of France to re-establish his supremacy there.”—pp. 78, 79.

L.—Do you say, Sir, to re-establish his supremacy there? Pray, when was it lost? Has not the Pope always communicated with the kings and church of France? And did you not tell me a while ago, that the Church of Rome by her principles cannot communicate with any, who will not own her supremacy? Pray, save this from a contradiction, if you can.

G.—You interrupted me, my lord; for I was going to tell you, that in order to this confederacy the Pope sent a nuncio to our late king James to invite him to be the head of it. But he, who had learned no other than French popery, “ absolutely refused, and opposed the encroachments of the “ Pope’s supremacy, as appears plainly by his concurrence “ with Mr Barillon the French ambassador, then residing “ with him, to cause the proceedings of the parliament of Paris “ against the Pope’s supremacy hereunto annexed to be tran“ slated into English, and printed at London, Ann. 1688, which “ was the last of his reigning here.”—p. 79.

L.—Surely, Sir, you study to make mistakes. Else how can you tell me, that the proceedings of the parliament of Paris deny the Pope’s supremacy? When every body, that has but eyes to read, can disprove you. They oppose indeed the Pope’s infallibility, and power over the temporality of princes, but in plain and express terms acknowledge his supremacy in spirituals, as I have already shewed, sect. 19. And if you will but do this, and profess the same French popery, as king James did, I assure you, Sir, there will be an end of all disputes betwixt us.

“ G.—However, my lord, the Pope was not content with “ it, and had this for his excuse, that he could not have “ otherwise carried on his confederacy than by concerting
 “ the deposition of king James: who would not have agreed “ to the first of the articles sworn at the Hague by the prin- “ ces, allies, and confederates in February, 1691, and printed “ here at the same time, viz: that no peace be made with Lewis “ XIV, till he has made reparation to the holy see for whatso- “ ever he has acted against it; and till he annul and make void
 “ all those infamous proceedings against the holy father Inno- “ cent XI. These are the proceedings of the parliament of Paris “ here annexed. And in the treaty of king William with “ Spain bearing date, Dec. 31. Ann. 1690, it is stipulated “ Art. 4. That all things in the ecclesiastics (in France) should “ be restored as in their former state. Now, if king James
 “ would not come into these things, was there not sufficient “ reason for the Pope to exercise his deposing power against “ him in the best manner he could? And, if he had such “ power from God, then king James had no injury to com“ plain of as done to him; being deposed by his lawful su“ perior. King James’s fate was certainly very hard. He “ was abdicated in England because he was a papist: and the “ Pope wrought his deposition, because he was too much a “ protestant.”—pp. 79, 80.

L.—I perceive, Sir, you are most deeply read in politics, and will needs have it, that Pope Innocent XI. wrought the deposition of king James: for which you quote two articles agreed to, as you tell me, by the confederates at the Hague, and printed in London. Now every thing is not an infallible truth that is printed in London; and the abovesaid articles appear very extraordinary, because it follows from them, that king William was a more zealous papist even than king James himself; which I have some difficulty to believe. But let that pass, and take it now for granted, that the articles were genuine, where do you find that the Pope had a part in the consultations at the Hague? Had not the courts of Vienna and Madrid both hatred enough for France, and zeal enough for the Pope to concert those articles in favour of him without his being personally concerned in the matter? And if so, it can be no proof, that the Pope was accessory to the deposition of king James. Nay let us suppose he even was concerned in that treaty, which (as you say) was set on foot in Feb., 1691. What connexion could it have with king James's deposition, which was fully completed Ann. 1688. Besides I cannot but think the French are sound papists: and therefore king James being a French papist, as you call him, could be no provocation to the Pope to desire his deposition.

“G.—My lord, such protestants are the French at Rome, “that they are reckoned there to be tolerated heretics.”—p. 80.

L.—Under favour, Sir, that smells as rank of Grub Street as king William's being a papist, and designing to establish Italian popery in France.

“G.—Nor would they be tolerated, if the Pope could “help it. That is, if he durst imitate the example of his “predecessor the new saint Pope Pius V. to depose the sovereign, absolve the subjects from their allegiance, and “interdict the kingdom. But that experiment proved so fatal “to the Pope in England, that it is not likely it will ever be “tried again either in France, or any where else. The thunder of the Vatican is spent, and become a brutum fulmen.”—pp. 80, 81.

L.—That is good news indeed. But why then will you not cease railing at the Pope, since he is never like to give you any farther molestation?

G.—The emperor keeps Commachio still, notwithstanding it is particularly named by the Latin name Comaclum “in the bullæ œnæ.”—p. 81.

L.—So much the worse for him, unless he can justify it before God. And it is more than you or I can tell, whether he can or no.

G.—The 2d article damns all, who appeal from the Pope to a future council. Yet have we not seen it done in form by the king of France, and the parliament of Paris, and that very bull named, and thrown off without any regard?

L.—Sir, it was never thrown off; because it was never received in France.

G.—The whole Gallican church are under excommunication in almost all the articles of it by the four memorable propositions here annexed: which were established in the general assembly of their bishops and clergy, Ann. 1682. Upon which the Pope refused his bulls to the bishops there, as is complained of in the proceedings of the parliament of Paris, and was the ground of their quarrel with Pope Innocent XI. And the learned du Pin wrote his treatise De la Puissance Ecclesiastique in defence of these propositions against all the objections of the Pope, and Church of Rome.”—p. 81.

L.—He did so. And is it any wonder, that in disputes about privileges both sides should write in defence of their own cause? However that be, the four propositions you speak of, were never condemned as heretical by the Pope: but being displeased with the proceedings of the bishops, which he looked upon as disrespectful, he refused to send bulls for the filling up of the bishoprics that were vacant. Nor do I see how those propositions could put the Gallican church under the excommunications of the bullæ œnæ: because the whole subject of that bull being matters of discipline, it does not oblige but where it is received: since even rules of discipline made by the supreme tribunal of the church oblige not all nations equally, as I have already remarked. And where they do not oblige, a non-compliance cannot be punishable by excommunication. And so the four propositions, though never so contrary to the bullæ ecclæ, could not involve the Gallican church in that punishment.

Now then, as to what you have asserted with a positiveness as if you had a revelation of it, viz., that Innocent XI. wrought the deposition of king James, I shall beg leave not to believe one word of your story till you produce some uncontested facts to prove it. Did Innocent absolve king James's subjects from the allegiance, they had sworn to him? Did his holiness give a dispensation to the lords spiritual and temporal to invite the Prince of Orange over? Was it by his orders that the English fleet let him pass, and that the army went over to him? Finally, did he send his bull to authorize the convention to place the crown upon king William's head? For, if he wrought king James's deposition, as you pretend he did, it must certainly be upon record, that he employed some of the means, I have mentioned, in order to it. For I am sure he neither sent men nor money to assist the Prince of Orange.

But is it not ridiculous to run upon a fool's errand as far as Rome in quest of the true instruments of the Revolution, when they may be found without the trouble even of crossing the seas? Why will you needs rob your own church of the glory of it, after she has signalized herself so eminently in that important service? Why must the Pope go away with the honour of an exploit, the maintaining whereof has cost England so much true protestant blood and treasure? Surely king William, who understood the bottom of that business the best of any, never thought himself indebted to his holiness for the success of his expedition. For if he had, he would never have requited his benefactor by suffering him to be burnt in effigy several times a year as long as he lived. But suppose it were so, what is it to our purpose? Do you make no difference between the church, and the court of Rome?

“G.—I understand not the distinction. If you mean “nothing by the Church of Rome but a general council, then “ there is no Church of Rome now in the world. But if there “ be a Church of Rome, where shall we look for it but at “ Rome? And what is it there, but the Pope and his cardi- “ nals? And is not that it which you call the court of Rome?

 “ Where then is the difference?”—pp. 81, 82.

L.—Really, Sir, I cannot but admire your affected ignorance, as if you knew no better than you pretend to do. You tell me you do not understand the difference between the Church and court of Rome. How can that be? Is not the Pope a temporal prince, and a very considerable one as well as head of the church? As he is a temporal prince, he has his court and politics like other princes. But as he is bishop of the diocese of Rome, and head of the church, he is considered purely in a spiritual capacity, and as such he has no court, as that word is usually taken. For St Peter (whose successor he is in spirituals) was both head of the church, and bishop of Rome, yet had no court. And when St Paul wrote his epistle to the Romans, he wrote to the Church, but not the court of Rome. They are therefore separable, and by consequence distinct.

You tell me next, if I mean nothing by the Church of Rome but a general council, then there is no Church of Rome now in the world. But who was ever so ridiculous, as to have such a meaning? For a general council is neither the episcopal see of Rome, nor the diffusive body of the Roman Catholic Church, but the representative of that body. And therefore as there is a British nation in being, when there is no British parliament sitting, so I hope that neither the episcopal see of Rome, nor the Roman Catholic Church lose their being, when there is no general council assembled.

You ask, if there be a Church of Rome, where is it to be looked for but at Rome? I answer, that it is a probable opinion amongst the learned, that neither the city, nor diocese of Rome is the whole Roman Catholic Church, which however we commonly call the Church of Rome.

You ask again, what is there at Rome but the Pope and his cardinals? Go to Rome, Sir, and you will find something else besides the Pope and his cardinals. I hope however they are not the whole Roman Catholic Church.

But I am weary of politics. For that is not our business, but religion; especially since neither you nor I are ever like to be ministers of state. I am a member of the Church, but not of the court of Rome; and will always pay a due submission and obedience to the Pope, as he is the chief bishop, and supreme pastor of the church.

SECTION XLV.—THE SUPREMACY MISREPRESENTED BY THE GENTLEMAN.

“G.—The precedence of bishops is not a matter of that consequence, as to break the peace of the church for it: or which of them should preside in a council. If that were all the difference, the bishop of Rome should have it with all my heart, or any other bishop they should agree upon. And if this were all that is meant by the supremacy of the Pope, we should not trouble the world much about it. But he will not be content with any such thing. The supremacy he claims is no less than an absolute sovereignty over all the churches, and kingdoms of the earth, their bishops, and their kings. And this not by any ecclesiastical constitution, or grant of temporal princes, which might be conditional, limited, and revocable, and would infer their superiority to him; but by a divine and indefeasible right, as successor of St Peter, and heir of all the promises to him, unalterable, unlimitable, and unaccountable to any power upon earth.”
—p. 82.

L.—What a hideous monster have you here made of the Pope! You tell me the supremacy he claims is no less than an absolute sovereignty over all the kingdoms and churches of the earth, their bishops and their kings, unalterable, unlimitable, and unaccountable to any power upon earth. But where is the proof of this exorbitant notion of the supremacy? Not a word of that. Nay I only desire you to name the Popes, who pretended that all bishops were their vicars placeable and displaceable at pleasure; and all kings their deputies and viceregents?

For that is the immediate consequence, if they pretend, as you say they do, to be absolute sovereigns, unlimitable, and unaccountable to any power upon earth.

This therefore is all exaggeration; may the council of Florence in its definition of the Pope's supremacy tells us expressly, that in the person of St Peter he has received from our Lord Jesus Christ full power to feed, rule, and govern the whole church in such a manner as is expressed in the acts of oecumenical councils, and the holy canons.

G.—But does not Bellarmin, and other Italian divines give him a great deal more?

L.—Bellarmin allows him an indirect power over the temporality of princes, and an infallibility in defining doctrinal points juridically. But he is far from being guilty of raising the supremacy to the fantastical height, in which you have placed it. For he tells us expressly (L. 2. de Pont. C. 29.), that as it is lawful to resist the Pope, if he attempts upon our lives, so is it also, if he invades our souls, or raises sedition in the commonwealth; and much more if he endeavours to destroy the church. So that the spiritual supremacy is here declared limitable and accountable by Bellarmin himself, whom protestants usually stile the Pope's champion.

“G.—But when the Pope means one thing by his supremacy, and you mean another, and he has sufficiently declared what he means by it, and requires your owning it, and swearing to it for his security, who deals more sincerely with him, we, who not believing any such supremacy in him, will neither own it, nor swear to it; or you, who not believing it more than we in the sense you know he means, yet own it in general terms, but in a quite contrary sense to what you know he means, and trusts to as his security? We disown it, and fight against it; you fight against it as much as we, yet seem to own it.”—p. 83.

L.—Pray, Sir, answer me this plain question if you can. Where, when, and upon what occasion has the Pope sufficiently declared, that by the supremacy he means an absolute sovereignty over all bishops and kings unlimitable, and unaccountable to any power upon earth? For if you cannot produce any such declaration, as I am sure you cannot, your reflection upon the Pope's pretended meaning, and the oath which bishops take to him, is highly injurious and defamatory. I shall add an observation, which I take to be a positive proof against you.

There never was a book more solemnly and universally approved than the bishop of Meaux's Exposition de la Foy. This book in the article of the Pope's supremacy gives him no more, than what the whole church of France owns to belong to him jure divino. Yet Innocent XI. who was the very Pope, that acted so vigorously against the bishops of France, was so far from censuring it for lowering his supremacy, that he approved it by a special brief writ to the bishop himself, Jan. 4. An. 1679. Which we may reasonably suppose he would not have done, had he meant any thing more by the supremacy, than what he found in the bishop's exposition of it. So that it is literally true indeed, that the Pope has sufficiently declared what he means by it, but in a sense very different from the extravagant notion, you pretend to have of it.

ADVERTISEMENT.—After the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, his lordship is so complaisant as to give all for granted. He only says, that, notwithstanding the supposed extravagant pretensions of the Pope, we still keep communion with him. Which I presume he was made to say only to usher in the following questions.

SECTION XLVI.—OF EXCOMMUNICATIONS.

“G.—My lord is not excommunication putting a man out of his communion?”—p. 84.

L.—Well, what then?

“G.—Can then a man be said to be in the communion of a bishop, who has excommunicated him?”—p. 83.

L.—No, Sir, if he be effectually excommunicated.

“G.—Then none can be truly said to be in communion with the Pope, who are excommunicated by him every year in the bullæ canæ.”—p. 84.

L.—It is certain, Sir, that they, who are effectually excommunicated by that or any other bull, are not in the Pope's communion.

G.—And that is all France, and you, my lord; and all, “who are on your side of the question concerning the supremacy of the Pope. For that is the main, almost the “whole subject of the bull.”—p. 84.

L.—Surely, Sir, you speak by rote, and never gave yourself the trouble to read it. For I do not find any one article concerning the Pope's supremacy in the whole bull; nor any one excommunicated by it for denying the Pope to be the absolute sovereign over all the churches and kingdoms of the earth, their bishops, and their kings, &c.

But what better proof can there be that France is not effectually excommunicated by the bullæ cœnæ, than that all Popes not only communicate with the Gallican church, and have their nuncios residing at the French court, but moreover acknowledge the king of France to be the most christian king, the eldest son of the church, and protector of the holy see? For, if excommunication according to your own notion be putting a man out of his communion, does it not follow that communicating with him is owning in fact, that he does not look upon him as effectually excommunicated by him?

ADVERTISEMENT.—Instead of the answer now given to the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, his lordship to shew his learning tells him, that all casuists agree, that an excommunication does not bind, which is made clare errante, i. e. by a judge that errs. To which the gentleman answers as follows:—

G.—But who is the judge, whether the sentence be pronounced clare errante, or not? And how far the Pope's “authority extends?”—p. 84.

L.—Sir, it is in the business of excommunications, as in all other penalties inflicted by a judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction. For the case is either clear on one side, and then it decides itself. Or it is doubtful, and then the presumption is generally on the superior's side. However, as long as it remains undetermined, both parties are justifiable before God, provided all passion be laid aside; and a sincere conscience be made their rule and guide. Now, Sir, proceed if you please.

“ G.—My lord, the Pope has excommunicated you. All “ of you, as if each one were particularly named. For so it is “ expressed in the bull. On the other hand you despise this “ bull, and say with the parliament of Paris, pp. 44, 45, that “ he is thereby excommunicated himself. And so you have “ a head of the church, who is excommunicated. And so of “ every Pope, who gives his sanction to this bull. That is, “ all the Popes in our time and long before. And from whose “ communion is the Pope of Rome excommunicated? Is “ there any other communion but that of Rome? Is a per“ son excommunicated any longer a member of the church?
 “ And can he then be the head of it? These are matters of “ no small importance; no less than whether we are members “ of the church, or cut off from it. You are cut off, says the “ Pope and the Church of Rome. No, says France to them, “ you yourselves are cut off. And yet these churches are “ the same. And is there no judge in this case? Is every “ man left to his private judgment?”—pp. 84, 85.

L.—Sir, I must beg leave to put a familiar question to you, though perhaps somewhat unmannerly. Pray, Sir, does your pulse beat regularly? For I really fear you stand more in need of physic than an answer. I have already endeavoured to convince you modestly that neither France nor I myself are excommunicated by the bulle cœnæ: yet you will needs have us all excommunicated by it, even in spite of the Pope's actually communicating with us. Then (to complete the farce) we forsooth excommunicate the Pope in our turn, and for proof of it you produce the proceedings of the parliament of Paris:
 whereas to the credit, Sir, of your admirable skill in quoting there is not a word of it in the piece, you refer me to, as I have fully shewed, sect. 19. And have I not then reason to fear all is not well with you? For how should you otherwise talk such wild stuff as this: You are cut off, says the Pope and Church of Rome. No, says France to them, you yourselves are cut off. Whereas every body knows that France and Rome communicate together.

But suppose the French advocate had been so mad as to declare the Pope excommunicated, would any man in his senses take it for granted, that he was therefore really excommunicated? Nay and run descant upon it, as if it were an undoubted fact, and break forth into these vehement interrogatories, and from whose communion is the Pope of Rome excommunicated? Is a person excommunicated any longer a member of the church? And can he then be the head of it? After which you conclude with a serious air, that these are matters of no small importance, and demand very gravely, who is the judge in this case? Why, Sir, the parties on both sides communicating with each other determine the question; nay every man in his right senses will be surprised at your asking it.

“G.—My lord, how have we been teased with that question, who shall be judge? This answers all objections with you. For begin at what point of popery you will, and bring arguments never so convincing, we are always stopped with this question, who shall be judge? And so you refer all to the authority of the church. But when you answer this as to your own case, you will have answered it as to us too.”—p. 85.

L.—Sir, I must beg your pardon. For I have already answered it as to my own case: and you are as far as ever from answering it with relation to any of your pretended reformers. However I do not remember I have yet troubled you with the question, who shall be judge, in answer to your objections: but have made a pretty good shift to stop your career with other answers.

But let that be as it will, the true meaning of the question you speak of is this; viz., who has a better title to be the judge of controversies in religion? The church of Christ, or a private man appealing from her authority to his own private judgment? And let me tell you, Sir, the question thus understood suffices to confound any pretended reformer of the church's faith. But the case is quite otherwise as to the question in reference to excommunications, or disputes about privileges; as is obvious to the reflection of any man, who can distinguish between articles of revealed religion, and facts, that have no relation to it.

“G.—My lord, if the Pope be supreme head of the universal church, he must have power of excommunicating over

“ all in his own communion. That is, according to his scheme “ over all christians in the world. And to dispute the vali“ dity of his excommunication is a total denial of his supre- “ macy, and setting up another supreme above him. And who “ is that? Who is judge, whether his excommunication is “ valid or not? And by what authority does he judge? It “ must be by some authority superior to that of the Pope,
 “ and so he is supreme over the supreme.”—p. 85.

L.—Sir, that the Pope has the power of excommunicating for a just cause is as certain, as that kings have power to punish rebellious subjects. But pray, Sir, is it impossible for me to judge that my superior is mistaken in the exercise of his authority over me without disowning the lawful extent of it? Or do I become superior to him by judging myself wronged by him? What wretched stuff is this! I have heard of subjects that have gone to law with their sovereign, and sentence has been pronounced in favour of them: yet I never heard the sovereign has lost his prerogative or superiority by it. But, Sir, in the question we have before us, viz., whether France be excommunicated by the bulla cœnæ, we need no other judge than the Pope himself who has sufficiently decided the matter. For he knows the bull has never been received by, nor has any force in France: and therefore communicates (as I told you before) with the Gallican church, as with other churches; he has his nuncio residing at the French court. He acknowledges their king to be the eldest son of the church, and protector of the holy see. What do you require more? Is not this declaring in fact, that the Gallican church is not under excommunication? Is it not declaring, that he judges their profession of faith relating to the supremacy to be orthodox; without which it is certain he would not communicate with them?

G.—My lord, if the Pope's excommunication stands “ (without which his supremacy falls) we may say, who can “ be saved? All christian kings and princes that are, or ever “ were in the world, even those of his own communion, par“ ticularly in England as well before the reformation as since,
 “ are all together cursed and anathematized to the pit of hell

“ by the bullæ cænæ. And with them all their bishops, divines, parliaments, judges, lawyers, clerks, printers, and publishers, or any others, who have any manner of way been aiding, assisting, or consenting, though tacitly, to the contravention of their princes to any part of this bull: that is, as I said before, almost every one above the condition of a ploughman, are here all damned by all the authority the Pope has. Therefore have a care of giving him too much. For he will take all any body will give him.”—pp. 85, 86.

L.—Sir, all this has been answered already. I thank you however for the prudent caution you give me not to be too liberal to the Pope. Though you have set me but a very bad example. For I assure you, Sir, you have given him more than the Roman Catholic Church ever dreamt of.

SECTION XLVII.—BELLARMIN AND GRATIAN EXPLAINED.

“ G.—He accepted this from Bellarmin, that if the Pope should command the practice of vice, and forbid virtue, the church were obliged to believe vice to be good, and virtue to be wicked. De Rom. Pont. L. 4, C. 5.”

L.—But pray, Sir, was not Bellarmin put into bedlam, when he taught this mad doctrine?

G.—Not that I ever heard of.

L.—Then by the grace of God we may hope he never taught it. So let us hear out the rest of your story.

“ G.—Nay his own canon law says, that if the Pope were so wicked as to carry with him innumerable people by troops as slaves to hell to be with him for ever tormented, yet no mortal man whatsoever must presume here to reprove his faults, because he is judge of all, and himself to be judged by none. Decret. Part. I. Dist. 40. Can. Si Papa. So then they must keep their reproofs, and not endeavour to stop the career till they are with him in hell; and then I presume his supremacy ceases. Behold the machine of human invention, which God never thought of, nor ever once mentioned, of climbing to heaven by a sort of mechanism upon a ladder of Popes, cardinals, councils, &c. And though we see them leading us by troops to hell, we must give no ob“struction because it would break their machine of being our “infallible guides to heaven.”—pp. 86, 87.

L.—I must beg leave to advise you, Sir, that when you intend to be very witty, you forget not to speak sense, as you have unluckily done this time. For I desire to know what is nonsense, if this be not? viz., that the pretended machine of Popes being infallible guides to heaven would be broke, if they were not permitted to carry as many as they please to the devil without reproof or molestation.

But let us see, what justice you have done either to Bellarmin, or Gratian's canon law, which you miscall the Pope's. As to Bellarmin, the plain meaning of his proposition is this. That if an infallible person (as he maintains the Pope to be) should teach the most impious errors, we should be bound to follow him: which mad supposition, together with its consequence as ridiculous as itself, does no manner of harm, unless you can show, that Bellarmin was so mad as to hold it possible that an infallible person can teach the most gross and impious errors. All therefore that Bellarmin teaches is, that an absurd consequence would follow from an absurd supposition: which is certainly true: as it is true to say, that if a man were a horse, he would not have a rational soul. And if I should maintain this conditional proposition; would it be fair to charge me with holding, that a man has not a rational soul?

As to Gratian's canon law, besides that he is an author of little or no credit amongst us, you have very much misrepresented his words; if coining one part and clipping another may properly be called misrepresenting. For you make it begin thus: If the Pope were so wicked as to carry with him, &c. Whereas the true translation of it is as follows: if the Pope being neglectful of his own salvation and that of his brethren, be found unprofitable, and remiss in his duty; nay and moreover is silent when he ought to speak; which is a greater mischief both to himself and his whole flock: nevertheless draws with him, &c.

Now, Sir, there is a difference between this and your saying, if the Pope were so wicked as to carry with him, &c. For this imports no less than a deliberate design to damn whole multitudes: in which chimerical case no man surely is so mad as to say he might not justly be resisted. Whereas the true words of the pretended canon import no such thing, but only a neglect of his own and neighbour's salvation; a remissness in his duty, and a criminal silence, which may occasion the loss of many souls; in which case it says, he cannot be proceeded against judicially. For the word redarguere can bear no other meaning, as is plain from the reason immediately added to it, viz., because he is judge of all, and himself to be judged by none. However you thought fit to omit the exception immediately following, viz. unless he be found swerving from the faith. Which is clipping a material part of the text: and the reason why you stifled it is plain, because it utterly overthrows what you chiefly charge us with, viz., that the Pope is free to damn as many as he pleases. Nay Bellarmin, the most zealous of all catholic writers for the Pope, teaches expressly, that he ought to be opposed by force of arms if he endeavours to destroy the church. De Conc. Auth. C. 19. L. 2.

ADVERTISEMENT.—It is plain from the gentleman's last words that he supposes the Pope's infallibility to be a part of our faith. And his lordship saying nothing in contradiction to it in the gentleman's Case Stated; he goes on as follows under the same mistake.

SECTION XLVIII.—THE SUBJECT OF CHURCH AUTHORITY, AND PRIVATE JUDGMENT RESUMED.

“G.—My lord, I must have some reason to believe the “Pope such an infallible guide. And I cannot be more “sure of it, than of the truth of that reason, upon which I “believe it. So that all recurs upon my own reason still.
“And if my reason misleads me in this, it is the most fatal “delusion, because it stops all methods of recovery, when “I have once given to another the dominion of my faith.”
—p. 87.

L.—Sir, you run upon a false supposition. For you take it for granted, that the Pope's infallibility is an article of our faith, which I never have allowed of: and therefore your arguing against it, is but beating the air. However since your argument strikes equally at the infallibility of the church, or indeed at any article of revealed religion, I shall give myself the trouble to answer it.

You say, we cannot be more sure of any thing, than we are of the truth of that reason, upon which we believe it. Whence you conclude, that all recurs upon our own reason still. I answer as before, that since all faith is rational, I believe nothing without a solid reason to build my faith upon. But the word reason is equivocal. Because it may be taken for any motive or inducement, for which I assent to the truth of any thing, whether that motive or inducement be human or divine. Thus if any one asks me why, or for what reason I believe the blessed Trinity? I may answer him, because God has revealed it. If he asks me again, why, or for what reason I believe, that God has revealed it? I may answer him, because the church, which all the motives of credibility convince me to be the pillar and ground of truth, has declared it to be a revealed truth. And if you will needs call this recurring to my own reason in matters of faith, you may do as you please; for I cannot hinder you from trifling with words: though I should rather call it submitting my reason, when it acts no other part than to oblige me to believe a thing, which I neither do, nor can comprehend.

However it follows hence that every man's own reason suffices to convince him, that he cannot rationally doubt of any mystery of faith: because it is not rational to doubt of a thing, when we have a moral evidence or certainty of the revelation of it. For surely our reason cannot mislead us in this: nor need we fear the fatal delusion, you speak of, in trusting the dominion over our faith with that church, which the strongest motives of credibility mark out to us to be the true church of Christ, with which all truth is deposited; and which he has promised to lead into all truth unto the end of the world.

“ G.—My lord, the apostles disclaimed this dominion. For “ when they exhorted the churches, they said, not that we “ have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy :
 “ for by faith ye stand, that is, by your own faith. 2 Cor. i. 23.
 “ And if we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel “ unto you ; let him be accursed. Gal. i. 8. Did not this “ make them judges, whether any new gospel or doctrine were “ preached to them ? And our Saviour bid them stick to “ their own judgment, and said unto them, yea and why even “ of yourselves judge ye not what is right ? Luke xii. 57. And “ if I do not the works of my father believe me not, John x. 37.
 “ Was not this appealing to their judgment, whether he did
 “ the works of his father or not ? And as many as followed “ their own judgment, they believed in him. But they who “ were tied up implicitly to the authority of the church, re“ jected him. They said, have any of the rulers, or the “ Pharisees believed in him ? But this people, who knoweth
 “ not the law are cursed. John vii. 49.”—pp. 87, 88.

L.—I have already told you, and I repeat it again, that no authority upon earth is to be obeyed, when it has uncontestable evidence against it ; such as the miracles of Christ were against the authority of the Jewish syna- gogue. So that the people who followed Christ, judged indeed by the light of their own natural reason assisted by grace, that the miracles, they had seen with their own eyes were an uncontestable proof of the truth of his doctrine, and that therefore no authority upon earth could oblige them to reject him. But when they had once formed that judgment, then they believed every thing he taught with an implicit faith according to the direction insinuated to them in the words you have quoted from John x. viz., that, if he did the works of his father (as was manifest both to their reason and senses) then they were bound to believe him. Which was not appealing from his own infallibility to their private judgment, as you have the boldness to affirm, but teaching them their duty of an entire submission to his doctrine.

As to your first quotation from St Paul 2 Cor. i. 23.
 Surely, Sir, you will not renounce your reason so far as to suppose St Paul meant, that he had no power, or authority from God to oblige the Corinthians to believe the doctrine he had taught them, or that he submitted it to their private judgment; and gave them full liberty to examine, change, or reform it as they pleased. And if this be not your meaning, to what purpose do you quote his words? All therefore that St Paul disclaimed was a tyrannical or arbitrary dominion over their faith: that is, he would not have the Corinthians imagine, that because he had been the chief instrument of their conversion to the faith, he had a power to impose any doctrines upon them, or make them believe any thing he pleased.

Your next quotation from St Paul to the Galatians i. 8, is as flat against you as a text can be. But you have omitted a part of it, for his words are these: Though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, THAN THAT, WHICH WE HAVE PREACHED UNTO YOU, let him be accursed. Pray, Sir, did St Paul in these words exercise no dominion over the faith of the Galatians? Did he submit the mysteries he had taught them to the examination of their private judgment, when he would not allow it even to an angel from heaven, and pronounced those accursed, whoever they were, that should pretend to reform the doctrine he had preached unto them? And is not this a rare text for private judgment in opposition to authority?

G.—But did not that text of the apostle make the Galatians judges, whether any new gospel or doctrine had been taught them?

L.—Sir, it certainly made them judges, that new doctrines were not the same as old ones. But it did not make them judges of the truth of the doctrines themselves, which St Paul had taught them. Nay it tied them down to the belief of every thing he had taught them, and obliged them not to receive any other doctrine even from the mouth of an angel.

G.—But what does your lordship say to the text from St Luke xii. 57.

L.—I say, Sir, that it is just as much to the purpose as the first verse of Genesis. Our Saviour in the two or three verses immediately before the text you have quoted reprehends the Jews for being very watchful in observing the seasons, and drawing consequences from them for their temporal advantage, but neglectful in discerning the times of grace and mercy : and then he asks them, why they do not also judge of themselves what is just? And is not this again a most admirable text for private judgment against church authority ? Is this bidding the people stick to their own judgment in opposition to their pastors and teachers ?

Thus, Sir, you have trifled away no less than five texts of holy scriptures at once to support a cause, which, besides its being false, is really no credit to your religion. For in showing yourself thus zealous for private judgment in opposition to church authority, and even wresting the scriptures from their plain and obvious sense to maintain it, do you not plainly give us to understand that your religion is entirely built upon the sandy foundation of private judgment, and has the whole weight of church authority against it ? For why else should you be so fond of the one, and such a declared enemy upon all occasions to the other ?

But can you be so prejudiced as not to see, that by it you undermine the very foundations of all revealed religion ? Do you not see, that it opens the widest gate imaginable for all sorts of sects to break in upon the church ? That it is the source of endless disputes, and tears Christ's seamless garment into a thousand pieces ? I am sure, when you wrote your Christianity Demonstrated you were very sensible of all these inconveniences, and described the fatal consequences of private judgment in the most pathetic manner. And is it then possible, that such an evil should be either authorized by Christ, or have the word of God to vouch for it ? If you now mean by private judgment something different from what you meant before, you only play with words. But if you mean the same (as I am sure every body will suppose you do) you plead for a cause, which you cannot maintain either with truth or honour.

ADVERTISEMENT.—After the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, his lordship suitably to the wise part allotted to him, answers, that it seems strange, that God did not order it so, as that the church should have first known their Messiah, when he came, and have declared him to the people, and then all would have believed in him. Whence the gentleman takes occasion to flourish in the following manner, and trifle away a great many excellent texts of holy scripture.

“G.—The apostle says, that the foolishness of God is wiser than men. 1 Cor. i. 25. And he gives the reason, in the following manner: Why God chose the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, that no flesh should glory in his presence, but he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. And he applies this to the case we are upon, to the Revelation of Jesus Christ, when he came. For, if he had been received upon the declaration and authority of the church, we had gloried in the church, whose authority would have been prior and superior to Christ himself, as being the ground, upon which we believed him. But as the Sun cannot be seen but by its own light, so God and Christ cannot otherwise be known. No adventitious, or borrowed light can show the original light, whence all lesser lights are derived, which like the moon and stars disappear at the presence of the sun. So the church disappeared at the presence of Christ, who was known by his own light only. We beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. John i. 14. Here was going to the church to know which was he; or if you had, she would have misled you. It would have been like going to the moon to ask where the sun is? The church is the moon, and the stars are the particular bishops and doctors, and other eminent men. But Christ is the Sun of righteousness, and will not give his glory to another.”—pp. 88, 89.

L.—Here is a dish of jargon cooked up with the most exquisite skill. Truly, Sir, as great wits are said to border upon madness, so the profound piece of reasoning, you have here presented me with, appears to my dull capacity to border as near upon what we usually call nonsense, as any thing I ever heard or read. But you have larded it so finely with scripture texts, to make it go down; and set it off so beautifully with the glittering ornaments of sun, moon, and stars, that I fear, I shall be thought impertinent to find any blemish in it.

However I shall make bold to criticise a little upon it. First you tell me (and it is the groundwork of all the rest), that if Christ had been received upon the authority of the church, we should have gloried in the church, whose authority would have been prior and superior to Christ himself, as being the ground upon which we believed him. It seems then the Jewish church did well in not receiving Christ, nor declaring him to the people, least by so doing she might have become guilty of the greatest impiety in making herself prior, and superior to Christ himself. However several of the Jews believed in Christ upon the testimony of St John Baptist: yet I never heard any of them blamed for making St John Baptist's authority prior and superior to Christ himself. In like manner after the ascension of Christ, the Gentiles, and many of the Jews before them, believed in Christ upon the testimony of the apostles; for none of them had beheld his glory upon mount Thabor (of which St John speaks in the text most impertinently quoted by you) yet I hope that did not make the authority of the apostles superior to Christ himself.

But, Sir, I ask you, whether we may not believe in God and Christ upon the testimony or authority of holy scriptures? If you say no: then scriptures are no rule of faith. If you say we may, then according to your argument we make scriptures prior and superior to God and Christ. Nay, Sir, you told me a while ago [Case Stated, p. 52] that you received the Old Testament from the church of the Jews. And do you then glory in the Jewish church, and make her authority superior to the word of God? You likewise told me [Case Stated, p. 46] that private judgment is all we have for the belief of God and Christ. And is every man's private judgment then superior to God and Christ? Truly, Sir, I begin to fear that neither sun, nor moon, with all the stars in the firmament, will suffice to give any light to the dark mystery you have advanced.

But you tell me, 2dly, that God and Christ, like the sun, cannot be known but by their own light, because no adventitious or borrowed light can show the original light, whence all lesser lights are derived. But how then is private judgment all we have for the belief of them, as you told me a while ago? Why do you allow that to private judgment, which you deny to the judgment of the whole church with her bishops and doctors? Your reason is, because the church being the moon, and her bishops and doctors the stars, they cannot show us the light of the sun. A very pretty reason indeed! But, if neither moon nor stars can shew us the sun, will the candle or glow-worm of private judgment have light enough to do it?

You tell me, 3dly, that as the moon and stars disappear at the presence of the sun, so the church disappeared at the presence of Christ? What, Sir, did the church cease to be, when Christ appeared? On the contrary, it is an unquestionable truth, that the Mosaic law subsisted in its full force till the death of Christ. For it was precisely then and not before, that the synagogue died, as divines speak. And so it may be much more properly said, that the Jewish church disappeared upon the absence, than the presence of Christ, and your pretty similitude dwindles away into a mere juggle of empty words.

You tell me lastly, that there was no going to the church to know who was Christ: and if I had, she would have misled me. To which I answer, that when Christ began to appear publicly, there was no need of going to the Jewish church to ask, who was he? For he was sufficiently distinguished by his heavenly doctrine, and the lustre of his miracles. Christ himself referred the Jews to these; and by them they might have known him to be the true Messiah; especially if they had consulted the ancient prophets, and their own rabbies, who had interpreted their prophecies of the Messias. But instead of that they studied nothing but to satisfy their private malice and revenge. And this alone was the true reason, why Christ became to the Jews a stumbling block, as St Paul expresses it. 1 Cor. i. 23.

“G.—The stumbling block to the Jews was the authority of their church against him, as I have shewed. And the “ Gentiles could not till after the resurrection have any notion “ of the economy of our redemption by him, nor was he “ preached unto them till after the vision of the sheet to St “ Peter. Acts x. For the gospel was to be preached to “ the Jews first: but when they, rejected it leaning upon the “ infallibility of their church, then it was sent to the Gentiles, “ Acts xiii. 16, who being free from the stumbling-block of “ the church, received it readily, and now make up the whole “ body of the Catholic Church throughout the world.”—

 pp. 89, 90.

L.—This, Sir, is the 3d or 4th repetition of the same story; and the whole force of it amounts to this, viz., That as the Jews were seduced by the pretended infallible authority of the synagogue (which however had uncontestable evidence against it) so Roman catholics are seduced by the real infallibility of their church; against which no such evidence can be produced. And who is able to withstand the strength of such an argument?

SECTION XLIX.—AN INFALLIBLE GUIDE IS AN INFALLIBLE ASSURANCE, THOUGH WE BE NOT INFALLIBLE OURSELVES.

“ G.—But suppose God gave us an infallible Guide, this “ would not be an infallible assurance to us, unless we were “ infallible too. For besides our not knowing him, or mis“ taking another for him (for there have been false Christs), “ we might misunderstand his doctrine, and turn it to “ quite contrary purposes from what he intended. This “ was the case in our Saviour’s time. He was a Guide truly “ infallible, and yet how few followed him notwithstanding “ all his miracles, and heavenly doctrine? Therefore while “ we are fallible ourselves, liable to errors, and mistakes,
 “ in vain do we grope after an infallible assurance otherwise “ than the evidence of things makes them plain to that reason,
 “ which God has given us.”—p. 90.

L.—Do you say so, Sir! Then we are not infallibly sure, that there is one God in three persons, since there is no evidence in the thing itself, which can make this plain to human reason: nay the reason, which God has given us, is seemingly against it. So that I doubt not, Sir, but the whole body of deists in Great Britain will vote you a worthy member of their society for this good and commodious doctrine, which in effect delivers us from the obligation of believing any thing we cannot understand.

But what a strange paradox have you advanced in saying, that an infallible guide can be no infallible assurance to us, unless we be infallible too? Pray, Sir, have not you and I an infallible assurance, that the word of God cannot deceive us? And does not this make us infallibly sure, that, for example, all the historical facts contained in scripture are true? Yet I am far from thinking that either you or I are infallible.

You say, we may mistake our infallible guide, or misunderstand him. If we will wilfully shut our eyes to follow the dictates of interest or passion, we may mistake him. But if we will follow the lights which God has given us; the visible marks, that point him out to us, are so clear, that it is morally impossible we should mistake him. Neither can we misunderstand his doctrine so, as not to know what he teaches; unless you suppose us to be so ignorant as not to know our catechisms. Am not I, for example, infallibly sure, that my guide teaches me, that there is but one God in three persons? It is true, I cannot comprehend this mystery: but I know with an infallible assurance, that I am taught to believe it. And the same may be said of all other articles of faith.

You pretend it was the case in our Saviour's time, who though he was a guide truly infallible was followed by few. But can you find no other reason, why few of the Jews followed him, than because they were not infallible like himself? For if this was the reason of it, then Christ condemned the Jews unjustly, when he told them, if I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin, but now they have no cloak for their sin. John xv. 22. For truly, Sir, you have provided them a very good cloak for their sin; because their being fallible men was not their fault. The true reason therefore, why few of the Jews followed Christ, was, because most of them were rotten at heart: which is also the true reason, why many now a days shut their eyes against the clearest light: and to these indeed the most infallible guide is rendered wholly useless.

G.—My lord, the angels of heaven fell, Adam fell from “his innocence, and the seven bishops, who were the seven stars in the right hand of Christ, Rev. i. 20, and the seven golden candlesticks, the seven churches, in the midst of which he walked; these are all fallen. And what are we, that “expect infallibility?”—pp. 90, 91.

L.—If you had asked me, what are we, that expect impeccability? Your question would have been to the purpose, and I should have had my answer ready for it.

G.—What bishop, what church now is so infallibly seated “as these beloved seven were?”—p. 91.

L.—I will tell you, Sir, what church is so infallibly seated. It is the church of Christ; the Catholic Church; in a word, the church, we profess in the creed. This church, I say, was then, is now, and will be so infallibly seated to the end of the world. And the reason, why notwithstanding all this any particular church may fall, is, because the promises of infallibility were not made to any particular diocese, but to the church of Christ in general: as it is certain by virtue of God’s promise to Noah, that the whole world shall never perish by a second deluge, though several parts of it have already been overwhelmed by the sea.

G.—Pray, my lord, what church has a promise of being “exempted from the general defection, which is foretold will “be before the second coming of Christ, when he shall not “find faith upon earth?”—p. 91.

L.—This, Sir, is the same old story again; twenty times repeated, and as often answered. But if you will needs have a direct answer; the Catholic Church has this promise made to her. Matt. xxviii. 20.

G.—May we not rather think, that the plea of infallibility “in the Church of Rome (so many ways detected) which “hides repentance from her eyes, and hinders her return “from any of her errors, which by this means continually “ flow without any ebbing on any side ; I say, may we not “ think this always increasing corruption the chief cause to “ bring on that universal defection in the latter times ? ”—p. 91.

L.—Alas, poor church ! How is she to be lamented, since the very infallibility, which Christ has promised her, is the source of all her errors ! How happy would she have been, had he never promised her, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against her, nor ever engaged his word, that he will be with her to the end of the world ? Matt. xxviii. 20. For then there would have been no danger of the universal defection in the latter days. But I fear I interrupted you.

“ G.—Does it not seem to hasten apace, to be even at “ the doors, when we see no absurdity so great, no text of “ Scripture so full and express, to be too hard for this infalli- “ bility ?—p. 91.

L.—Sir, just so Arius spoke, when his blasphemies were condemned by the church. For no man ever had a more plausible pretence both of reason, and scripture on his side, than that vile heretic. But what seemed a gross absurdity to him, and contrary to the express word of God, was declared a revealed truth by the infallible church of Christ.

“ G.—Nothing, I say, is too hard for this infallibility ; “ not even the denying all our outward senses, at once, and “ owning that we neither see, hear, feel, taste, nor smell ! ”
 —p. 91.

L.—Sir, your saying, that we own this, betrays either a gross ignorance or insincerity. For we own no such thing. On the contrary, it is a ridiculous absurdity, you constantly charge us with, and we as constantly disown ; as shall be fully proved in its proper place. But since you are in so good a way, it is a pity to stop you. So pray go on.

“ G.—Not the express institution of the Lord's supper in “ both kinds, to which the council of Constance claps a non “ obstante, and takes away the cup from the laity ! Not the “ authority and strong reasoning of the apostle, 1 Cor. xiv., “ against public prayer in an unknown tongue ! All these “ are overruled by infallibility, and many more we have to “ instance in the particular doctrines in dispute with the “ Church of Rome. In all which by virtue of her unlimited and infallible power of interpreting, she leaves no texts of Scripture of any other meaning, than she thinks fit to put upon them, let the words be never so express. And this indeed is no other than taking the Scriptures wholly from us, while we must not tread them with our understanding. And the result of this is, that the whole foundation of our faith is in the Church of Rome without Scripture, or any thing else: because the Scripture and every thing else is put absolutely and implicitly in her power.”

—pp. 91, 92.

L.—A terrible grievance indeed? That the flock should be fed and guided by their pastors! That ignorant laics should not be permitted to interpret scriptures according to their own caprice, but be bound to submit to the interpretation of their superiors, and of those, who are not only wiser and more learned than themselves, but expressly appointed by God to teach and govern them. Acts xx. 28. Sir, though I had no other reason to convince me of the necessity of submitting to the church's interpretation of scriptures, the forced and absurd turns you gave just now [sect. 48.] to about half a score scriptural texts would alone suffice to convince me of it. But as to your flirts at our doctrine of transubstantiation, communion in one kind, and our Latin liturgy, it will be time enough to expose the weakness and injustice of your reflections, when we come to discuss those points in particular. For I assure you, Sir, you shall have full satisfaction given you in every point.

“ G.—My lord, no man alive knows, what this Church of Rome is, or where to be found. I mean, the Church of Rome, to which the infallibility is annexed. For if you travel to Rome, you will see nothing there, but what by a modern distinction you call the court of Rome, where then is this infallible Church of Rome?—p. 92.

L.—Sir, it is the church of all christians the whole world over, united in faith and communion with the bishop of Rome, who is the head of this church. So that all Roman catholics, whether living in or out of Rome, are of the church, but all are not of the court of Rome, I think this answer is precise and clear.

SECTION L.—THE FOUR PRETENDED CONTRADICTIONARY SCHEMES OF LODGING THE INFALLIBILITY EXAMINED.

“G.—Some, my lord, place the infallibility in the Pope alone, as the only heir of St Peter, and living judge of controversy; and therefore above counsels, and the whole body of the church put together.”—p. 92.

L.—Sir, you are always very lavish in bestowing titles on the Pope. You have already made him the universal monarch of kings and bishops; and now you make him heir of St Peter, whose title never was hereditary, but elective. Let us therefore style him St Peter's successor, which title he has by the election of the church, as he has his power annexed to it immediately from God.

However that be, it is true what you say, that many catholic divines place the infallibility in the Pope. But no catholic divine in the world ever placed it in the Pope ALONE. Because the word alone excludes both general councils, and the diffusive body of the church, to which no catholic divine ever denied infallibility in matters of faith. But this was a necessary stratagem to make your first scheme appear to be a contradiction to the rest. So I desire you to keep the word alone to yourself, and then go on.

“G.—Others like not this. And because some Popes have approved heretical, and have been censured and deposed for it; and others of them have proved most wicked and flagitious men, who besides the viciousness of their own lives have filled the world with blood, rebellion, and usurpations in pursuance of the deposing power, they have assumed over princes, for these and other reasons they would not have the infallibility trusted with the Pope, but lodge it in a general council as superior to the Pope with power to reform, and even to depose him.”—pp. 92, 93.

L.—Sir, there is one thing strictly true in this your second scheme, viz., that many catholic divines deny the Pope's infallibility: and all these agree unanimously in placing it both in the diffusive body of the church, and general councils received as such. But as to what you say concerning their opinion, that a general council is superior to the Pope, this is wholly foreign to the question we are upon. For whether that be true or false, I defy you to make good the contradictions you pretend to charge us with in lodging the infallibility.

“ G.—A third party approve of neither of these ways. For as they think a Pope alone without a council not to be infallible, so neither a council without a Pope, who is head of it, and without whom there cannot be a lawful council as no parliament without a king. These are for king and parliament, and place the infallibility in neither Pope nor council apart, but only when both together, and agreeing. But because this will defeat several of those councils, called general, and split others; as when the Pope or his legates withdrew from the council (like a king leaving his parliament) then such was no longer a lawful council, but a schismatical conventicle; as was said of the council of Basil and Constance, &c. And because there have been Popes against Popes, and councils against councils, and that the requisites necessary to constitute a lawful council, and consequently infallible, are some of them disputed, as the authority of summoning and convening the council, and presiding in it, and other requisites allowed by all to be necessary are impossible to be known with any certainty: as, that all the fathers there met should use all diligence to examine and canvass to the bottom every point, that comes before them: and that they should be under no terror or fear of any, nor biassed by party, hopes of preferment, or gain, or any other corrupt passion, but doing all things out of true zeal to the glory of God, and good of the church; otherwise that there is no infallibility follows that council: and this being impossible for any to know but God alone, consequently the infallibility of all councils is rendered precarious, and no certainty at all in them: or rather it is certain by the history of all councils called general, that these human passions not consistent with infallibility, had an influence in all, or most of them. So that we cannot be certain of the infallibility of any council, unless we are infallibly sure, that none of these human passions had a mixture in it.

“ This makes a fourth party in the Church of Rome: that is, of those, who place the infallibility neither in Pope, nor “ council jointly or severally, but in the church militant, as they speak. That is, the church diffusive, or all churches up and down the world. We must then travel and learn. Here is a wild mark, and we are plainly left at last to private judgment to collect and compare, to approve or reject what we find scattered in all the distant churches upon the earth. And no man’s life or capacity will be sufficient to make the inquiry in any tolerable measure.

“ And now, my lord, which of these four sorts of infallibility will you take? There are three to one against you, choose which you will. And all these are of the Church of Rome. And what difference is there betwixt having no guide, or one you cannot find?”—pp. 93—95.

L.—Sir, he that cannot find him, must be wilfully blind. But since you are so generous as to give me my choice, I need not deliberate long upon the matter. For the whole body of catholic divines has already made it for me, and it is with them I place the infallibility both in the diffusive body of the church, and its representative a general council truly so called; that is, approved, and received as such.

And now, Sir, I challenge you to make good what you tell me, viz. that there are three to one against me, choose which I will. Nay I only demand of you to produce one single party of catholic divines against me. They, who place the infallibility in the Pope, will not surely be against me: for no man in his senses will allow the Pope to be infallible by himself, and deny him to be so, when he delivers his judgment at the head of a general council, or with the whole diffusive body of the church. I am also secure of having those on my side, who (according to your second scheme) place the infallibility in a council without the Pope. Unless you suppose them to be so void of reason as to maintain, that a council, which is infallible without the Pope, becomes fallible when he agrees with it, and approves its decrees.

Where then is the party of catholic divines, which you pretend to draw up against me, to be sought for? Truly, Sir, you must be at the trouble of travelling to terra incognita, or the world in the moon, to find such a party. For I am sure it is not to be found in any part of the known world. And have you not then a great deal of reason to triumph over me as you do, as if I were entirely at a loss to know where to find my infallible guide? Nay are you not bound to retract what you told me a while ago [Case Stated, p. 63] viz., that there is no greater difference and confusion among any sort of men upon any subject whatsoever, than there is among the divines of the Church of Rome concerning her rule of faith, and infallible judge of controversy. And every one of the different opinions about it is in flat contradiction to all the others; so that if any one of them be true, all the rest must be false? Pray, good Sir, how can that be? Suppose I lodge the infallibility in the Pope, does that take it away from the church? Or suppose I lodge it in a council, does that take it away from the Pope? Again, is it impossible for the church collective to be infallible, because the church diffusive is so? But this, you say, is a wild mark, and we must travel and learn. You may learn if you please, Sir; but you need not travel very far to inform yourself of any doctrinal point taught by this infallible guide. As for instance; is there any need of your going to Paris, Rome, or Toledo, to know for certain whether the doctrine of transubstantiation be taught in those churches? You may as well tell me I must travel to Constantinople to know whether Mahomet be worshipped by the Turks. Now let us examine your objections against the infallibility of general councils.

First, you say, that in some councils called general the Pope and council have disagreed. Popes have been against Popes, and councils against councils. This is true in relation to the councils of Pisa and Constance: both which were opposed by Benedict XIII. and Gregory XII. two doubtful Popes before, and deposed in the council of Pisa. These Popes had also their conventions against one another, which they called councils. But did they disagree either among themselves, or with the councils of Pisa and Constance about matters of faith? No, Sir. The whole difference was about a matter of fact, viz., the validity of their election. And what is that to the purpose?

2dly, you say, that in some councils called general, the Pope, or his legates withdrew from the council: and for this you quote the councils of Constance and Basil, and conclude from it that then they were no longer lawful councils. As to the Pope's withdrawing from the council of Constance, the fact is unquestionable. For John XXIII. withdrew privately from Constance, intending thereby to frustrate the principal design of that council, which was to extinguish the schism by obliging him to resign the pontificate, as he had promised to do at his election, in case it should be demanded of him for the good of the church. His election therefore was only conditional; and his escape to elude this end being a breach of the condition, upon which he had been chosen, he justly forfeited his title: but the council lost nothing of its authority any more than if the Pope had died. In effect, being soon after taken, and imprisoned by the emperor Sigismund, he was solemnly deposed.

But the case of the council of Basil is very different. For there the Pope did not abandon the council, but by his authority removed it to another place, and was followed by the greatest part of the bishops and clergy. But a few bishops, and many of the inferior clergy separated themselves from the Pope and council, continued to meet at Basil, and styled themselves the general council of that place: but was never regarded as the true council of Basil.

3dly, you tell me, that the requisites necessary to constitute a lawful council, and consequently infallible, are impossible to be known with any certainty. To which I answer, that the requisites to constitute a lawful council are as easy to be known by learned canonists, as the requisites to constitute a lawful parliament are known by able lawyers.

You have ushered in your last objection with a long flourish upon the several passions and defects of human nature, whereby men are apt to be biassed in their judgment, and you conclude from it, that we cannot be certain of the infallibility of any council, unless we are infallibly sure, that none of these passions had a mixture in it.

I answer, that if this will defeat the infallibility of councils, it will likewise defeat the infallibility of scriptures: because they were certainly writ by men subject to the common passions and defects of human nature. For, according to your way of arguing, how can we be infallibly sure, that St Luke, for example, who wrote the life of St Paul, was not swayed by affection, and that he is wholly impartial in his relation? How can we tell that the authors of the canonical epistles used all the care and diligence possible in their search after truth? This is your argument; and if it be good against the infallibility of councils, you have furnished the deists with full as good a one against scriptures.

But, Sir, you do not reflect, that as a blind man following a sure guide can no more miss his way, than the guide himself, so fallible men directed by an unerring hand walk as securely in the paths of truth, as if they were infallible themselves. Now when Christ chose bishops and pastors to be the rulers of his church, he knew them to be fallible men, and subject to passions: and for that very reason he promised them an infallible guide, who should govern and direct them, overrule all the infirmities of human nature, or even make them become subservient to his own designs. Our dependence therefore is not on the personal merits of any assembly whatsoever; but we depend entirely upon God's promises; which can no more be defeated or obstructed by human passions, than the eternal designs of his infinite wisdom by the constant vices and follies of mankind.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The gentleman, in his Case Stated, having harangued from p. 89, to p. 95, without any interruption from his peaceable antagonist; his lordship at length breaks silence only to proclaim the victory of his adversary, and owns frankly, that he knows not where to find his guide. Which having done, he laments the condition of mankind in being destitute of an infallible guide to conduct him to heaven. Whereupon the gentleman expostulates with him in the following manner.—

SECTION LI.—OF TAKING UP RELIGION BY EDUCATION, AND HOW REASON IS TO BE CONSULTED IN THE CHOICE OF IT.

“ G.—You may as well find fault with the creation. Shall the clay say to the potter, why hast thou made me thus? Who was the guide to the angels that fell? Who was guide to Adam? Who was, or who is guide to all the earth? To the heathens, to Mahometans, to Jews? These last stiek to their church as an infallible guide, and therefore are most obstinate, and the most inveterate enemies to christianity.”
—p. 95.

L.—Sir, they that stiek to a church as an infallible guide, when that church has uncontestable evidence against it, are only fit to be sent to the hospital of incurables. And this has been the case of the Jews ever since their reprobation, as I have already proved. But with your good leave, Sir, it is not the case of the Church of Rome, as you are pleased to insinuate.

“ G.—Who is guide to infants and idiots? And shall we interrogate the Almighty what will he do with these, or why he created them? And perhaps the greatest part of mankind die before they come to the years of discretion. And when they are of age, how few are capable to judge, or have opportunity or capacity to examine the different pleas betwixt church and church, religion and religion? And do we not see the generality of the world take up their church and religion just according to their education? My lord, if you and I had been born and bred in Turkey, we might have been Mahometans.”—pp. 95, 96.

L.—Perhaps we might, Sir, and we might also have been damned for it, if being come to years of discretion we should have neglected the necessary means of coming to the true faith. For let me tell you, Sir, I never read that education was ever reckoned by the ancient fathers amongst the marks of the true church: or amongst the motives of credibility by any divine in the world. Though by your way of speaking one would be apt to think, that education is as good a guide as any under heaven.

As to the questions, you have proposed concerning the guide of the apostate angels, Adam, heathens, Maho- metans, Jews, infants, idiots, &c. I should be glad to know, what reference those questions have to the subject of our dispute. For the question we had just now before us was, whether I could find my infallible guide? And I think I have marked him out very clearly to you. In effect, nothing is of moment in reference to this question but only to know, who is the guide to christians! And this is easily determined. For there can be no other than the true church of Christ: and the pretence of having been educated in this or that religion will be no excuse to those, who, when they are come to the perfect use of reason, are capable of examining, whether they be as truly members of the church established by Christ, and his apostles, as of the church established by law. For I presume religion is not to be taken up merely by chance according to the place where we are born, or where we receive our education.

G.—No, my lord, truth is truth, though all the world “should depart from it. And there have been converts of all nations and religions, but none, where men cannot be persuaded to overcome the prejudice of education, and examine impartially for themselves.”—p. 96.

L.—All this is very right. I wish it may hold. So pray go on.

G.—But infallibility barrs all examination. For that “implies a doubt, and brings us to private judgment, and where then shall we wander?”—p. 16.

L.—Sir, I suspected you would not keep long in the good way you were in. But, what is worse, you relapse into a mistake I have already confuted at large [sect. 36.] for I told you then that the church's infallibility hinders no more our examining the grounds of our religion, than the infallibility of scriptures, of which I hope you never doubted.

G.—Examination brings us to private judgment, as I told your lordship; and you must apply to every man's private judgment, when you mean to make him a convert to your church. Why else do you argue or reason with him.”—p. 96.

L.—Sir, examination brings us to the right use, but not the abuse of private judgment. For it brings us to a clear knowledge of the guide we are to follow, and a full conviction, that it is the most reasonable thing in the world to submit our private judgment in things we do not understand, to the direction of this guide. And when we will make a convert of any person, we argue and reason with him to bring him to this conviction.

G.—Must he not then examine all the arguments and motives, you give him for the infallibility of your church, and judge for himself, whether they are well grounded, and will bear the test of reason?—p. 96.

L.—He certainly must. And therefore we propose the motives of credibility, or marks of the true church to him, that he may examine them thoroughly. For they are proportioned to the capacity of every man of a sound and unbiassed judgment.

G.—But must every body then have reason, and examine but yourselves? Believe it, then you are in the most dangerous condition of any, and you are the men, who receive your religion by chance just according to your Education.—p. 96.

L.—That is very strange, that we should reason others into a belief of the grounds of our religion, and be ourselves void of reason. For will not the same motives, with which we convince others, suffice to convince us too? And can we be convinced by them without examination? You therefore talk at random in saying we receive our religion by chance.

G.—Suppose any one should return your own answer to you, and say, I will not examine, I am infallibly sure, and I will hear no more. What would you think of such a man? Every enthusiast will tell you the same. He will take his oath that he is infallible, and will hear no more than the deif adler the charms of reason. But he will bid you silence your reason; for that is it which blinds you, though Solomon calls it the lamp of God, which he has planted in our hearts. Prov. xx. 27. It is the image of God in which he has created us, and will be our witness and judge in the last day, as it is given us for our guide here.—p. 96.

L.—It is so, Sir. But you make a very ill use of it at present in talking rather like a man in a raving fit, than one that is guided by his reason.

G.—My lord, instead of trimming this lamp to make it “burn clearly, we hear the general cry on your side, put it out, put it out. We cannot deal with you till that lamp be “extinguished: it thwarts us at every turn, and starts a “hundred objections, that we cannot believe peaceably for “it. But when it is quite taken away (if that were possible “to be done) then you offer to shew us a metcor of infalli- “bility (about which yourselves are not agreed, nor know “where to find it) which will keep us from ever doubting any “more. As when a man’s eyes are put out, he cannot see “a dirty step, or a precipice before him; and then he is in “that state of security you propose.”—pp. 96, 97.

L.—No, Sir, we propose no such state. We desire no man to put out his eyes, but we would not have him trust them farther, than they can see. We therefore advise him to take a guide, and be directed by him in a road he knows nothing of, and where he will certainly miss his way, if he has nothing but his own eyes to trust to. For this is our very ease in the business of revealed religion. Reason is the eye or lamp of man’s soul, as you have justly observed, and faith is the way we must walk in during our pilgrimage upon earth. But the mysteries of faith being above reason, it is a way our reason knows nothing of, and it will certainly lose its way, if it trusts wholly to itself. It therefore stands in need of a guide to conduct it. But who is this guide? For many false ones offer themselves upon the road; and all depends upon our choosing the true one, which can be no other than the church of Christ. But how, and where is this church to be found? Here is the difficulty, and danger of choosing wrong. For Lutherans say they are the true church. Calvinists say the same. Anabaptists, Quakers, and many more put likewise in their claim. And yet there is but one true church of Christ; as there is but one God, one baptism, and one faith; and there can be no more.

Here then (pray mark me well) we say not to men, you must not examine. We say not to them, shut your eyes, renounce your reason, put out your lamp (as you most unjustly reproach us) but on the contrary we exhort them to examine with all the diligence possible the grounds and motives of their religion. Because these being the principal inducements of their embracing one church preferably to another, if a false step be made in this, it cannot but be attended with a train of the most fatal consequences, and mislead men into the grossest errors.

Here therefore we bid them open their eyes, and make use of all the reason, God has given them to find this church, which is to be their guide. Nay we warn them moreover, that in this examination they must lay aside all the prejudices of education, and give a deaf ear to all the alluring motives of interest and ease. That therefore they must not consider, whether the church they are of, be the prevailing church of the country, where they are born: whether it be most favourable to their liberty and ease; or finally, whether it be the church, in which they are most like to make their fortune; but whether it has all the true and essential marks of the church of Christ? As, whether it has always had a visible being since the time of the apostles? Whether the doctrine it teaches has been confirmed by undoubted miracles? Whether the faith it holds, has been preached to all nations? Whether it has had a succession of bishops and pastors, and a mission derived from the apostles themselves, &c. For these, Sir, are the true marks of the church of Christ: these point out to us the guide we are to follow: and these we exhort all men to examine, and inquire into by the clearest light of that reason, which God has given them: and would to God all men would examine them with the seriousness and impartiality, which the importance of the matter requires.

It is therefore false what you say, that we forbid people to examine the grounds of their religion. It is false that the general cry on our side is to bid them put out the lamp of their reason, as if we were afraid of its light. On the contrary, as we defy any man's reason to find the marks of the true church on your side, so every man, that follows the light of an unbiassed reason, will find them all clearly on ours, and they will stand the test of the strictest examination, as I have fully showed. Sect. 36.

G.—But, my lord, though you allow people to examine before they come to you, do you not oblige them to shut their eyes, when you have once caught them in your nets?

L.—Sir, if the meaning of your question be, whether we oblige them to discard their reason? I answer we do not. For we oblige them to nothing, but what reason itself obliges them to. But the same reason, which bids us examine the grounds of our religion, and inquire diligently into the marks of the true church of Christ, the same reason, I say, tells us that we must obey this church, when we have found it, and pay an entire submission to its decisions. So that we follow reason in the one as well as the other. Nay we reason ourselves into an entire submission of our private reason.

Pray, Sir, when a man has chosen a guide for a journey, does not his reason tell him; that he must be directed by him? When a sick man has chosen an able physician, must he not follow his prescriptions? Or when an ignorant client has chosen an eminent lawyer to manage his cause, would you have him dispute points of law with his lawyer? Or will he not act more prudently in submitting to his directions? Now this is the very case between a man's private judgment, and the church of Christ. Reason first leads him to this church, with which God has deposited all truth: and then the same reason tells him, that the revealed mysteries, whereof she is the depository, being above his understanding, he is bound to submit to her in every thing she teaches. And if this be not acting rationally I know not what is. But how do you deal with those, who are out of your church, in order to make converts of them?

G.—We have no other method with them, than to reason on still with them, and shew them, that reason is on our side.—p. 97.

L.—The method is very good, if you can shew it effectually.

G.—Vast multitudes of them have been converted; even

“ all christian churches now in the world, for all of them are “ of the Gentiles.”—pp. 97, 98.

L.—Sir, all the christian churches, you speak of, were converted by papists: Great Britain amongst the rest. And I should be glad to know, what heathen nation has ever been converted by protestant missionaries.

G.—As for those, who yet remain unconverted, or have “ not had the Gospel sufficiently proposed to them, we must “ leave them to God, who made them, and will require from “ no man more than he has given them, but will judge all “ people righteously. Of this I have spoken before.”—p. 98.

L.—Yes, Sir, I remember your new invented machine of uncovenanted mercy, and have delivered my opinion upon it.

SECTION LII.—NO SALVATION OUT OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

G.—But I observe, that since this notion of Infallibility “ came into the church, it has rooted out all charity, and her “ religion has been chiefly employed in cursing and damning
“ all the world but herself. Her councils are tagged with “ anathemas upon every occasion, and you hear little in them “ who shall be saved, but every page is full of who must be “ damned. And the bulle cœnæ pins the basket, and leaves “ very few to escape even of the Roman catholic communion “ itself.”—p. 98.

L.—Sir, we have had enough of the bulle cœnæ already; so I shall only make some remarks upon your observation; which indeed is very curious. For if infallibility, and cursing with anathemas came into the church together, then I am sure infallibility is full as ancient as St Paul; who cursed both men and angels, and himself also, if he or they should presume to teach any other doctrine, than what he had preached. Gal. i. 8. Besides, Sir, the canons of the four first general councils are tagged with anathemas as well as the Lateran council, and that of Trent. And since your church allows of the four first general councils, and that, by consequence, the church was then in her purity, your observation is an unanswerable proof against yourself, that infallibility was then the doctrine of the church. Now, Sir, go on.

“G.—It is a common argument, with which your priests frighten women and children, viz.: You protestants say, that it is possible for a papist to be saved: but we papists say, it is impossible for a protestant to be saved: therefore it is safer being on our side. But this has turned to their confusion. For, as there is nothing in it but a confident averring, it shews that they have no charity, which is greater even than faith itself. 1 Cor. xiii. 13. And therefore that they can be no christian church. Their want of charity being by this much plainer than our want of faith.”—p. 98.

L.—It seems then, that St Paul, and the ancient fathers, who pronounced all heretics damned, were wholly void of charity, and according to your consequence were no members of the christian church.

How void of charity was St Cyprian, who wrote in the following manner? Whosoever, says he, leaving the church cleaves to an adulteress, is cut off from the promises of the church. And again, if it were possible for any to escape, that was not in the ark of Noah, it shall likewise be possible for him to escape, who is not in the church. Cyp. de Unit. Eccl. St Austin was as uncharitable as St Cyprian, for he wrote thus: Being out of the pale of the church separated from its unity and bond of charity, thou wouldst not escape damnation, though thou shouldst be burnt alive for confessing the name of Christ. Epist. 204. ad Don. And St Fulgentius was no less uncharitable than the other two; witness the following words: For neither baptism, nor liberal alms, nor death itself for the profession of Christ, can avail a man any thing in order to salvation, if he does not hold the unity of the Catholic Church. S. Fulg. ad Petrum Diaconum. C. 39. Lastly the Athanasian creed is most highly guilty of the want of charity, you accuse us of. For it damns all, who believe not every article it contains. And yet this creed is highly approved by your church.

Now as to the argument you speak so contemptibly of, I assure you, Sir, it has frightened persons of better sense than those you call women and children. Nor has it ever turned to our confusion, as you are pleased to tell me. Nay common sense alone suffices to convince any man that salvation is more secure in that society, in which it is allowed even by its enemies, than in that, in which it is only allowed by those, who are themselves members of it.

“G.—Take Chillingworth's answer to it, c. 7. of his works, p. 306. You (says he to Knot the jesuit) vainly pretend that all Roman catholics, not one excepted, profess their protestancy unrepented destroys salvation. From which generality we must except two at least to my own knowledge: and these are yourself, and Franciscus de Sancta Clara; who assures us that ignorance and repentance may excuse a protestant from damnation, though dying in his error. And this is all the charity, which (by your own confession also) the most favourable protestants allow to papists.”—pp. 98, 99.

L.—I am surprised, Sir, you should give me this answer of Chillingworth, and approve of it. For, if catholics allow salvation to protestants in the case of ignorance and repentance only, and if this be all the charity, which the most favourable protestants allow to papists, I cannot imagine, how this will agree with what you told me this very moment, viz., that we have no charity and therefore can be no christian church. What, Sir! can you unchurch us for want of charity, and remain yourselves a christian church, when you profess to have no more charity for us, than we have for you?

As for Mr Knot the jesuit, and Franciscus de Sancta Clara, I cannot see they say any thing more than what catholic divines commonly say; viz., that invincible ignorance excuses from the sin of heresy as it does from other sins. Because whoever is invincibly ignorant, is so disposed at heart in the sight of God, that if he knew himself to be in an error, he would renounce it, cost what it would. And such a one is virtually within the pale of the church, provided he uses all endeavours possible to come to the knowledge of the truth.

“G.—Militiere was persuaded that king Charles I. was happy in heaven, because he preferred the catholic faith before his crown, his liberty, and life. Now it is known

“ to all the world that king Charles lived and died in the “ communion of the Church of England, which he declared
 “ with his last breath upon the scaffold. But archbishop “ Bramhal gave him this answer: That which you have con- “ fessed here concerning king Charles will spoil your former “ demonstration, that protestants have neither church nor faith.
 “ But you confess no more here than I have heard some of your “ famous Roman doctors at Paris acknowledge to be true in gene- “ ral. And no more than that which the bishop of Calcedon
 “ (a man, that cannot be suspected of partiality) has affirmed “ and published in two of his books to the world in print, “ that persons living in the communion of the protestant church,
 “ if they endeavour to learn the faith, and are not able to attain “ unto it, but hold it implicitly in the preparation of their mind,
 “ and are ready to receive it, when God shall be pleased to reveal “ it (which all good protestants, and all good christians are) “ they neither want church, nor faith, nor salvation.”—pp.
 99, 100.

L.—Sir I do not see, what advantage you can draw from the bishop of Calcedon's words. For he plainly supposes all protestants as such to be without faith: since it cannot be said of a person, who already has faith, that he endeavours to learn it, and is not able to attain to it. His meaning then can only be, that protestants, who endeavour, but are not able to come to the knowledge of the truth, may be saved, if they be so disposed in their hearts, that they are ready to embrace and profess it, whenever God shall be mercifully pleased to bring them to the knowledge of it. Because whoever is so disposed (which I fear is not so common a thing as you seem to imagine) whoever I say, is so disposed, is virtually within the pale of the Catholic Church, as I have already said, though he be outwardly in the protestant communion. And in this catholics generally agree with the bishop of Calcedon, because invincible ignorance excuses from sin.

As to Militiere, it is the first time I ever heard him named. But I do not comprehend, how any demonstration should come to be spoiled by his saying, that Charles I. (whom he supposed to have died a catholic) was happy in heaven. I am indeed but too much inclined to be of your mind, that Mililiere was mistaken in his supposition. But allowing that king Charles died in the bosom of the Catholic Church, which according to his principle implies, that he was inculpably ignorant of the true faith, he had all the reason in the world to think him happy in heaven. Nor could archbishop Bramhal conclude any thing from it against his former demonstration, because he supposed the king died united to the Catholic Church.

G.—Then no protestant, at least no protestant king, need “despair.”—p. 100.

L.—Sir, neither protestant king nor protestant subject needs to despair, if you can prove them to be reunited to the Catholic Church.

G.—But to the divines I have mentioned, let us add “some royal testimonies. King James I., in his Premonition to Christian Monarchs, tells us, that his mother (queen Mary) “as she was ready to lay her head upon the block, sent him this message; that although she was of another religion, than that, wherein he was brought up, yet she would not press him to change, except his conscience forced him to it: not doubting but if he led a good life, and were careful to do justice, and govern well, he would be in a good case in his own religion.

“This was perfectly agreeable to the sentiments of his grandson the late king James II., who often spoke to those divines, who had the instruction of both his daughters, to be diligent in making them religious and good christians in the way of the Church of England without so much as hinting at any change of their principles towards the Church of Rome: as I have heard myself from two of them, Dr Turner late bishop of Ely, and Dr Ken late bishop of Bath and Wells. And neither before, nor after his coming to the crown would he suffer any attempt to be made upon them as to religion; of which there is an eminent witness now alive, who knows if I speak truth. And when a certain zealot pressed him to endeavour their reconciliation to the Church of Rome, and offered his service for that purpose, the king answered, No, let them alone, they are so good: they will be saved in any church.”—pp. 100, 101.

L.—Alas, that poor prince did not then foresee, that those two good protestant daughters would soon after send their popish father and mother a begging. However that be, as to the first of your royal testimonies from king James I., I will not presume to give him the lie. But I dare boldly give it to the person, whoever he was, that brought the message. For it seems it was not sent by letter, but delivered by word of mouth. And how easy was it for the messenger to go beyond his commission, and forge the latter part of his message; both to flatter the king, and make catholics appear to contradict one another; and so cast an aspersion upon their religion; which was a popular thing, and the way to please at that time.

That queen Mary should tell her son, that she would not press him to a change of religion, unless his conscience forced him to it, may very well be. But that she should add, that he would be in a good case in his own religion, provided he lead a good life and governed well, is wholly improbable, and inconsistent with common sense. For either she was convinced in conscience, that her son might be saved in the protestant religion, or not. If not, then she acted against her conscience in sending such a message to him; and that, in the very moment, she was going to lay her head upon the block: which cannot be suspected of such a pious princess, as she certainly was. But if she was convinced in conscience, that her son was safe in the protestant religion, then she must have judged, that it was equally safe for herself: unless she could think, that the same religion could save one, and damn another. Now her actions and sufferings are a demonstrative proof, that she never thought herself safe in the protestant religion, since she chose to lose her crown, liberty, and life, rather than conform to it.

Add to this, that Sanderson, a protestant historian, who relates every minute circumstance of her death, and particularly a message she delivered upon the scaffold to her servant, Mcville, mentions not a word of the message you speak of.

I find the very same improbability and incoherency in the latter part of your story concerning king James II., whatever vouchers you may pretend to have for it. For all the world knows, that king James suffered as much for his religion as any prince, we shall read of in history. Nay all his sufferings were attended with the most mortifying circumstances, that could give an aggravation to them. This renders it unquestionable, that he had a full conviction of conscience, that he could not be saved in the protestant church. And is it consistent with common sense to believe, that a person under this conviction should say, his children would be saved in any church whatsoever?

You say, he forbade the divines, that had the instruction of his children even to hint at any change in their principles towards the Church of Rome. But nothing can be more unlikely than this story. For no man forbids a thing, but when there is some danger or probability of its coming to pass: and king James knew very well, that the divines, who were about his children, had such a mortal hatred to popery, that though he had commanded them to tamper with them, they would not have obeyed him. There was therefore no manner of occasion to forbid them to do it. Nay he might as well have forbid them to preach judaism to them as popery. I believe indeed he never molested his children about their religion. For as he gave free liberty of conscience to all his subjects, it was not reasonable that his own children should be the only persons excluded from the benefit of it. But he could never be capable of such a gross solecism in practice, as to declare his children safe in that religion, which he had renounced himself upon a conviction of conscience, that he could not save his soul in it.

“G.—Yes, my lord, he might think his own religion best for himself without thinking those in any hazard, who were sincerely of the Church of England, and lived up to the rules of it.”—p. 101.

L.—Sir, when you convince me that king James was a latitudinarian in religion, then I shall be of your mind, that he might think one church best for himself, and another better for his children. I am sure he could not think his own religion best for himself as to this world; and if he only thought it best as to his future happiness, he could not but have the same opinion of it with relation to his children.

G.—However king James did not think it unlawful to be “present at our common prayers, because he heard them at “his coronation.”—p. 101.

L.—But did any man in the whole nation look upon his being present at your common prayers on that occasion as a distinctive mark, whereby he professed himself to be of the protestant communion, or that he therefore approved of your liturgy? No surely. Nor can you conclude from what he did at his coronation, that therefore he thought it lawful to be present at your common prayers in other occasions. For if he had, he might have kept the crown upon his head.

G.—My lord, what is lawful once, is lawful always.

L.—I beg your pardon, Sir. For the same external action may be lawful or unlawful as circumstances vary. As for instance: a case of necessity may oblige a virtuous person to go into very scandalous company, where it would be unlawful for him to appear at other times. And the same action may give great scandal at one time, and none at all at another. If I should go upon Sundays to hear prayers at my own parish church, where most of the congregation know me, every body would conclude I came with a design to conform: because going to church in that manner is regarded as a distinctive mark. But if I went only out of curiosity to hear the parson exercise his talent in a place, where I am not known, I should give no handle to any one to interpret it as a renouncing of my own religion. It is plain then that the same thing may be lawful in one circumstance, and unlawful in another. Now the circumstances of king James being present at your common prayers were such, as rendered it impossible for any man to interpret it either a dislike of his own, or an approbation of your liturgy or communion. Nor can you, by consequence conclude from it, that he did not think it unlawful to be present at your common prayers in ordinary occasions; as I am sure no Roman Catholic thinks it lawful.

SECTION LIII.—POPE PIUS V. WAS NOT THE AUTHOR OF THE ENGLISH SCHISM.

“ G.—My lord, formerly they thought it lawful, for after “ the reformation the Roman catholics of England came to “ our churches, and to our common prayer without any scruple.
 “ And this continued till about the tenth year of the reign “ of queen Elizabeth, when Pope Pius forbade it by his Bull.
 “ So that he made the separation. And if he had not suf“ ficient power to do it, or that there was not sufficient “ cause for it, then he made the schism too, and it lies “ wholly at his door. Now it is the undoubted right of “ every national church to reform, alter, and model their own “ liturgy, as shall be most convenient; provided there be “ nothing put into it, that is contrary to the faith: which is “ not so much as alleged against our public offices. They “ have a Breviary at Milan, and other places different from “ that at Rome. And in England before the reformation there “ were diverse in several dioceses. As what was used in “ the church of Salisbury, of Hereford, of Bangor, of York, “ of Lincoln, &c., as is mentioned in the preface of our Com“ mon Prayer-book concerning the service of the church.
 “ But these differences did not break communion; nor did
 “ the alteration made at the reformation, till the Pope by “ the plenitude of his supremacy, and to be revenged upon “ queen Elizabeth, took upon him to break the communion.
 “ For which, as there was no sufficient cause, our liturgy being “ all orthodox, even our enemies being judges; so on the other “ hand the Pope’s supremacy did not extend to break in “ upon the rights and liberties of any national church, as has “ been, and is still maintained by the whole Gallican church, “ and others the most learned in the Church of Rome. And,
 “ my lord, I know some Roman catholics of figure, and good “ sense in England, who merely upon this account have come “ over to our church, and thought themselves obliged to re“ turn to the communion of their national church, and to heal
 “ the breach made by that excess of the Pope’s supremacy, “ which no sober man on this side of the Alps will own. It “ is strange to own it in fact, and deny it in words. Who“ ever owns this bull of Pius V. for breaking communion in “ England, must also own the full extent of the bullæ cænæ, “ which has his authority in a particular manner, as well as

“ of all the Popes since. And it damns almost all papists “ as well as all who are not papists.”—pp. 101—103.

L.—What, Sir! Will you never leave off baiting that poor bull? But we have now a question of greater moment before us, to wit, whether Pius V. was the author of the English schism, which you boldly affirm, and endeavour to prove from a fact, which upon examination will appear to be a gross mistake. You say, that after the reformation the catholics of England came to your churches and common prayer without scruple till the tenth year of queen Elizabeth. This, I say, is a gross mistake, because your meaning (to be any thing to the purpose) must be, that either the whole body of Roman catholics; or at least the most eminent part in England came to your churches and common prayer; and that they did it upon a full persuasion of the lawfulness of it. For whoever does a thing without scruple, unless he be an atheist, is convinced in conscience, that he may lawfully do it. Now it is neither true, that the whole body of Roman catholics or the most eminent part did conform: nor that they who conformed, did it without scruple.

I prove the first from Dr Heylyn, who writes thus (p. 286, 3d Edit. London): It was upon the 8th day of May, that the parliament ended (viz. 1. of Eliz.) and on the 24th of June that the public liturgy was to be officiated in all the churches of the kingdom. In the performance of which service the bishops giving no encouragement, and many of the clergy being backward, it was thought fit to put them to the final test, and either to bring them to conformity, or to bestow their places and preferments upon more tractable persons.

In the same page he tells us, that many of the bishoprics being vacant when queen Elizabeth came to the crown, there were no more than fifteen living of that sacred order. And of those fifteen only one conformed, viz. Kitchin of Landaf; who (as Dr Heylyn remarks) having formerly submitted to every change resolved to show himself no changeling in not conforming to the pleasure of higher powers. So that no less than fourteen bishops of fifteen refused to conform, and were accordingly deprived of their bishoprics.

In the next page he tells us, that besides the fourteen bishops, six abbots, priors, and governors of religious houses (that is, all that were at that time in England restored by queen Mary) twelve deans, and as many archdeacons : fifteen presidents, or masters of colleges : fifty prebendaries of cathedral churches, and above eighty parsons or vicars were deprived of their preferments.

But Mr Rishton, who lived in those unhappy times, and could not but know what happened, relates that great numbers of the laity, and many eminent persons of both universities quitted the kingdom, and chose to undergo a voluntary banishment rather than comply with the times. Many also of the Inns of Court were turned out of their places for non-compliance. And it is notoriously known, that the few religious houses, which queen Mary had re-established, as the Nuns of Zion, the Carthusians of Richmond, and the Friars of Greenwich entirely refused to bow their knees to Baal; left the kingdom, and sought a refuge in foreign countries rather than conform contrary to the dictates of their conscience.

Now, Sir, give me leave to propose a question. Suppose all the bishops but one of great Britain, and many of the best character amongst the inferior clergy, and laity should refuse to take the oath of abjuration, I ask, whether in that case it would be true to say, that the protestants of the Church of England take the oath of abjuration without scruple? Surely no. Because when we say absolutely, and without restriction, that the protestants or catholics of England do such or such a thing without scruple, the natural and obvious meaning of it is, first, that either the whole body, or at least the most eminent part do it. And 2dly, that they do it by principle. And how can it be said, that either the whole body, or at least the most eminent part of a church does a thing, when all the principal heads and rulers of that church refuse to do it? Or how can the conforming party, though it be the greater in number, be said to do it by principle, when those, who are their spiritual governors by divine appointment, their guides of conscience, and judges in matters of religion, declare against it both by word and deed? Since therefore all the catholic bishops but one, all the abbots and religious that were then in England, and many of the most eminent amongst the inferior clergy refused to conform, it is false to say absolutely, that for the ten first years the Roman catholics came to your churches and common prayer without any scruple.

G.—Your lordship must own at least, that the greatest part of the catholic prebendaries and rural clergy conformed.

L.—Whatever they did, I deny they did it by principle, and without scruple: and unless they did it by principle and without scruple, your argument from their outward conformity for the lawfulness of your liturgy is not worth a rush. For it will only prove, that the greatest number in conforming acted contrary to their conscience. But let us once more hear Dr Heylyn. The bishops (says he p. 287) being thus put to it, the oath is tendered next to the deans and dignitaries, and by degrees also to the rural clergy: refused by some, and took by others, as it seemed most agreeable to their consciences, or particular ends.

The doctor is so modest as to leave it undecided, whether they, who conformed, did it for conscience sake, or particular ends. But a few lines after he explains himself pretty well. But then (says he) we are to know withal, that many, who were cordially affected to the interest of the Church of Rome dispensed with themselves in these outward conformities: which some of them are said to have done upon a hope of seeing the like revolution by the death of the queen, as had before happened by the death of king Edward: and otherwise that they might be able to relieve their brethren, who could not so readily frame themselves to a present compliance. I think we may modestly conclude from these words of the doctor, that the prebendaries and rural clergy he speaks of, did not conform without some qualms of conscience: unless they forgot the old maxim, that evil is not to be done, that good may come of it.

But I must here observe to you, that the oath mentioned by Dr Heylyn was the oath of supremacy, whereby the Pope's spiritual power was utterly disclaimed. And this oath was tendered to all persons without exception, that enjoyed any ecclesiastical benefice, whereof they were deprived immediately upon their refusing to take it. Those therefore that continued in their deaneries, prebends, or parsonages, and conformed to the new liturgy to save their bacon, had all swallowed the oath; and by that very act renounced the communion of the Church of Rome. They were not therefore Roman catholics, when they conformed, but apostates from their religion. And all you can infer from their conforming is, that they, who turned protestants without scruple, came to your church and common prayer without scruple, which no man will ever dispute with you.

As to the laity, they, who had not strength enough to weather the storm, were forced into a compliance by the severity of penal laws. And let me tell you, Sir, that when a person conforms merely upon force, and goes to church like a bear to the stake, it is no mark of his doing it without scruple. However many among these to silence as well as they could the murmurs of an uneasy conscience, pretended that there could be no great harm in a mere outward conformity, as long as they remained sound catholics in their hearts. But they were vigorously opposed by others, who abhorred this scandalous trimming and dissimulation in matters of religion: and so the case was sent up to Rome, and the Pope decided it in favour of the latter; declaring such an outward compliance to be unlawful; as being a distinctive mark of a protestant from a catholic, and a denial of the catholic religion in fact.

G.—But was not then Pope Pius the author of the separation, and by consequence of the schism?

L.—Sir, he separated, if you please, the corn from the chaff; and true catholics from false ones: as St Paul did, when he commanded Titus to avoid the company of an heretical man after the first and second admonition. Tit. iii. 10. And as he forbade the Corinthians to keep company with scandalous sinners. 1 Cor. v. 11. But as to the separation, or schism between the Church of England and the Church of Rome, how could Pope Pius be the author of a separation, which had been made ten years before he sent his bull? For when queen Elizabeth came to the crown, she found the Church of England perfectly reconciled and united to the Church of Rome; and in the first year of her reign she dissolved that happy union, undid every thing her predecessor had done, divested the Pope of his spiritual supremacy and broke all communication with the Church of Rome. All this, I say, she did in the very first year of her reign. And if this was not making the separation of the Church of England from the Church of Rome, both words and actions must lose their natural meaning.

Pray hear what Dr Heylyn says upon this subject: When the act of supremacy came to be debated, it seemed to be a thing abhorrent even in nature and polity, that a woman should be declared to be the supreme head on earth of the Church of England. But those of the reformed party meant nothing less than to contend about words and phrases, so they might gain the point they aimed at, which was the stripping the Pope of all his authority in these dominions. p. 280.

This then was the point they aimed at, viz.: The renouncing and abjuring the Pope's spiritual power in England. And this point was effectually carried, though but by the majority of two or three votes, in that very parliament which was the first of queen Elizabeth. And therefore as the parliament in queen Mary's reign reunited the Church of England to the Church of Rome by owning the Pope's supremacy, so this very parliament of queen Elizabeth separated the Church of England from the Church of Rome by renouncing the same supremacy.

But pray, Sir, let me ask you, whether after this act of parliament, wherein the Pope was thrown off, the Church of England was in communion with the bishop and Church of Rome? This, Sir, is a puzzling question. Because you cannot be so void of reason as to say she was;

and if she was not, as it is certain she was not, then her communion with the Church of Rome was broke by the queen and parliament. And is it not then ridiculous to say, that Pope Pius made the separation and schism by a bull sent full ten years after the breach had been so effectually made? Really, Sir, I cannot but wonder that a man of your sense and learning should undertake such a defenceless cause.

As to what you say, that your liturgy is all orthodox even your enemies being judges, I should be glad to know what Roman catholic divine ever gave his approbation of it. I am sure I never heard of any. Nay, if it were worth my pains, I could mark you out several parts of it, which would never be acquitted by a popish jury, nor found orthodox, your enemies being judges.

What you have alleged concerning the diversity of Breviaries or Missals, that were in England before the pretended reformation, or are still in use in our churches, makes nothing against us. For besides that they are approved by public authority, they all agree in every essential point of worship. Nor do they contain the least word contrary to faith, or omission in favour of heresy. And therefore it is no wonder, that this diversity should cause no breach of communion. Whereas your liturgy is guilty of both, if we be judges.

But suppose your liturgy were all orthodox that would not justify our being present at it, unless your Thirty-nine Articles were likewise orthodox. Because we do not think it lawful to communicate in public prayers and sacraments with any but those, with whom we also communicate in faith. Whence it follows, that Pope Pius had sufficient cause to forbid our coming to your churches. And as to his power or authority to do it, you will have a hard task to make good your plea against him, unless you can prove either from the word of God, or the practice of antiquity, that queen Elizabeth had a better title to the spiritual supremacy over Christ's mystical body in England, than the successors of St Peter, who had held it for the space of 900 years by a title never contested till the 23d of Henry VIII.; and then only in order to bring about the most unjust, and scandalous design.

G.—But, my lord, has not every national church an undoubted right to reform, alter, and model their liturgy, as they please? And is not this maintained by the whole Gallican church? Or has the Pope a right to break in upon the rights and liberties of any national church?

L.—No, Sir, he has not, provided those rights and liberties be not only well grounded, but also maintained within their just bounds, as we must suppose the Gallican church does; since we hear of no breach of communion between her and the Church of Rome. But if the Gallican church should pretend to reform her liturgy, as the Church of England did in the reign of queen Elizabeth, to the prejudice of the public faith and discipline of the church, you might then freely reckon them amongst your protestant brethren. For I am sure the Church of Rome would not own them for her children, nor her king for the eldest son of the church, as she now does. I therefore answer your first question directly, that no national church has a right to reform, alter, or model her liturgy to the prejudice of the public faith, for the encouragement of heresy, or in opposition to canons universally received.

As to what you say, that you know some Roman catholics of figure, and good sense, who thought themselves bound to return to the communion of their national church: the persons, you speak of, may be men of figure, but I very much question their good sense, unless you mean the sense of flesh and blood, which is generally most prevalent in men of figure: because they have the most to lose by our religion, and are most like to gain by conforming to yours.

G.—But, my lord, do any of those, that have once left your communion, ever return to it? And if they do not, does not that shew, they are fully satisfied?

L.—They, Sir, who change for interest, liberty, and ease, cannot but be fully satisfied to find all these charming advantages in your communion, and will not easily come back for the sake of persecutions, restraints, and penance. However many have come back, particularly upon the approach of death, when men are serious if ever, and all worldly motives give place to that of securing their souls. And it is a remarkable observation, which I desire you to take notice of, that whereas thousands, who have been brought up protestants from their infancy, have desired to die Roman catholics, I defy you to name me one single person, who having been brought up a Roman catholic, from a child, ever turned protestant upon his death-bed.

G.—And what does your lordship conclude from thence?

L.—I conclude from it, that popery is the safest religion to die in, even our enemies being judges. And if it be the safest religion to die in, one needs not the wit of an Aristotle to conclude it is also the safest to live in.

ADVERTISEMENT.—After the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, p. 103, there is a little scuffle betwixt him and his lordship about the word papist and Roman catholic. His lordship likes neither the one, nor the other, and will only be called catholic absolutely. The gentleman lays claim to the same title for his church, and discourses as follows :

SECTION LIV.—PROTESTANTS ARE NO PART OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

“G.—We call ourselves catholics too, and in the same sense, and pray every day for the catholic church in our liturgy. Therefore we call not you catholics, because it would not distinguish you from us: but Roman catholics is calling a part of the whole.”—pp. 103, 104.

L.—You need not be afraid, Sir, that calling us catholics will not distinguish us from you, or any protestant church in Europe. For go to what country you please, where there is a mixture of Roman catholics and protestants, and we are perfectly well known by the name of catholics; I know this to be true in Holland by my own experience, where if a stranger asks the first protestant he meets with, where the Catholic church is, he will never direct him to his own church, but to some popish chapel.

The like observation was made near 1300 years ago by St Austin writing thus in his book De vera Rel. C. 7. We must hold (says he) the christian religion, and the communion of that church, which is catholic, and is not only called so by her own children, but by all her enemies. For heretics and schismatics, whether they will or no, when they speak not to their own people, but to strangers, call catholics catholics only. For they cannot be understood, if they give them not that name, which all the world gives them.

Now I am sure St Austin was no other than a Roman catholic, as appears from his following words, contra Epist. fund. C. 4. Thirdly, says he, a succession of bishops descending from the see of St Peter to whom Christ after his resurrection committed his flock, holds me in the church. Then he proceeds to the same observation upon the word catholic as before. Lastly (says he) the very name of catholic holds me: of which this church alone has not without reason so kept the possession, that though all heretics desire to be called catholics [pray, Sir, mind this] yet if a stranger asks them, where catholics meet, none of the heretics dare point out his own house or church.

Thus, Sir, it has been the vain ambition of heretics in all ages to be styled catholics, in order to cover the infamy of their new-broached doctrines, and upstart church with that honourable title. But truth and good sense have always prevailed: their efforts have proved vain; and they never were able to gain it to themselves, or dispossess the legal owners of it.

However let us examine the thing seriously, and go fairly and plainly to the bottom of the cause. Pray, Sir, what does the word catholic mean?

G.—Why, my lord, it is a Greek word, and signifies universal.

L.—Very right, Sir. And you know there is a twofold universality belonging to the church of Christ, viz, universality of time, and universality of place. And therefore it is ridiculous for any church to assume to herself the title of catholic, unless she can shew, that the faith she professes is universal both as to time and place. Now then let us consider, whether the faith of the Church of England (as it differs from popery) can be called universal either as to time or place.

The church's universality in respect of place must certainly be understood in a limited sense; or it will follow, that Christ never had a Catholic Church upon earth: because there never yet was a time, wherein her communion was so universally received by the whole world, but that great numbers of heretics, and several heathen nations were out of it. Yet in scripture language both of the Old and New Testament she is styled the church of all nations. First, because she is the great body of christians, from whence all went forth, as I have fully proved before. And 2dly, because she either has been, or will be in every nation of the world. That so all nations may be blessed in the seed of Abraham according to the promise made to him, Gen. xxii. 17, 18, and the prophecy of Isaiah xlix. 6, and liv. 1—3.

'This, Sir, is the true meaning of the church's universality in respect of place. But her universality in respect of time is without limitation. That is, it suffices not, that she be the church of many ages, as the Arians and Nestorians have been ever since the 4th century, but it imports, that she has been the church of all ages since the time of the apostles. Whence it follows that catholics truly so called are the standing body of christians throughout all ages, from which all christian societies of heretics and schismatics have been cut off, as so many branches from the body of a tree, which continues standing and growing, whatever branches are lopt off from it.

Now, Sir, let us see, whether the Church of England can make good her claim to universality either of time or place: is she the great body of christians, from which all heretics and schismatics went forth ever since the time of the apostles? Alas, she came forth into the world near 1500 years too late for that. Can she be styled the church of all nations? she, I say, who but a little more than 160 years ago was not the church of any one nation in the world? Have the Thirty-nine Articles, which contain a profession of her faith, been ever preached in France, Italy, Spain, or any nation under the sun, but what belongs to the crown of Great Britain? No man is so mad as to say they have.

It is then a plain case, that she has no universality of place even in the limited sense, in which it is always understood. And as to universality of time (which from the very first preaching of the gospel is without limitation) she may as well pretend to date her faith and religion from the time of Noah, as from the time of the apostles. For how is it possible she should? Since popery was in possession of the whole kingdom of England for 900 years before the reformation: nay and the book of Homilies declares that whole Christendom was drowned in abominable idolatry (meaning popery) during that whole space of time. And where then was the protestant Church of England all that time? Where was her doctrine of the Thirty-nine Articles in those nine centuries? Where was her succession of protestant bishops, whilst the protestant religion had no being? Was she a christian church, and yet in no part of Christendom? For in Christendom I am sure she could not be, because whole Christendom was drowned in popery even our enemies being judges. The plain truth then of the matter is, she had no being at all till about the middle of the 16th century, and she wants about 1500 years of universality of time. So that you may as well style yourselves antediluvians, as catholics. Nay you cannot say you believe the Catholic Church, or pray for her, as you say you do in your liturgy, without bantering Almighty God.

G.—But, my lord, how can your church be the Catholic Church properly speaking, since you are not called catholics absolutely, but only Roman catholics, which is but a part of the whole?

L.—Sir, if by Roman catholics you only mean those who belong to the diocese of Rome, they are but a part of the whole. But this is not our meaning, but your darling equivocation. On the contrary, we mean the whole diffusive body of christians, which is in communion with the successor of St Peter (who actually is, and has always been bishop of Rome) and is therefore called the Roman Catholic Church.

“G.—If this be the frame of the Catholic Church it must “have been so always.”—p. 104.

L.—Sir, the essential frame of the Catholic Church has always been the same: and no particular church has ever been a part of the Catholic Church, if it was not in communion either with St Peter, or his successors, who have always been bishops of Rome.

“G—Pray then, my lord, tell me what particular church “was so called in this sense, before there was a christian in “Rome? And how that church came to lose it? And how “was it translated to Rome?”—p. 104.

L.—To these wise questions I answer, that neither any particular church, nor catholics in general were called Roman catholics before there were christians at Rome: nor had they that denomination generally given them till after some ages: and it is impertinent to ask how a name was lost or translated before it was given. But are we disputing about names or things? If St Peter had fixed his see inmoveably at Antioch, and not translated it to Rome: and if Antioch had always been the episcopal seat of his successors, it might have happened, that in process of time the diffusive body of christians in communion with the successors of St Peter would have been called the Antiochean instead of Roman Catholic Church. But would a difference of name have made any difference in the essential frame, or constitution of the church? Really, Sir, you are put to hard shifts, when you are forced to lay a stress upon, and give an air of importance to such a wretched argument as this, viz.: The Catholic Church was not always called Roman, ergo, the Roman Catholic Church is not the Catholic Church absolutely.

“ G.—My lord, every church, and every member of it “ may be called catholic, as being included in the general “ notion of the catholic church. But in the sense you have “ mentioned as head and principle of unity to all churches, “ no bishop or church ever had it till taken up in latter times “ by the bishop of Rome.”—p. 104.

L.—Sir, whenever it may reasonably be questioned, whether Julius Cæsar and Augustus were once emperors of Rome, it will not be then unreasonable to question, whether the bishop and Church of Rome were owned by all antiquity to be the head and principle of unity to the whole Catholic Church. I have fully proved it in the beginning of our conversation, and therefore will not trouble you with tedious repetitions. But as to what you say; that every church, and every member of it may be called catholic, as being included in the general notion of the Catholic Church, if you speak of such particular churches or persons, as are in the communion of the true Catholic Church, the thing is true, but nothing to the purpose, unless you prove the Church of England to be in the communion of that church. But it is utterly false, if you speak of heretical or schismatical churches, as all new raised communions are, and as I have fully proved your church to be.

ADVERTISEMENT.—Here the gentleman in his Case Stated intending to make an harangue of about five pages without interruption, had no way to introduce it but by making his lordship ask this notable question. L. But how came the bishop of Rome to that great sway, he has long obtained in the church? To which the gentleman answers as follows.

SECTION LV.—THE SUBJECT OF THE SUPREMACY RESUMED, AND THE GENTLEMAN’S FORMER OBJECTIONS AGAINST IT REPEATED.

“ G.—It is very obvious: because Rome was the metropolis “ of the empire, and consequently her bishop must be more “ conspicuous, than any other, have more respect paid him, “ and more applications made to him, especially after the “ emperors were made christians.”—pp. 104, 105.

L.—If that were the only reason, why more respect has been paid, and more applications made to the bishops of Rome, it would follow, that more respect should be paid, and more applications made to the bishop of London, which is the metropolis of England, than to the archbishop of Canterbury; who I believe will not relish this sort of logic. Not but that the greatness and dignity of cities has been an occasion of bestowing greater advantages and prerogatives both secular and ecclesiastic upon their bishops, than upon cities of a lower rank. But neither the donation of princes, nor decrees of councils can increase or lessen the divine right of bishops. So that if St Peter and his successors had fixed their seat in a village they would have been the same supreme governors of the church, and their see the centre of unity, and the ecclesiastical metropolis as much as now.

G.—It was for the reason I have given, that when the “seat of the empire was translated to Constantinople, the “bishop of that church took upon him, and aspired farther “to the universal supremacy, but was opposed by Gregory “the great bishop of Rome.”—p. 105.

L.—Sir, the seat of the empire was translated to Constantinople by the very first christian emperor; and it was not till two hundred and fifty years after, that its patriarch, whom St Gregory opposed, affected to style himself occumenical patriarch in relation to the eastern churches, but he never had the vanity to aspire to the universal supremacy, as I have fully proved. Sect. 9.

G.—My lord, there was no other consideration in former “times for the superiority of one bishop, or church but the “secular dignity of the place. For which reason the Patriarch of Jerusalem (which was uncontestably the mother-church of all) was postponed, and made the lowest of all “the Patriarchs.”—p. 105.

L.—Sir, the secular dignity of places was certainly a consideration of weight to the church to erect them either into patriarchal, metropolitan, archiepiscopal, or episcopal sees, and allow a larger extent of jurisdiction to one see, than another. And thus it was that Jerusalem, though the mother church in age, became inferior to other churches less ancient than herself. For all this depends upon human institution, and is liable to change. But divine right is unalterable, nor is it appropriated to places but persons. And therefore St Peter's authority, and that of his successors is not owing to the majesty of the city, where they reside, but to the institution of Christ, which is not subject to change.

“G.—My lord, for divine right, and Christ having named “one bishop or church as head, and superior to all others, “there is not a word, and it could not be Rome, before Rome “was christian. And Christ never named her upon any “occasion whatsoever, or gave the least hint towards her. “Strange and unaccountable, if he meant to build the whole “christian faith upon her, and to make her the Catholic Church, “as including all other churches of christians, and in all ages “throughout the whole world.”—p. 105.

L.—Sir, it is much more strange and unaccountable, that a man of your learning can argue thus with a serious countenance. For (as I have already told you several times) Christ did not vest towns but persons with authority; and St Peter was the man he named; and I cannot think it either strange or unaccountable that St Peter should choose Rome for his episcopal see. So that it is neither here nor there whether Christ ever named Rome or not, so he nominated St Peter, and did not forbid him to make Rome his episcopal see. Christ therefore made St Peter the head of his church; but did not appoint him Rome, or any other place for his residence. This was left to his own choice, and he chose Rome, as the whole current of antiquity testifies: and to doubt of it is the same absurdity as to doubt, whether that city ever was the metropolis of the empire. But I should be glad to know who ever was so ridiculous as to say, that the city of Rome includes all other churches of christians.

“G.—But, my lord, fact, as I have said before, is the “surest way to give us a true light of things. And the frame “or government of the church is a fact, which must be examined by histories and records, and not criticising upon “words, which afford no certainty. Let us look therefore “into the frame of the church from the beginning. I hope

“ I have made it plain from the history of the Acts of the “ Apostles, that there was none of them appointed as sovereign “ over the others, whatever words may be strained in favour “ of St Peter.”—pp. 105, 106.

L.—That is to say, though the words of Christ be never so plain, and the judgment of antiquity be uncontestably in favour of St Peter, you are resolved he shall be degraded, because St Luke does not tell us in express terms, that he presided in the council of Jerusalem. However you are forced to give a ridiculous name to truth, to make falsehood go down. If therefore instead of sovereign you would be pleased to say head or governor over the others, the hope you speak of will appear vain and groundless to any one, who knows what I answered, Sect. 6, to your objection from the history of the Acts of the Apostles.

G.—My lord, if St Peter was called a rock, or foundation, “ so were all the others. They are called the twelve foundations of the church. Rev. xxi. 14. Which is said to be “ built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. Eph. ii. 20. “ And not any particular apostle or prophet. And if the keys “ of heaven were promised to Peter. Matt. xvi. 19. This “ was fulfilled in giving them to him jointly with all the “ others, without any mark of superiority in him. As in “ the commission to teach all nations, it was equal to them “ all. And we find in fact, that it was exercised by them “ all with equal authority.”—p. 106.

L.—Sir, all this has been fully answered in our first dispute concerning the supremacy, where I told you that the apostles considered precisely as doctors or teachers were all equal, and independent of one another. For as they all had their inspiration immediately from God, and were no less infallible than St Peter, they could not depend on him as their doctor teaching them the mysteries of christian faith. And so their commission to teach all nations was likewise equal to them all, because all this belonged to them as teachers. But the supreme government of the church was promised to St Peter alone, when Christ told him alone, Matt. xvi. 19, that he would build his church upon him: as all the ancient fathers understood that text. If therefore Christ kept his word, the whole church is built upon St Peter in a particular manner. And since the apostles were surely a part of the church, they were likewise built upon St Peter. But they were not built upon him as their doctor, therefore as their supreme governor. Now, Sir, you may go on if you please.

G.—All the regimen of the church, which the apostles appointed was that of bishops in their several districts, without any head or sovereign bishop over them all as supreme judge of controversy.—p. 106.

L.—Sir, there was no necessity for the apostles to appoint a head, since Christ himself had done it for them. But I presume the apostles did not pretend to undo, what Christ had done, or oblige St Peter to abdicate in order to make way for a church of independents without a head.

G.—There is not the least title of this [head] to be found in any of the histories, or writings of those ages after the apostles: though there were many controversies even in faith amongst them, which an appeal to this judge had speedily ended. But no such thing appears, which could not have been missed, had it been known.—pp. 106, 107.

L.—Those, Sir, who have eyes to read, will find in the histories and writings of antiquity, that the church never was without a head; provided they have but some grains of sincerity to own what they read, and understand. But, though the fact be uncontestable, there is one very good reason, why controversies even in faith were not always ended in the primitive ages any more than in aftertimes. And the reason is, because there have been true heretics in all ages. And these, like our modern protestants never were of an humour to submit to lawful authority. Have you any thing more to say?

G.—Yes, my lord, I have something to say concerning the ancient constitution of the church. Metropolitans were early, that is, the bishop of the metropolis, or chief city of a province, who presided in the synods of that province, and had other ecclesiastical privileges granted him by the common consent of the bishops of the place for order sake, and “ greater harmony of discipline. But a patriarch with jurisdiction over several metropolitans or provinces was never heard of in the church till the council of Calcedon, An. 450. And many provinces were not put under these patriarchs, but had exempt jurisdictions of their own as before: of which Britain was one. For the patriarchat of Rome extended only to Italy, and the isles adjacent.”—p. 107.

L.—Sir, the Pope claims not his jurisdiction over the whole church either as bishop of the diocess of Rome, or as patriarch of the west, but precisely as successor of St Peter, and by consequence, the vicar of Christ upon earth. This he has by divine institution. This is his unalterable and unalienable right. So that I cannot imagine, what it is to our purpose to know, when patriarchs or metropolitans were first instituted any more, than when towns were first divided into parishes. For whether this was done soon or late; or whether their jurisdiction was of a large or narrow extent: or whether some towns or provinces had a jurisdiction independent of their patriarchs or metropolitans after they were instituted; all this has no manner of connexion with the supremacy either of St Peter, or his successors: and you may as well make the instituting of lords-lieutenants of counties, or governors of cities an objection against the sovereignty of the crown of Great Britain.

“ G.—My lord, the first pretence to universal supremacy was set up by John bishop of Constantinople, after the seat of the empire was translated thither. Against whom Gregory the Great wrote, and said, that though the see of Rome had always the precedence of Constantinople, yet that none of his predecessors the bishops of Rome had ever assumed such an arrogant title, which he calls a Luciferian pride, and declares him, who should take it, to be the fore-runner of Antichrist.”—p. 107.

L.—Sir, I have fully answered this frivolous objection, Sect. 9. And pray remember what I then both said and proved; viz., that no Pope ever maintained the spiritual supremacy more vigorously both in words and facts than Gregory the Great: though he had the humility to style himself the servant of the servants of God.

“ G.—Yet, my lord, his next successor but one, that is, “ Boniface III. took it, being given him by Phocas that “ traitor and usurper, who murdered his master Mauritius “ the emperor, and siezed his throne; whom Boniface owned “ and abetted, and was made universal bishop for his reward “ in the beginning of the seventh century. Thus the su- “ *premac*y now claimed by Rome was introduced, and has “ been maintained pro viribus ever since. And under this “ Britain has been subdued, which never was under the patri- “ archat of Rome. So much has the government and unity of “ the church been altered from what it was in the time of “ the apostles, or in the first ages of the church. And thus “ has Rome usurped the name of the Catholic Church, and “ placed all its Unity in submission to her bishop. Here “ we see the decrees, by which this encroachment crept on. “ The patriarchats began in the fifth, and the universal su- “ *premac*y in the seventh century. And Britain, which held it “ out against the patriarchat of Rome, was at last conquered “ by the more apparent usurpation of her universal supremacy, “ so obtained as I told you.”—pp. 107, 108.

L.—As you have told me indeed, but with the same ground of truth, as a man tells a fable or romance. I must own you have here given me a most ample proof of your skill in misrepresenting and disfiguring historical facts. For who would not conclude from the account you gave of Boniface III. that he was an accomplice in the murder of Mauritius, and a promoter of Phocas's usurpation? Whereas that tyrant murdered his master, and invaded the imperial throne during the pontificate of Gregory the Great, and Boniface was not made Pope till the fourth year of Phocas's reign. It is therefore both false and malicious to say, that he was made universal bishop in reward for owning and abetting that wicked murder. It is true he owned Phocas for emperor, and so did his two predecessors Sabianus and Gregory the Great, who even sent a nuncio to reside at Constantinople. For it was not the Pope's business to dispute the lawfulness of an elective title with the possessor of it, though he had obtained it by the most wicked means.

2dly, it is a noted falsehood, that the Pope's supremacy was introduced by Boniface. For if he had introduced it, no Pope before him could have claimed it; which is contrary to innumerable historical facts and the whole current of antiquity; as I have fully proved, Sect. 3, 9, 10, 16, &c. The only difference therefore between Pope Boniface, and his predecessors is this, viz., that he prevailed with Phocas to deprive Cyriacus bishop of Constantinople of the vain and pompous title of oecumenical patriarch, and accepted it himself. But he accepted it not in the sense in which St Gregory had understood and opposed it in John of Constantinople, but only in the same sense, as it had before been offered to St Leo by the council of Calcedon, [Conc. Calced. Act 3.] which council is allowed off by your own church. But was not Pope Leo a hundred and fifty years before Boniface III. And all men of learning know how vigorously he asserted the supremacy of his see. It is therefore a notorious falsehood that it was first introduced by Boniface.

3dly, It is false that any part of the essential frame or government of the church has been changed since the time of the apostles. And 4thly, It is both false and a blunder to say, that Rome has usurped the name of the Catholic Church. Rome is indeed the head church, but it must be a head without brains to call itself the whole body. As it must likewise be a head without authority (which is the same chimera as a head and no head) if a rational obedience and submission be not due to it.

Thus, Sir, we see what credit is to be given to persons prejudiced as you are. Yet the deluded people depend upon you, and take every thing you say upon trust, especially when it is delivered with a positiveness and confidence, which takes away all suspicion of insincere dealing.

“G.—My lord, I have heard some Britons say, that though they thought the Church of Rome the most corrupt part of the christian church both as to doctrine and worship, and to be a cage full of unclean birds, yet that they must be of her, and enter into that cage, because she was the Catholic “ Church. This is like that desperate maxim in the canon law “ I quoted before out of the decretals : that though the Pope “ should draw infinite numbers of people with him into hell, “ yet we must not find fault with him, nor reprove him.” —p. 108.

L.—Sir, after what I have said, Sect. 47. to shew how you have mangled and misrepresented the sense of that canon, you must have a good stock of assurance to repeat it. But as to what you say concerning some Britons, I presume those noble Britons had their lodging in Moorfields : and it is to that learned academy I refer you for an explanation of their meaning.

“ G.—But, my lord, I must also observe here, that though “ France has thrown off the Pope’s infallibility, and his deposing power over princes, and has limited his supremacy, “ that is indeed, taken it wholly away ; for no supremacy, “ properly so called, can be limited, for then it ceases to be “ supreme : yet France remains still in the dregs of the cor- “ rptions of Rome both as to doctrine and worship. The “ religion of the people there, is the adoration of the host, and “ of the cross, invocation of saints, worship of images, praying “ souls out of purgatory, telling their beads, and going to “ confession.”—p. 109.

L.—Which I advise you as a friend to do : and if you will be so kind to yourself as to follow my advice, pray, Sir, forget not to examine yourself well upon the articles of misrepresentation, falsehoods, and slander. For they are most damnable sins, and oblige to retractation, and reparation of honour.

But you have here broached so much fresh matter, that I must crave your leave to reserve the examination of it to another meeting. For I am pretty well tired with this day’s work, the chief burden whereof has laid upon me. You have asserted a great deal, and proved little or nothing : whereas the drudgery both of proving and disproving has been continually my task. I shall only add a word or two relating to your observation concerning France, and so take my leave of you for this time.

I desire you therefore to observe, that the Pope’s in- fallibility and deposing power are no articles of our faith, as I have often told you : and so it is nothing to the purpose, whether France has thrown them off or not. But I cannot imagine what you mean in saying, that a power ceases to be supreme, when it is limited. Pray, Sir, can there be no sovereign prince, which is even more than supreme, unless he be arbitrary and despotic in his dominions? Is not every prince bound to govern his subjects according to law? And are not those laws made to limit the exercise of his power? It is therefore absurd to say, that a power ceases to be supreme, when it is limited. I think the kings of Great Britain are supreme, nay sovereigns in their dominions: and yet their power is limited by the Magna Charta. And so it is with the Pope. For though he be the supreme governor of the church, he is bound to govern according to the canons of general councils; as the council of Florence expresses itself. And this is all the limitation of the Pope's supremacy you will find in France. So that if France remains still in the dregs of the corruptions of Rome (as you are pleased to call them) both as to doctrine and worship, it follows evidently, that France has not thrown off the Pope's spiritual supremacy, which you know very well is an article of faith in the Church of Rome: and the belief of it is required as a necessary condition of communion.

THE END OF THE FIRST PART.

CONVERSATION.

PART II.

SECTION I.—OF THE VIRTUE OR EFFICACY OF THE SACRAMENTS.

L.—Sir, as we were last time upon the point of parting, you were pleased to tell me, that France remains still in the dregs of the corruptions of Rome; and amongst those dregs you reckoned confession for one. Well, Sir, if confessing our sins be among the dregs of corruption, I must own the reformation has effectually purged your church of it: and the drudgery of satisfaction, which according to protestant doctrine is derogating from the infinite satisfaction of Christ, is purged away with it.

Blessed reformation! Which has delivered her children from the popish yoke of confessing their sins, and doing penance for them! It is true, this was the old way of going to heaven after the loss of baptismal grace. For which end the solemn fast of Lent, besides double the number of other fasting days were commanded by the church, and innumerable religious houses were set up to serve as sanctuaries for repenting sinners. But who would have cared one farthing for the reformation, if this old way had been kept up? It was therefore wisely done to remove these obstacles to that godly work by persuading the people, that confessing and punishing their sins, as papists do, are but unnecessary ceremonies, and that the way to heaven is both easier and safer without them. However I have heard you say sometimes, that confession is a good thing if rightly used.

“G.—And I say so still, but not in that sense it is generally used with you, and is expressed in your Catechism ad Parochos de Penitentiae Sacramento. Sect. 46, 47. That “ such a repentance, as God will not accept nor pardon for “ it, is made sufficient by the sacrament of penance, and all “ our sins remitted by it : and that paucissimi, very few can “ be saved without it ; they might have said, none. For they “ here require in repentance acceptable to God a sense and “ sorrow for sin, that shall be fully equal to the demerit, ut “ cum scelerum magnitudine æquari conferrique possit ; which “ is impossible for mortal man : and therefore all must be “ damned without the sacrament of penance.”—p. 109.

L.—I fear, Sir, there are but few saved without it :
 may most certainly none of those, who are wilfully out of the pale of the Catholic Church ; because the repentance of such can never be sincere. However to come to the words of the catechism, though you have quoted them fairly, you have translated them very unfairly. For the word conferr (which you have omitted in your translation) mollifies and explains the word æquari ; and shows it to import not a full equality, as you have rendered it in English, but an equality of proportion. So that the meaning of the catechism is no other, than that our sorrow must be such, that it may be compared with, and bear a proportion to the grievousness of our sins ; which is not impossible by the help of God's grace.

It is likewise true what the catechism says, that there is a twofold contrition, or repentance : one so perfect, that it suffices to obtain the full pardon of our sins without the sacrament of penance ; though it always implies a sincere desire of it : but whether there be few or many, that have this perfect contrition is all a guess, and known to God alone. But there is another contrition, or repentance of a more imperfect nature, yet it is heartly and sincere not only as to its detestation of past sins, but likewise as to its purpose of amendment for the time to come.
 This the catechism says is insufficient to blot out sins without the sacrament ; yet is a sufficient preparation to it. Nor do I see any thing you can reasonably object against it.

G.—My lord, the catechism says it was necessary that “ God should institute this sacrament as an easier way for “ men to get to heaven.”

L.—Pray, Sir, can any christian doubt, but that Christ has instituted the sacraments as means to facilitate our way to heaven?

G.—My lord, you interrupted me: the words of the catechism are these: Quare necesse fuit, ut clementissimus Dominus faciliori ratione communi hominum saluti consuleret. An easy way indeed! Confess to a priest, and get absolution, and this makes up the defects of your repentance, and you are saved ex opere operato, by the work wrought, the bare performance of this sacrament. And the council of Trent anathematizes all those, who say, that the very sacraments of the gospel do not confer grace in the same manner by the bare performance. Si quis dixerit per ipsa novæ legis sacramenta ex opere operato non conferri gratiam —Anathema sit. Sess. 7. Can. 8. It is true, that God did institute his sacraments as means of grace (for which we bless his name daily in our general thanksgiving) but this turns them into charms, when the very sacraments themselves, ipsa sacramenta, confer the grace ex opere operato, by the bare performance of the work.”—p. 110.

L.—Sir, I heartily subscribe to the definition of the council of Trent, and join with it in pronouncing anathema against all that deny it. But, Sir, you are not quite so much out of the way as you will needs appear to be. For you grant the thing, and only quarrel with the expression, to have the malignant pleasure of lampooning poperly.

You say it is true, that God did institute his sacraments as means of grace; we say the same. Because almighty God, who can make us become partakers of his holy grace by what means he pleases, has thought fit to institute certain outward and visible signs, which we call sacraments, to serve as means to convey it to us. And because they do this independently of the holiness, the merits, or faith of the minister, they are said to confer grace ex opere operato, that is, by that virtue or efficacy, which Christ gave them in their institution. And if you will needs call this a charm, you are free to please yourself with the profane fancy. But if you will stand to it in good earnest, I shall make you sensible, that you bespatter yourself with the dirt you throw at us. Pray, Sir, is not baptism a sacrament?

G.—Who doubts it?

L.—Well, Sir, let us suppose the minister, who baptizes a child to be an heretic or a wicked man, will not the baptism be valid, and the child receive the full grace of the sacrament?

G.—I cannot deny but he will.

L.—I know you cannot deny it, unless you will renounce your 26th article of religion. But here, Sir, you are trepanned into the opus operatum of the council of Trent, which you nickname a charm. For the minister being supposed to be an heretic, or a wicked man, and the child being void of reason, the baptismal grace he receives must be attributed wholly and solely to the virtue and efficacy of the sacrament. So that the sacrament itself confers grace by the bare performance of the work according to Christ's institution: that is, independently either of the holiness of the minister, or co-operation of the child: and if you call this turning it into a charm, it is a charm of divine institution, and I hope both priests and parsons may make use of it without danger of becoming conjurers or magicians by it.

G.—Then I presume, my lord, you require no more preparation for the sacrament of penance, than a child is capable of for the sacrament of baptism: that is to say, none at all.

L.—Sir, you cannot be such a stranger to our doctrine as to think so. We require a diligent examination of conscience, a sincere repentance, and an humble confession. And therefore your comment upon the catechism; viz., that we need but confess, and get absolution, and we are saved by the bare performance of the sacrament, is a rank calumny, and you know it to be one; because you cannot but know that all our printed catechisms, and books of instruction to prepare people for the sacrament of penance, tell them positively, that to receive a profitable and valid absolution, they must have a true sorrow for their sins, and a sincere purpose not only to abstain for the future from sin, but the very occasions of it. And is this barely confessing, and getting absolution, as you have both falsely and maliciously represented the matter.

G.—But, if the preparation you speak of be really required, pray, my lord, what becomes then of the doctrine of opus operatum?

L.—Sir, the doctrine of opus operatum is in no danger of being prejudiced by it; because as original sin is remitted by the very virtue and efficacy of the sacrament of baptism, so are actual sins remitted by the very virtue and efficacy of the sacrament of penance: but with this difference, that a child can put no obstacle to the grace of baptism; whereas the efficacy of the sacrament of penance is certainly obstructed by impenitence: and therefore a sincere repentance, and purpose of amendment are conditions indispensably requisite to qualify a sinner for the benefit of absolution, which is the peculiar grace of that sacrament. But it does not produce this grace but in souls worthily disposed, that is, in souls, which bring no positive obstacle to it; and in these it infallibly produces it, whether it be administered by a saint, or a reprobate: which is the true, and a clear explication of the doctrine of opus operatum. But they are popish words; and therefore though their true meaning cannot be disputed, they must be condemned and ridiculed by a true Son of the Church of England.

G.—My lord, let us exemplify this matter by the use made of the institutions of God under the law. The Jews had got a notion of the opus operatum, that the bare performance of the letter of the law in their sacrifices, feasts, fasts, and other observances, was all that was required of them.—p. 110.

L.—Had they so, Sir! Then they had got a very wrong notion.

G.—Whence the voices of all the prophets were against these institutions. They call them iniquity, abomination, and hateful to God.—pp. 110, 111.

L.—What, Sir, was the voice of the prophets against the institutions themselves? I presume you mean the abuses of them. Pray, Sir, explain yourself.

“G.—Nay, God denies that he did require them, or ever “institute them; that is, as a dead carcass without a soul,
 “and working like charms by the bare opus operatum. God “did never institute such, nor require them at our hands.”
 —p. 111.

L.—Very right, Sir, God never ordained his holy rites or sacrifices with an intention, that they should be pro- faned, or made use of as magical charms; but that himself should be honoured and worshipped by them. What then?

“G.—And may we not say, no more under the Gospel
 “than the law? For the Gospel introduced a more pure
 “and spiritual worship. But the council of Trent, by naming “only the sacraments of the new law, applies the opus operatum “to them also, if not chiefly.”—p. 111.

L.—You should say to the sacraments only. For they alone confer grace ex opere operato. But I perceive those terrible words have frightened you both out of good sense, and good manners. For otherwise you would not make this ridiculous parallel between the Jews and us, viz., that as the Jews placed their hopes of salvation in the bare performance of the ceremonial law, though their lives were most wicked, so Roman catholics do the same with relation to the sacraments of the new law. This, Sir, is the charitable drift of your discourse: though there be not a catechism, or book of instruction for receiving the sacraments, but detects the foulness of the aspersion by declaring positively, that the abuse of the sacraments is a most grievous sin, and that the unworthy receiver gets nothing but damnation to himself by it. But let me tell you, Sir, that lamponing the sacraments, and rejecting the greatest part of them is a sin of as black a die, as to receive them unworthily.

SECTION II.—OF BEADS.

“G.—My lord, it is plain, that your doctrine of opus “operatum runs through all your devotions. What else “is the meaning of tying men up to the repetition of such a “precise number of aves, paters, and creeds, at such particular

“times, whether the mind go along with them or not? For you will see people in the markets buying and selling, or discoursing of common business, and dropping their Beads all the while, to keep count, if they have rightly performed their task of the opus operatum.”—p. 111.

L.—This opus operatum sticks strangely on your stomach; yet you know not what to do without it in the sacrament of baptism, as I have plainly showed.

As to what you tell me, that we tie men up to the repetition of such a precise number of aves and paters, and creeds at such particular times; I know of no such obligation laid upon any by the church: for the beads are a devotion principally designed for those, who cannot read, and every one is free to use or not use it just as he pleases. However I can see no harm in repeating the same prayer often over provided the mind go along with it. But this, you say, is not required. Pray, Sir, be pleased to read our books of instruction concerning the duty of prayer, and they will inform you better. But at the same time look over the table of sins, and you will find the sin of slander amongst them.

What you add, viz., that we may see people in the markets buying and selling, or discoursing of common business, and dropping their beads all the while, will not clear you from the guilt of slander. First, because the people do not always as they are taught. And 2dly, because people that attend the markets, have many broken intervals of time, which they may employ very piously in repeating some short prayers. I hope at least you will own that even in the greatest hurry of business dropping of beads is better than dropping of oaths and curses; which is but too much practised both in shops and markets on this side of the seas. But if I should insinuate, that this is done by principle and the doctrine of your church, would you not post me up for a liar?

SECTION III.—OF BLESSINGS, AND CONSECRATIONS.

“G.—But, my lord, if prayers and sacraments which are

“ means of grace of God's own institution may be abused, and rendered hateful to God, what shall we say of those means of grace which are of man's mere invention ?”—p. 111.

L.—Sir, if you speak of means of grace strictly taken, such as the sacraments, I am wholly ignorant of any, that are of man's mere invention.

G.—None can appoint the means but he, who has the bestowing of the end to be obtained by those means. As, if I have a thousand pounds to bestow, I may put what conditions I think fit, and appoint the means for obtaining it. Now grace is the gift of the Holy Ghost, and none can appoint the means of obtaining it, but who has the bestowing of the Holy Ghost, which it is the highest blasphemy for any creature to assume to himself. Hence Christ's sending the Holy Ghost is a sure proof of his divinity.”—pp. 111, 112.

L.—Sir, all this is very true, if you mean that Christ alone has the power of instituting sacraments. For this is the express doctrine of our church. But what do you infer from it?

G.—My lord, the Church of Rome takes upon her to appoint means of grace many and various. The pontifical is made up of the forms of consecration of every thing almost one can think of into means of grace, as bells, books, candles, water, salt, oil, ashes, palms, swords, banners, and vestments of diverse sorts, even of children's clouts; besides crosses, pictures, images, Agnus Deis, &c., by the use of which in the manner prescribed several graces both ghostly and bodily are said to be obtained, as besides the favour of God, and the remission of sins, the saving from fire, from diseases, from storms at sea, thunder, lightning, and tempests at land; at which time they ring the consecrated bells to allay the winds, and chase away the demons of the air, who seeing the sign of the cross upon such bells, and hearing their sound, shall be frighted and fly away, as it is expressed in the form of consecration of bells in the pontifical. Nay there is nothing in the world so insignificant, a rose or a feather, which the Pope may not consecrate into a means of grace, and is in use every day, and at Rome they are counted atheists who have not faith in these things, so much they place their religion in them.”—pp. 112, 113.

L.—Before I give a direct answer to this piece, I make bold to ask, whether the dissenters will not object many practices of the same nature against your church?

“G.—But without ground. For we consecrate no creatures——”

L.—Sir, you forget yourself: but I shall refresh your memory immediately.

“G.—Nor do we attribute any virtue, ghostly or bodily, to the use of them. They are used purely for decency and order, and we may change them, or take them quite away, as our governors think fit.”—p. 113.

L.—So may the governors of our church, if they think fit, change or take away the practices, you are pleased to find fault with. But for all that I fancy you would think that man somewhat atheistically inclined, who should venture to lampoon, and very impertinent, if he should pretend to reform the rites and ceremonies of your church; which perhaps appear as ridiculous to dissenters, as some of ours do to you.

“G.—But can they shew any outward action or thing appointed in our church, by the use of which evil spirits may be chased away, women helped in labour, or storms at sea quelled?——”

L.—I really believe they cannot. The evil spirit may possess as many good protestants as he pleases, without being molested or disquieted by any person for it. They are all so just, as to give the devil his due.

“G.—But all these, and many more virtues are attributed in your church to the use of what they call holy water, and many other such like institutions of mechanical means of grace.”—p. 113.

L.—Sir, as for means of grace strictly taken. I know no such means but the sacraments themselves instituted by Christ: because these alone by virtue of their institution confer grace ex opere operato, when no wilful obstacle is put to it. But there are many more means of grace, if we take the word in a larger sense. Thus praying, fasting, and giving alms are means of grace, because they move God to bestow his grace upon us. Thus likewise, hearing sermons, reading pious books, seeing good example, or a moving picture of our Saviour's sufferings, may in a large sense be called means of grace, because they incite us to the practice of virtues, by which we obtain an increase of grace: and if some débauché should ridicule these, and call them mechanical means of grace, I believe you would have no great opinion of his morals for it.

But, Sir, you own yourself that prayer is a means of grace. The sacraments therefore are not the only means of grace in the large sense I speak of: for prayer is no sacrament.

G.—But, my lord, I told you at the same time, that prayer is a means of grace of God's own institution.

L.—You did so, and it is very true, if you speak of prayer in general. But I know of no particular form of prayer but one, viz., the Lord's prayer, expressly commanded by Christ. The rest are left to the prudence and devotion of the church, which either orders them to be composed, or approves them, when composed by private persons. Now, Sir, all blessings, hallowings, consecrations, or call them what you please, are but so many different forms of prayer ordained by the church to implore God's blessing for such or such an end in the lawful use of his creatures; and if this be an allowable, nay, a religious practice in some things, as I shall presently shew you must grant it is from the practice of your own church, I see no reason why it should be ridiculed in others.

But first let us see, what encouragement the practice of the Roman Catholic Church in blessing inanimate things has from the word of God itself. And here occurs to me first the solemn dedication, or consecration of the temple of Solomon. And atheists may call this making a church a mechanical means of grace. But this custom of blessing, and consecrating churches (which I think are inanimate things as well as bells, books, candles, &c.) was the constant practice of the Catholic Church even in her purest times, as all men of learning know.

But what do you think of the waters of jealousy, by the due use whereof clandestine adultery was discovered? Num. v. The shew-bread, which is called hallowed, or holy bread? 1 Sam. xxi. 4, 6. The salt used by Elisha for sweetening the infected waters of Jericho. 2 Kings ii.

The liver of the fish taken by the angel Raphael for expelling the devil? Lib. Tob. The clay and waters of Siloam used by Christ to open the eyes of the blind man? John ix. 6, 7. And lastly, the oil used by the apostles to cure the sick? Matt. vi. 13.

Here are charms, or mechanical means of grace, as you call them, in abundance, authorised by the word of God itself. And St Paul has laid down a principle of so large an extent, that the frequent blessings or consecrations used in the Church of Rome are fully justified by it. For he tells us expressly, that every creature is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. 1 Tim. iv. 5. Now I presume bells, books, candles, water, salt, oil, &c., are in the number of creatures: they may therefore be sanctified (according to St Paul) by the word of God and prayer. And this answers every thing you have said, or can say against the blessings or consecrations contained in the Roman pontifical, though they were twice as many in number.

But is not the daily practice of your own church in blessing the meat upon the table as liable to buffoonery, as any of the blessings in the Roman pontifical? For when the parson says grace over a pig or pudding in these words, Bless us, O Lord, and these thy gifts, &c.; or, Lord, sanctify these thy gifts; I ask, whether the pig, or pudding be consecrated into a mechanical means of grace, or not? If you say it is, you run into the absurdity you reproach us with. If not, what you object against us is frivolous.

I likewise find the following prayer in your administration of public baptism: Almighty and ever living God, whose most dearly beloved Son—regard, we beseech thee, the supplications of thy congregation. SANCTIFY THIS WATER to the mystical washing away of sin, &c. And the liturgy in Scotland has it thus: SANCTIFY THIS FOUNTAIN and baptism, thou, which art the sanctifier of all things. If this be not a consecration, there is no such thing in the Roman pontifical.

But the ceremony of the king's coronation is the most remarkable piece of this kind of popery. The history of the coronation of king James II. tells us, p. 91, in the margin, that the OIL, with which he was anointed, was SOLEMNLY CONSECRATED on the morning of the coronation by the dean of Westminster, assisted by the prebendaries. But Baker specifies the very form of blessing the royal ornaments thus: O God, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, by whom kings do reign, vouchsafe, we beseech thee, in thy favour to BLESS THIS KINGLY ORNAMENT. Vouchsafe to BLESS and SANCTIFY THIS SWORD, which is hallowed for the defence of thy holy church. God, the crown of the faithful, BLESS AND SANCTIFY THIS CROWN, so this thy servant that weareth it, may be filled with thy manifold graces. Bless, O Lord, and sanctify this ring. Baker, printed London 1696, pp. 742, 743.

Here then we have meat, water, oil, clothes, sword, ring, and crown blessed, hallowed, sanctified, and consecrated according to the practice of the Church of England. And what a number of ridiculous questions might here be asked, if a man were but atheistically enough disposed to do it! But jesting with religious matters is the very worst sort of buffoonery; and all I have to say to the blessings used in your church, is, that you ought not to ridicule in us, what you practise yourselves. The true ground both of your practice and ours is this; that whatever is good in itself, may be lawfully prayed for in due circumstances: and as God's creatures may be abused, so they may be blessed to the end, that men may use them as they ought. Thus, images, meats, swords, banners, vestments, and many other things are blessed: and none ought to find fault with this, but they, who either think that God cannot bless the most indifferent things, or that prayer is not a proper means to obtain his blessing.

However, you are under a mistake, if you imagine that we place any inherent sanctity in inanimate things by their being blessed. We only trust, that whatever creatures are blessed by the church in the name of Jesus Christ, Almighty God will for his sake render them beneficial to those, who use them with devotion in order to the end, for which they are ordained.

SECTION IV.—THE SIGN OF THE CROSS, HOLY WATER, AND EXORCISMS.

WHAT you say concerning the sign of the cross upon our bells is no more a matter of jest, than the sign of the cross in baptism; for the one is of mere human institution as well as the other. But what an age do we live in, when the sign of the sacred instrument of man's redemption is made a subject of laughter amongst christians! This was one of the earliest fruits of the blessed reformation. For then it was that a crucifix began to be treated in this island with the same marks of ignominy and contempt, as if it were the image of some infamous traitor, or enemy of the state. And even now a man becomes as ridiculous in protestant company by blessing himself with the sign of the cross, as if he were dressed up in a fool's coat.

But was it so in the primitive ages? Hear what Tertullian writes upon that subject: At every step and every turn; at every coming in and going out; if we put on our clothes, or change our shoes; if we wash, if we take a repast; if a candle be brought into the room; if we lie, if we sit, whatever we do, we are still making the sign of the cross upon our foreheads. Lib. de Corona Militis. C. 3. And St Cyril of Jerusalem writes thus: To this day it [the sign of the cross] cures diseases, chases away devils, and dissolves charms of witchcraft and art magic. Cat. 13. p. 138. Here you see the sign of the cross not only chased away demons, but was a remedy against diseases, and magical spells. And why then may it not have some part of this effect by the benediction and prayer of the church, when it is impressed upon bells, as well as any other way?

But to omit numberless other testimonies of the ancient fathers relating to this subject, how can you read the two passages, I have quoted, without being convinced that in deriding our present practice you condemn that of the purest ages of the church? You tell me, the dissenters can shew no outward action, or thing appointed in your church, by the use of which evil spirits may be chased away, women helped in labour, of storms at sea quelled. A most wonderful commendation! and you add immediately, by way of reproach to us, that all these, and many more virtues are attributed in our church to the use of what we call holy water, and many other such like institutions of mechanical means of grace.

Well, Sir, let us see, whether this mechanism was not in use amongst the ancients, and what effects it wrought. It is above eleven hundred years since holy water began to be used in England. This appears from St Gregory's epistle to St Melitus, to whom he wrote thus: Let the idols be destroyed: let HOLY WATER be made; let it be sprinkled in the said temples; let altars be made, and relics placed in them, Lib. ii. Epist. 76. This is an unanswerable proof, that the English received the use of holy water, as likewise of relics, together with their christianity, from Rome. But it is still far more ancient. For in the reign of Constantine, the first christian emperor, when the Jews by magical enchantments hindered the building of a church, we have in St Epiphanius this blessing of water used effectually against them by the holy count Joseph; who after he had made the sign of the cross upon it prayed thus: In the name of Jesus of Nazareth—may this water have power against the magical charms and enchantments, they [the Jews] have used; and may it restore to the fire its natural force, that the house of God may be finished. Which effect it had accordingly, and forced the Jews then present to confess the power of Christ. Epiph. Hær. 30. Sect. 12. p. 136, 137.

I omit several other relations of the like miraculous effects wrought by the use of holy water recorded in the writings of the ancient fathers. And I shall only add that the power over devils did not expire with the apostles; nay that it was an ordinary power of the Catholic Church in the third age (though it never was, nor ever will be in the reformed churches) is evident from what St Cyprian wrote Epist. 76. To this very day, says he, the devil is scourged, and burnt, and tormented by the EXORCISTS with human voice, and a divine power. Now, Sir, you may laugh, or proceed to something else if you please.

SECTION V.—INVOCATION OF SAINTS.

G.—My lord, that which makes up the bulk of the Romish devotions is the worship and invocation of saints and angels, the adoration of their images, and the relics of saints departed, pieces of their bodies, or of their vestments, &c., to which great miracles are attributed: and therefore they are made strictly and properly means of grace.”—p. 113.

L.—What, Sir, are all things, to which miracles are attributed, made strictly and properly means of grace? Then they are by consequence made sacraments; for these alone are means of grace strictly and properly so called. So then the handkerchiefs and aprons, which touched St Paul, and by which diseases were cured, and evil spirits chased away, Acts xix. 12, were (at least whilst he lived) so many more sacraments, than ever were instituted by Christ. Nay it is writ, Acts v. 15, that they brought forth the sick, and laid them on beds and couches, that at least the shadow of St Peter passing by might overshadow some of them, and they might be delivered from their distempers. So that St Peter's shadow, for ought we know, had as good a title to be of the number of sacraments, as any of Christ's institution. How dangerous a thing is it to be carried away with a violent prejudice! For a man's own principles are generally forgot, and even common sense is lost in the hurry.

You tell me, that the bulk of the Romish devotions is made up of the worship and invocation of saints, and angels, the adoration of their images, &c. And I tell you, Sir, that the bulk of protestant objections is made up of misrepresentation and slander; for the bulk of our devotions, and indeed the only essential devotion of every true christian consists in the worship, invocation, and adoration of God through Jesus Christ: and we hold it to be a damnable impiety to give God's worship to any creature whatsoever.

As to our invocation of saints (which is the article we have now chiefly before us) I shall set down the doctrine of our church, as it stands recorded in the Council of Trent; whose definitions in this as well as other doctrinal points must surely be allowed to be the true standard of our faith. What therefore the council teaches is this, viz., that it is good and profitable for christians humbly to invoke the saints, and to have recourse to their prayers, aid, and assistance, whereby to obtain benefits of God through his Son our Lord Jesus Christ, who is our only Redeemer and Saviour. Sess. 25.

These are the words of the council, wherein our doctrine concerning the invocation of saints is fully and faithfully delivered: and the sum of it is, that it is good and profitable, and by consequence lawful, to desire the saints in heaven to pray for us. Whence I infer, that the question between us, if truly stated, is this, viz.: Whether it be not as lawful for christians to desire the saints in heaven to pray for them, as it was for St Paul to desire the christians upon the earth to pray for him. Rom. xv. 30. I confess I have not penetration enough to see the lawfulness of the one, and unlawfulness of the other.

G.—My lord, the reason of the lawfulness of the one, “and unlawfulness of the other is, because the one is commanded, the other not; nay forbidden, as I will shew you.” —p. 114.

L.—Sir, I remember a good old woman once made me this answer, and I thought it was well enough for her capacity. But this I can assure you, that if you ever can bring me any tolerable proof that we obey God in the one, and disobey him in the other, or that the lawfulness of the one does not manifestly infer the lawfulness of the other, I shall freely own there is no such thing as a contradiction possible in the world.

ADVERTISEMENT.—Immediately after the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated his lordship is made to say; that it seems to be giving greater glory to God, and more humility in us not to approach his presence directly, and immediately ourselves. Which is false doctrine, if he means, that we ought not to pray directly and immediately to God through the mediation of Jesus Christ. Then his lordship draws a comparison from the difficult access to earthly kings to illustrate the nonsense he has uttered. The case indeed is often such with kings upon earth, who cannot be approached by every body, but never with the King of heaven, to whom (through our Lord Jesus Christ) we have free access, as often as we please. But why then do we desire the saints in heaven to pray for us? I answer for the very same reason, which moved St Paul to desire the faithful upon earth to pray for him, viz. : That God may have the honour, and we the profit of more prayers than our own. Now let us hear the gentleman's answer to his lordship's fore-mentioned words, and wise simile.

G.—Your simile will haste on all four. For God is nearer to us than any saint or angel. In God we live and move, and have our being. But the angels and saints departed are at a distance from us, and we know not where to find them, or that they hear our prayers; for they are not every where; that is an attribute of God alone.”—p. 114.

L.—Sir, God is also nearer to us, than we are to one another; yet this hinders us not from desiring one another's prayers: and St Paul desired the prayers of those, that were at a great distance from him, though he knew not whether his petition would ever find them or not. However we know for certain that the saints departed are in heaven, where they see God face to face; and it is no idle conjecture to say that by thus seeing him they know a great deal more of us, than we know of them.

We likewise know for certain (and it is a truth acknowledged by your church, as I shall shew hereafter) that the saints and angels, who are the church triumphant, pray for the church militant, which is upon earth. Whence it follows first, that our desiring a part in their prayers cannot be unprofitable, as long as we are sure it is known to God, though the saints and angels should know nothing of it. The reason is, because as it is an article of our belief, that all blessings flow originally from God alone through Jesus Christ, so in the desires and language of the heart it is only to God through Jesus Christ, that all our prayers are chiefly directed, without which they would not be strictly prayers. Whence it follows, 2dly, that it is the same in effect, whether we say holy Peter, pray for us, or whether we pray thus, O God, grant us a share in the prayers of St Peter. As it was the very same in David to say, praise the Lord all ye nations, Psalm cxvi. 1, as if he had said, O Lord, may all nations praise thee. And by consequence, though it were true, that the saints and angels know nothing of our invoking them, it is enough, that it be known to God, when we desire them to pray for us, that is, to have a part in the fruit of their prayers.

But, Sir, I only say this to let you see the weakness of your argument: for I am of another judgment, and think we have no reason to doubt but the saints are acquainted with our prayers.

Origen says expressly, that all the angels and blessed souls befriend those, that serve God, and that they know who are in his favour. L. 8. contra Celsum. Edit. Huët. p. 949.

This was also St Gregory's opinion, who writes thus: Because all the saints see God, what is it they do not know there, where they know him who knows all things? L. 4. Dial C. 33.

This was likewise the judgment of St Paulinus bishop of Nola, when he made his countryman address himself thus to St Felix for his lost cattle. Tu scis ubi sunt, qui lumine Christi cuncta et operta vides, longeque absentia cernis. That is, Thou knowest where they are, who by the light of Christ seest all things even that are hidden, and far distant from thee.

St Austin was of the same opinion, when he made this apostrophe to St Paul: You reign with Christ together with him, whom you stoned [St Stephen] you both now see us, you both hear this my discourse. I desire you both to pray for us. Serm. 316, ult. Edit. Sect. 5.

And St Asterius bishop of Amasea in the fourth age prayed thus to the martyrs: You yourselves have formerly prayed to the martyrs before you were martyrs. They heard you, when you entreated them. Now that you can hear us, grant us our request. Serm. 10.

Lastly, St Basil discourses thus upon the forty martyrs: He who is oppressed with any trouble has recourse to these; so has he, that is in joy: the one for a deliverance, the other for a continuation of his state. Here a mother is heard praying for her children, or the safe return or health of her husband—And there is not one of them, who does not see all things. Orat. 20. in 40 Martyres. Tom. 1. Edit. Par. ann. 1637, p. 459. D.

What pity is it, that the Reformation did not come above a thousand years sooner to reform these popish fathers! Who made no scruple to invoke the saints, and exhort others to do the same: nor had they any difficulty to believe, that as the prophets could foresee future events, and see things done at a distance by the mere light of grace, so the saints in heaven may do the same by the light of glory. And it is this the schoolmen call the speculum or looking-glass of the saints, wherein they see the prayers and necessities of those, who implore their aid in this world.

G.—Do they see every thing in this looking-glass? then they know as much as God. But if not, then how do we know they see our prayers there? And how will this sort with your simile of an earthly king, that the courtier must go to the king to know what I desired the courtier to ask of him?—p. 114.

L.—Sir, as to your simile, I yield up to you the whole property of it, and you may do with it what you please. But as to what you say, that if the saints see every thing, they know as much as God, your consequence is stark nought. For though they should know all facts past, present, and to come (more than which cannot be meant by the words every thing, when we speak of creatures) their knowledge would still be limited as those things are: and, by consequence come infinitely short of the infinite knowledge of God, who not only knows all things past, present, and to come, but every thing, that is possible. But suppose they do not know every thing, then you ask how we know, that they see our prayers? And I ask you, how you know, that they do not see them? For it is ridiculous, nay blasphemous to say, that God cannot communicate to his saints the knowledge of our petitions either immediately by himself, or by the ministry of our angels-guardians, who certainly know both our necessities and prayers.

“G.—Abraham is the father of us all. Rom. iv. 16, and “he was called the friend of God. James ii. 23. Therefore “it is likely, that he saw as far into the looking-glass as “another. Yet it is said, Isaiah lxiii. 16. That Abraham “is ignorant of us. And are not we as ignorant of their state, “and what knowledge they have of us below? We are told, “that they have no knowledge of it. His sons come to honour, “and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them. Job xiv. 21.”—p. 115.

L.—I am sorry, Sir, I must accuse you of a blunder. For not only your good friends the schoolmen, but your own Catechism will tell you, that in the days of Isaiah and Job there were no saints in heaven, because mankind was not then redeemed; and so your jest of Abraham's seeing as far as another into the looking-glass of the saints is quite spoiled. However the true meaning of Isaiah according to St Jerome is this, viz.: Neither Abraham nor Jacob will acknowledge those to be his children, whom they know to be wicked. Hier. in Cap. 63. Isaiah, in which sense our Saviour speaks, Matt. xxv. 12, Verily, I say unto you, I know you not.

As to the texts quoted from holy Job, St Gregory tells us, that he does not speak there of saints, but of sensual and carnal men, that loved this world, and especially their children more than God. And these (according to St Gregory) are said by holy Job to be ignorant in the other world of what they loved inordinately in this: Hoc beatus Job nescire eos postmodum asserit quod hic vehementius amaverunt. But, Sir, why should the saints be kept in ignorance of what passes in this world any more than the angels, of whom it is said, that they rejoice over a sinner that repenteth? For both are upon the same foot, as protestants themselves own.

"G.—That is, when it pleaseth God to let them know it, or that the sinner comes thither. But that they know of every penitent upon earth is no where said, nor do I know it asserted by any."—p. 115.

L.—What wretched shifts are you here put to, to answer this plain text! First, the angels know it, when it pleases God to let them know it. Very right, Sir; for to be sure, they would not know it, unless it pleased God to let them know it. But being conscious to yourself that this will not do your business, you answer, 2dly, that perhaps the angels only know it, when the sinner comes to heaven. But here the text is plainly against you, which speaks of their rejoicing over a sinner repenting, or doing penance; which has a manifest reference to this life. However if this will not do, then you come upon me with your corps de réserve, and answer me, 3dly, that it is no where said, that the angels know of every penitent upon earth. But does Christ make any exception? And if he does not, why will you presume to do it for him?

SECTION VI.—ST PAUL TO THE COLOSSIANS ii. 18, 19, GROSSLY MISINTERPRETED BY THE GENTLEMAN.

"G.—My lord, instead of the schoolmen's looking-glass, and their vain philosophy, if we would look into the plain directions of scriptures, we should settle ourselves upon a much surer foundation. See then what the apostle says upon the very case in hand. Let no man beguile you of your reward in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things, which he has not seen, vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind, and not holding the head, from which all the body by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, increaseth with the increase of God. Col. ii. 18, 19. And after says, ii. 23, which things have indeed a shew of wisdom in will-worship and humility.—Here is a full answer to all your pretensions for this will-worship of saints and angels, For both go upon the same foot. It is called intruding into things we have not seen, of which we are altogether uncertain, and therefore sinful in the practice by the apostle's rule, Rom. xiv. 23, that whatsoever is not of faith is sin. This “ was spoke in respect of meats, but is much more so as to “ our worship, and solemn devotions of God.

“ Your comparison of access to an earthly king is here called “ a fleshly or carnal thought, measuring God after the manner “ of men —”

L.—Hold, Sir, I told you just now, that the comparison you speak of, is a pig of your own sow. So let it be as fleshly and carnal as you please.

“ G.—And the result of this is no less than losing our reward, that is, heaven. For it is forsaking the head, which “ is Christ, whose members we are, and receive nourishment
 “ from him : not so from saints and angels.”—pp. 115, 116.

L.—That is very true, Sir; all our spiritual nourishment comes from Christ our head, and not from saints or angels. But I never could suspect, that the prayers of saints and angels (for pray remember they both go upon the same foot) should hinder christians from receiving nourishment from Jesus Christ their head, any more than the joint prayers of their fellow members upon earth.
 Unless either praying in heaven be a crime, which obstructs the flowings of God's grace upon the members of his church militant, or desiring a share in those prayers destroys the fruit and efficacy they would otherwise have.

But, before I give a direct answer to St Paul's words,
 I must do you the justice to own, you are in no danger of wronging your cause for want of a good assurance.
 For when you talk of settling ourselves upon a sure foundation, and conclude the text of St Paul with these big words, that it is a full answer to all our pretensions for our will-worship (as you call it) of saints and angels who would imagine any thing less, than that the invocation of saints and angels, that is, desiring a part in their prayers, is so clearly condemned by St Paul, that his words are utterly incapable of any other meaning, than as you pretend to understand them.

Now, Sir, to let you see, how notoriously you impose upon the credulity of ignorant people, I shall endeavour to prove, that your interpretation of the forementioned words of St Paul is both absurd and impious. I prove it to be absurd from a principle, which I think cannot be contested, viz., that the saints and angels in heaven pray to God for us. But since experience has taught me, that you make no scruple to question the very clearest truths, I shall give myself the trouble to prove it.

First, from Zechariah i. 12, where an angel prays thus for Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah: Then the angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem, and on the cities of Judah against which thou hast had indignation these three-score and ten years.

2dly, from this maxim of St Paul, viz., that charity never ceaseth, 1 Cor. xiii. 8. That is, though faith, and many other virtues cease in heaven, as being inconsistent with the state of bliss, yet charity, by which we love God above all things, and our neighbour as ourselves, not only remains, but is undoubtedly increased in heaven. And therefore if charity even in this world obliges us to be solicitous, and pray for one another's salvation, surely the angels and saints in heaven, whose charity surpasses ours by many degrees, cannot fail of performing their part in sending up their prayers to the throne of grace for those, who are yet combating in the warfare of this mortal life, and uncertain of their future state.

This argument is admirably well handled by Mr Thorndike, an eminent protestant writer, in his Just Weights and Measures, C. 16, p. 107, where he discourses thus: All members, says he, of the church triumphant in heaven, according to their degree of favour with God, abound also with love to his church militant on earth. Therefore it is certain, both that THEY OFFER CONTINUAL PRAYERS TO GOD for its necessities, and that their prayers must be of great force and effect with God for the assistance of the church militant in this warfare. Which, if it be true, the communion of saints will necessarily require, first, that all, &c.—2dly, THAT THE LIVING BEG OF GOD A PART AND INTEREST IN THOSE PRAYERS, WHICH THEY, WHO ARE SO NEAR TO GOD IN HIS KINGDOM TENDER TO HIM WITHOUT CEASING, FOR THE CHURCH UPON EARTH.

3dly, from Psalm xci. 11, 12. He shall give his angels charge over thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. Now surely those divine spirits, whom God has appointed to take care of us, and who always see the face of the Father, which is in heaven (Matt. xviii. 10) cannot be so unconcerned for the persons under their charge, as not to offer up their prayers for them. Nay it is expressly writ, that the smoke of the incense of the prayers of the saints ascended up before God out of the angel's hands. Rev. viii. 4.

4thly. It is beyond dispute, that this was the belief of the ancient church in her purest times. Who doubts, says Origen, that all the saints both help us by their prayers, and encourage us by their example? And again. We all dare confidently say, that millions of holy angels join themselves with men of good will when they pray and intercede for us, and are (as it were) fellow-labourers with us in our spiritual warfare. L. 8. contra Celsum. Edit. Huet. p. 949.

The centurists acknowledge this to be the doctrine of St Cyprian, of whom they write thus: Verily, Cyprian does not obscurely think, that martyrs and saints departed do pray for the living. Cent. 3. Coll. 84.

St Hilary writes thus: There are, according to St John, angels deputed for the churches of Asia——And in the doctrine of our Saviour, the angels of little ones do always see the face of God. There are (according to Raphael speaking to Tobias) angels attending before the divine majesty, and offering up to God the prayers of such as call upon them. Comment. in Psalm 129.

Tell me then (says St Chrysostom) dare you say the Lord is dead, whose servants though deceased are patrons and defenders of those, who command the whole earth? Hom. 26. in Epist. 2. ad Cor.

When Vigilantius, An. 404, denied the intercession of saints, St Jerome replied; if the apostles and martyrs prayed for others in this world (when they were in concern for themselves) how much more after their crowns, victories, and triumphs? Moses obtained pardon for 600,000 men;

Stephen begged pardon for his persecutors; and since they are with Christ, will they have less power? Libro contra Vigilantium.

To omit many more for brevity's sake, St Leo's words are very remarkable: We are bound (says he) to thank our Lord and Redeemer Jesus Christ, who gave such great power to him, whom he constituted Head of the whole church, that if any thing be well done even by us, it must be imputed to him to whom he said, And when thou art converted, confirm thy brethren, and to whom our Lord after his resurrection said thrice, Feed my sheep. Which now also without doubt this godly pastor performs, confirming us with his exhortations, and NOT CEASING TO PRAY FOR US, that we be not overcome by any temptation. Leo Serm. 3 in Anniver. Assumpt. ad Pontificatum.

In a word, Sir, I fairly defy you to produce the authority of one single orthodox father denying that the saints and angels pray for us. I will therefore proceed to my ———

5th and last proof of it from the testimony of protestant writers. I have already quoted Mr Thorndike; and the bishop of Oxford, in his edition of St Cyprian, p. 271, agrees exactly with him, and delivers it as the general doctrine of his church. We do not doubt (says he) but the souls in heaven pray earnestly to God, that he may shew his mercy to those, that live here.

Bishop Montague comes a step nearer to us, and writes thus: I see no absurdity in nature, nor incongruity unto the analogy of faith; no repugnance at all to sacred scripture, much less impiety for any man to say, HOLY ANGEL GUARDIAN PRAY FOR US. Treatise of Invocation of Saints, p. 97.

The Lutherans, in their defence of the Confession of Augsburg, infer from the forementioned text of Zechariah that angels pray for us. Apol. Confess. August. de Invoc. Sanct. Fol. 179.

Ecolampadius (ad Orat. Chrysost. de Juventio et Maximo Martyribus) writes thus: Neither will I affirm it to be idolatry to desire the patronage of saints. For the saints in heaven being inflamed with charity do not cease to pray for us.

Fuber (de Statu Defunctorum, C. 7.) writes plainly thus: I do not doubt but the souls of the dead remember their parents, brothers, sisters, and kindred, whom they left behind; and pray to God that he will also deliver them out of this vale of tears.

Brentius ad Cap. 16. Lucæ, proposes this question, Do the dead then pray for the living? Which he answers thus: Surely it cannot be denied, that they, who live with Christ, wish well to the church and her members. For, if the angels pray for us, as Zacharias witnesseth, and if Christ himself prays for us to his Father, how should the saints not be affected with charity towards us in Christ, and through Christ?

Lastly, the Church of England has this collect upon the day of St Michael and all angels in the common prayer book: O everlasting God, who hast ordained and constituted the services of angels and men in a wonderful order, mercifully grant, that as thy holy angels always do thee service in heaven, so by thy appointment they may succour and defend us on earth, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. Here, Sir, your church hopes for succour and defence from the angels; and I desire you to remember your own maxim, that saints and angels are upon the same foot.

G.—But pray, my lord, what do you infer from this great heap of authorities? For here seems to be much cry, but no wool.

L.—Sir, I infer first from this unanimous agreement of scriptures, fathers, and protestant writers, that it is an undoubted truth, that the saints and angels in heaven pray for us. And from this principle (which alone decides the whole question concerning the invocation of saints) I infer, 2dly, that your interpretation of St Paul to the Colossians is absurd: because it is inconsistent with common sense to maintain, that we lose our reward, and forsake the head, which is Christ, by desiring a part and interest in those prayers, which by God's own appoint- ment the saints and angels offer to him without ceasing for the church upon earth. What, Sir! can you believe that your angel guardian prays for you, and yet think it unlawful to desire it of him? Can you hope for succour and defence from angels, and at the same time believe you forsake Jesus Christ, and lose your reward, if you beg of them that succour and defence for which Almighty God has appointed them to be our guardians! If this be not shocking common sense, I confess I know not what is.

I shall now proceed to prove likewise the second part of my charge, viz., that your interpretation of St Paul to the Colossians is impious. I have already produced the testimony of several holy fathers both of the fourth and fifth age, teaching and practising the invocation of saints and angels. Nay, that it was the public practice of those two ages is a thing so notorious, that a man must out-face evidence to deny it. However, to leave no room to doubt of the matter, let protestants themselves be witnesses of it.

Bishop Forbes speaks in general terms thus: It has been a practice, says he, for many ages in the whole church, in the east as much as in the west, and even in the north by the Moscovites [your great church of Russia] to sing this litany for example: ST PETER, PRAY FOR US. P. 311.

Dr Fulk (in his rejoinder to Bristow, p. 5) says, I confess that Ambrose, Austin, and Jerome held invocation of saints to be lawful. And again (against Rhem. Test. p. 443) that many of the ancient fathers held this opinion, that saints departed pray for us, we do not deny.

Chemnitius, a learned and zealous Lutheran, maintains that the invocation of saints was begun in public assemblies about the year 370, by St Basil, St Gregory Nyssen, and St Gregory Nazianzen. In Exam. Conc. Trid. part. 3, p. 200.

Beza (Praef. Novi Test.) speaking of the times of Cyprian, Austin, and Chrysostom, acknowledges that then prevailed the invocation of the dead.

The Centurists (Cent. 5. C. 6. Col. 675) charge St

Chrysostom's liturgy with invocation of our blessed lady by name. And again (Cent. 4. Col. 295) they allege several examples of prayers to saints in Athanasius, Basil, Nazianzen, Ambrose, Prudentius, Epiphanius, and Ephrem.

Lastly, Mr Thorndike writes thus: It is confessed, says he, that the lights both of the Greek and Latin church, St Basil, St Gregory Nazianzen, St Gregory Nyssen, St Ambrose, St Jerom, St Austin, St Chrysostom, St Cyril of Jerusalem, St Cyril of Alexandria, Theodoret, St Fulgentius, St Gregory the Great, St Leo, more or rather all after that time have spoken to the saints, and desired their assistance. In Epil. par. 3. p. 358.

This, I think, is abundantly sufficient to prove that the invocation of saints was both taught and practised by the greatest lights of the church in those very ages, when she was most eminent both for holiness and learning; since the fact is so clear, that her very enemies are forced to acknowledge it.

Now, Sir, this shews the impiety of your interpretation of St Paul to the Colossians. For it follows from it by a manifest, and undeniable consequence, that all those great lights and pillars of the church; those eminent saints, whom the whole christian world has ever held in veneration both for their holiness and learning, it follows, I say, that they all forsook Christ, and lost their reward: that is to say in plain English, that they are all damned. I really have the charity to think you never reflected upon this consequence. But I am very confident, that whoever reflects upon it, unless he be a professed atheist, will detest your saying, that the invocation of saints (which, even our enemies being judges, was taught and practised by those great men) is forsaking Christ, and losing our reward.

Your interpretation therefore of St Paul being inconsistent both with piety and common sense, I hope you will allow me to give one, that agrees with both. Now it is manifest, that the principal subject of the chapter you have quoted from St Paul to the Colossians is to establish the divinity of Christ, his superiority over the angels, and mediatorship between God and man. In him (says he) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, Col. ii. 3. For in him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead corporally; and ye are complete in him, who is the head of all principality and power, &c. ii. 9, 10. Whence in the words you have objected, the apostle takes occasion to warn the Colossians against the pernicious doctrine of those, who taught, that it was not Christ but angels, who were our mediators, and reconcilers with God; whom therefore he justly accuses of not holding the head, which is Christ.

This, Sir, is St Chrysostom's comment upon the very words, you have strained into an objection against us. They (says he, speaking of those, against whose seduction St Paul precautions the Colossians) affirm, that we ought to be reconciled to God not by Christ but angels (in Epist. ad Col. 2. 68.) Dicunt non oportere per Christum adduci nos ad Deum, sed per angelos. Which blasphemous doctrine the apostle calls a fleshly and carnal thought, and an intruding into things we have not seen. He likewise calls it a will-worship, and a false or affected humility in submitting themselves to those as their mediators, and reconcilers to God, who are utterly incapable of that high office, which certainly belongs to Christ alone. When therefore you can prove, that our desiring the prayers of saints and angels is the sacrilegious worship here described: that is, when you can prove us guilty of taking away the mediatorship from Christ, and attributing it to angels, it will then be time enough to swagger, and tell me, that St Paul's words are a full answer to all our pretensions for our invocation of saints and angels.

G.—My lord, whatever is not of faith is sin according to the apostle's rule, Rom. xiv. 23. But it is not of faith that the saints hear us, therefore it is sinful in practice to invoke them.

L.—A notable argument indeed! And to shew you the full strength of it, I retort it thus: Whatever is not of faith is sin. But it is not of faith, that an absent friend will receive my letter, whereby I desire his prayers, therefore it is sinful to desire by letter the prayers of an absent friend. I think a man needs not be a conjurer to answer either. But, to leave off trifling, St Paul's true meaning is, that whatever is done mala fide, that is, against conscience, is sinful in practice. And if you can prove, that we act against conscience in desiring the prayers of saints, then St Paul's rule will be against us.

SECTION VII.—THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A MEDIATOR OF REDEMPTION, AND A MEDIATOR OF INTERCESSION.

G.—My lord, God has given Christ to us as the one mediator between God and man, 1 Tim. ii. 5. But you have “made to yourselves many mediators to assist and help him, “as if his mediation, and intercession were not sufficient.” —p. 116.

L.—Sir, if St Paul thought the mediation and intercession of Christ insufficient, and made many mediators to himself when he desired the prayers of the Romans, Rom. xv. 30; then we are guilty of the same crime in desiring a part in the prayers of the saints. But every one, that is but well instructed in his Catechism will tell you, that, though there be but one mediator of redemption (of which St Paul speaks) yet all, that pray for us, may improperly be called mediators of prayer or intercession. I say improperly, because there is only one (to wit, Jesus Christ) who can have immediate access to God for us: and all others, that pray for us, must use his mediation as well as we ourselves, when we direct our prayers to God.

In this sense therefore there are many mediators, and whoever prays for another, mediates (as it were) between him and Almighty God. In this sense St Paul teaches us, Gal. iii. 19, that the law was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator, which Theodoret says was Moses. Tom. 3. p. 276. And Moses said thus of himself, I stood between the Lord and you at that time, Deut. v. 5. In this sense the Lutheran profession of Wittemberg says, Tit. de Ordine: If we mean a mediator of prayer, every good man is another's mediator through Jesus Christ: because it is every man's duty to recommend the salvation of others by prayers to God. This is our doctrine clearly and fully explained.

Bishop Montague speaks the same language in antidote, p. 10. I do not deny (says he) but the saints are mediators (as they are called) of prayer and intercession — They interpose with God by their supplications, and mediate by their prayers. And again in his treatise of Invoc. p. 118, he says of us: I grant Christ is not wronged in his mediation. It is no impiety to say as they do, holy Mary pray for us, holy Peter pray for me. This worthy protestant will, I hope, teach you some moderation, and make you blush at what you just now told me, viz., that we make to ourselves many mediators TO ASSIST AND HELP CHRIST, as if his mediation and intercession were NOT SUFFICIENT; which is wronging Christ in the highest degree.

G.—My lord, you make more applications to saints, than to Christ, or to God himself. You have ten ave Marias for one pater noster.—p. 116.

L.—Sir, every prayer, by which I invoke the saints has its principal tendency to God, since I only desire them to pray to him for me: and it is from him alone I expect the blessings, for which I desire the assistance of their prayers. So that ten ave Mary's are in effect ten petitions to God for such or such a favour through the intercession of his blessed mother. And is not this a most grievous scandal!

G.—My lord, you have multiplied your saints without number like heathen deities, and new canonizations are going on every day.—p. 116.

L.—But, Sir, are saints the worse for being many in number? Or are you afraid the old ones will be forced to quit their place in heaven to make room for new comers? I assure you, Sir, no protestant saint will be a sufferer by it. Your pretty comparison shall be considered immediately.

G.—Every country, city, parish, and almost person have a particular saint for their patron.—pp. 116, 117.

L.—So much the better, Sir, I am glad to hear it. Every man has his angel-guardian to succour and defend him: and if he has besides a saint to pray for him, is there any harm in it?

G.—You have saints, as the heathens had gods for the “sea, for the air, fire, &c., for peace, for war, for learning, for all sorts of trades and occupations.”—p. 117.

L.—But with this difference at least, that the heathens not only made gods of most wicked and flagitious men, as drunkards, robbers, whore-mongers, &c., but offered sacrifice to them, which is due to God alone: and we only implore the prayers of persons, whose holiness, and happy state nothing but the blackest malice can question.

G.—St Christopher, and St Clement are for the sea, especially the virgin Mary, to whom the scamen sing ave maris stella.”—p. 117.

L.—Well, Sir! and is not that much better than cursing and swearing in the midst of a storm?

G.—St Agatha is for the fire, and they make letters on “her day to quench fire with!”—p. 117.

L.—Sir, I suspect this story comes out of some protestant mint; and I should be glad to know the country or town where this is practised, and allowed of.

G.—St Nicholas and St Gregory are for scholars, St Luke for painters, &c. And you have saints for all diseases. St Cornelius cures the falling sickness, St Apollonia the tooth-ach, St Roche the pox, &c.”—p. 117.

L.—The pox do you say? For shame, Sir! The plague you should have said. But it is no sin to belie the Church of Rome. Go on.

G.—Your people have particular saints for all beasts and cattle. St Eloy presides over the horses, and St Antony over the swine, &c., and they bring their cattle to be blessed by these saints on their particular days. And they pray to these saints jointly with God. A scholar says, God and St Nicholas be my speed. And when one sneezes, God help you and St John. And to a horse if he stumbles, God and St Eloy save thee. And upon every surprise they cry, Jesus Maria.”—p. 117.

L.—Surely, Sir, it shews a much more pious disposition to cry Jesus Maria, than God damn me upon every surprise. But as to the other fine sayings mentioned by you, I cannot imagine where you have picked them up. For I have conversed with many scholars in my life time: I have also heard many a man sneeze, and seen many horses stumble; yet I cannot remember I ever heard any of the prayers you mention. But let it be so; where is the harm in calling upon God, and St Nicholas or any other saint at the same time? The saints are united to God in eternal bliss; and if I join them together in my thoughts, or name them together in my prayer; that is, if I pray God, and invoke his saints at the same time, I hope it is better at least than lampooning God in his saints.

G.—My lord, to pray to the saints jointly with God is somewhat too familiar, and looks like putting them upon the level.

L.—Ay, Sir, it would do so, if we prayed to the saints as we do to God. But if we only invoke the saints as intercessors at the same time that we call upon God as the giver of all good gifts, there is no danger of putting them upon the level. Prayer is the desire or affection of the heart, and if the heart moves at the same time towards God and his saints, or towards Christ and his blessed mother, as when I say, Jesus Maria, does it make no difference between the Creator and the creature? If so, then it will be blasphemy to praise God in his saints: because in that act I must of necessity join God and his saints together. Nay I cannot praise God in his saints, but in the same act whether I will or not, I praise and honour the saints with an inferior or relative honour.

What you tell me concerning St Eloy's PRESIDING (as you term it) over horses, and St Antony over the swine, is a very curious piece of erudition, to which I was an utter stranger till now.

But, to give a short answer to this whole piece of buffoonery, we honour all God's saints, because they were his faithful servants on earth, and are honoured by him as his friends in heaven. And if the people address themselves to this or that particular saint rather than others, it is not because there is a division of offices among the saints, or that they may not all equally intercede for any favour without entrenching upon each other's prerogative, but because (according to St Austin's remark, Epist. 78. olim 137. Sect. 3.) as the saints have their several gifts bestowed upon them in this life, so Almighty God thinks fit to honour them differently in heaven. And the people that invoke them, have found by experience, that God is pleased to grant such or such particular favours through their intercession. But your comparing on this score God's saints with the heathen deities is a most unchristian reflection, because we do not honour them as gods but as the friends, and servants of God, of whom alone we hope to obtain the blessings, for which we desire their prayers.

SECTION VIII.—ST AUSTIN FALSIFIED.

“G.—The word gods is frequently given in scripture to angels, and to men as ministers of God.—

L.—It is so sometimes. What then?

“G.—Thus the heathens understood it, and supposed their gods to be such ministers, as Æolus to govern the winds, Neptune the sea, &c. Therefore they called them Diî Medioxumi, inferior gods, as standing in the middle betwixt the supreme God and us, to succour and punish us according to his orders.”—pp. 117, 118.

L.—It seems then according to you, that the heathens in calling those gods whom they had deified, understood that word in a very innocent sense, and as it is sometimes taken in scriptures for the ministers of the true supreme God. Really, Sir, with a few touches more of your exquisite skill it is to be hoped the heathens will shortly be transformed into true worshippers. But they have unluckily spoiled all, and explained their own meaning in fact by offering sacrifices to their inferior gods no less than to their supreme god Jupiter, which is a convincing proof, that they regarded them all as truly gods, and were blind enough to believe, that there were higher and lower degrees amongst the gods as well as amongst creatures :

though in reality both their higher and lower gods were but devils, or evil spirits.

“G.—St Austin, who knew them well, tells us what they argued for themselves. They said, we do not worship evil demons or spirits, but we worship those, whom you [christians] call angels, the powers of the great, the ministers of the great God. August. in Ps. 96. But St Austin answered them, that they must be evil spirits, whom they worshipped, because they required worship from men as the devil did from our Saviour; which the good angels always refused. And he quotes Rev. xix. 10, and xxii. 9, where the angel forbade John to worship him. And the same did the saints upon earth; as Peter refused it from Cornelius, Acts x. 26. And Paul and Barnabas from the men of Lystra, Acts xiv. 14, 15.”
—p. 118.

L.—Sir, it is no wonder the heathens would not own their gods to be evil spirits. But St Austin upon the 96 Psalm quoted by you confutes them very solidly, and I am sorry I must here accuse you of a notorious falsification of that father's answer to the heathens. You say his answer is thus, viz.: that they must be evil spirits whom they worshipped; because they required worship from men.

Now the word WORSHIP is equivocal, and may either signify divine worship, or that inferior or relative honour, which we pay to saints and angels. Therefore to render it at least doubtful, which of the two worships St Austin condemned in his answer to the heathens, you have very dexterously altered his words; which, if truly quoted, are clear, and incapable of a double meaning. His true words are these: Dic mihi, damonia colis, an spiritus bonos, quales sunt angeli? Sunt enim angeli sancti, et sunt spiritus maligni. Ego dico in templis tuis non coluntur nisi spiritus maligni. Qui sibi exigunt superbe SACRIFICIUM, et volunt se coli TANQUAM DEOS, maligni sunt, superbi sunt. That is to say, Tell me do you worship devils or holy spirits, such as angels are? For there are holy angels, and there are evil spirits: I say that in your temples only evil spirits are worshipped. For they, who proudly require SACRIFICE to be offered to them, and will be worshipped AS GODS are evil and proud spirits.

These, Sir, are St Austin's words upon the 96 Psalm, and your translating them as you have done, is such a piece of disingenuity, as all men of honour and conscience will detest. For it is manifest, and you cannot but be conscious of it to yourself, that his words express and specify that worship, which is OFFERING SACRIFICE, and can therefore render you no manner of service against our invocation of saints and angels, unless you can prove, that we offer sacrifice to them, and worship them AS GODS, which the blackest malice cannot accuse us of.

You say St Austin quotes Rev. xix. 10, and xxii. 9, where the angel forbade St John to worship him. To which St Austin himself answers for me: that the angel appeared in such a manner, that he might have been adored as God, and therefore St John's mistake was to be corrected. Aug. Quæst. 61, in Gen.

After which you quote St Peter refusing worship from Cornelius. To which I answer, that though the worship intended by Cornelius was no more than a respect due to St Peter's character he refused it out of humility. For if what Cornelius did, was in itself unlawful, then kneeling to a parent, or the king is likewise unlawful.

Lastly, you produce the example of Paul and Barnabas refusing worship from the men of Lystra. Acts xiv. 11, &c. But do not the Acts themselves tell us what sort of worship these men intended? The gods, said they, are come down to us in the likeness of men. And they called Barnabas Jupiter, and Paul Mercury, because he was the chief speaker. Then the priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands, and would have done sacrifice to Barnabas and Paul, &c. And had they not then reason to refuse this worship from them? But if the men of Lystra had only desired their prayers, as we do those of the saints and angels, would Paul and Barnabas have scrupled to grant their request.

SECTION IX.—THE SCANDALOUS PARALLEL BETWEEN THE HEATHEN WORSHIP, AND THAT OF ROMAN CATHOLICS CONFUTED.

ADVERTISEMENT.—After the gentleman's last words in his Case Stated, p. 118, his lordship is so very ignorant as to answer, that the heathens worshipped every one of their gods as supreme. Which blunder was necessary to introduce the scandalous parallel between the heathens and Roman Catholics.

I call it scandalous, 1. because idolatry is a crime of the blackest nature; and nothing can be a more scandalous calumny, than to fix it upon so considerable a body of christians, as Roman Catholics are, unless the charge be made out with such strong and undeniable evidence, that no man of sense can oppose or deny it.

I call it scandalous, 2. because it unchurches the whole church of Christ for many ages before the pretended Reformation: in which ages the invocation of saints was taught and practised by the whole christian church upon earth, as I have already proved even from the testimony of protestant writers.

Lastly, I call it a scandalous parallel, because it not only damns the whole church (that was) of Great Britain for 900 years before the Reformation, but turns all the most eminent saints and doctors of the primitive ages (who all taught and practised the invocation of saints, as I have proved) into as rank monsters, or ministers of Satan, as idolatry can make them.

Now let us have this noble parallel. But the reader, to understand the connexion, must remember his lordship's wise saying in the former conversation, that the heathens worshipped every one of their gods as supreme, and independent; to which the gentleman answers thus:—

G.—Some men make monsters of others to hide their own deformity.”—p. 118.

L.—Sir, your observation is very just, if it be but duly applied. For protestants make monsters of papists to hide the deformity of their own reformed churches.

G.—Your guides have set up this notion [viz., that the heathens worshipped every one of their gods as supreme] to hinder the parallel betwixt the heathen worship of their inferior gods, and yours of saints and angels.”—p. 118.

L.—Sir, I know nothing of the notion you speak of; nor shall I stand in any need of it to confute your scandalous parallel; which you can never make out, unless you either prove that our saints and angels are evil spirits, as the inferior gods of the heathens were; or that we offer sacrifice to them, as the heathens did to their inferior deities; or that we do not worship the true God.

G.—My lord, there is nothing more evident, than that “the heathens did acknowledge one supreme and true God, “though in much ignorance and superstition.”—p. 119.

L.—Sir, if you mean, that the heathens worshipped the true God, there is nothing more evident, than that the word of God is flatly against you in innumerable places. I shall only quote two or three to satisfy you: Because ALL THE GODS OF THE NATIONS are devils, but the Lord has made the heavens, Psalm xcv. 5. They sacrificed their sons and daughters unto devils, Psalm cv. 37. I say, that the things, which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, AND NOT TO GOD. 1 Cor. x. 20. And have you after this the confidence to say, that nothing is more evident than that the heathens acknowledged, that is, worshipped the true supreme God?

G.—My Lord, St Paul says, Rom. i. 19, 20. &c., That they knew God, that he was manifest unto them, even his eternal power and Godhead. So that they were without excuse in their foolish imagination to change the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to the corruptible man, &c. And he told——

L.—Hold, Sir, you shall have full liberty to proceed as soon as I have answered this text. St Paul speaks here not of heathens in general, but of some of the wisest amongst them, who knew God by the light of nature, but yet their worship did not answer their knowledge; on the contrary, in compliance with the people, they practised the rankest idolatry. And therefore I do not like your &c., because it stifles that part of the text, which utterly spoils your parallel. The text unmangled is thus: Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God has shewed it unto them. Rom. i. 19. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse, 20. Because that when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were they thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened, 21. Professing themselves wise, they became fools, 22. And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things, 23. And again, 25 he tells us, that they changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever.

This is the text; and we have here an exact description of a set of men, who, though they knew God by the light of nature from the wonderful creation of the world, yet contrary to that light they fell into all the foulest practices of idolatry, as offering sacrifice to the statues of Jupiter, Venus, Mercury, &c. (which the apostle calls, changing the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man), nay even to the statues of birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things: whence the apostle concludes, that they changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator. Both which parts of the text you have very prudently clapped under an et cætera, because they lay open the shame of your parallel, and make it look as nonsensical as it is scandalous; unless you either prove, that we worship the images of false gods; or that the images of birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things are worshipped by us; or finally, that we pay divine honours to the images of Christ or his saints. Now, Sir, you may go on, where you left off.

“G.—St Paul spoke thus to the Athenians: Whom therefore you ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. Acts xvii. 23. Now he did not preach a false god unto them: “but they had blended the worship of God with these inferior gods or demons, which was their superstition. For so the “word signifies δεισιδαιμονία, the fear of these demons. And “it is thus rendered every where in the New Testament, which “we translate superstition. And so the vulgar Latin. Acts “xvii. 22, xxv. 19. And the Latin word superstition means “the same thing, and is derived, as Servius has it, from “superstare, as being a fear of those heavenly powers, who “superstant, stand over us: and so superstition is superstantium rerum timor. Others derive it from superstites, that “these divi ex hominibus facti, men deified after their death “are still superstites, and the fear of them as such is superstition, or, qui superstitem memoriam defunctorum colunt, who “worship the memory of these dead men.”—p. 119.

L.—What a deal of learned pedantry have we here about the derivation of a word! But to come directly to the point, the main drift of what you have now said is to shew first, that the heathens worshipped the true God. For unless you can prove this, your parallel betwixt heathens and papists, is most eminently ridiculous, and 2dly, that their blending or mixing the worship of their inferior gods or demons with that of the true God is just what papists do in honouring God’s saints and angels, and joining it with their worship of the true God. And so you compare our honouring the saints in heaven with the heathen worship of their men deified by them after their death.

But, Sir, you forget yourself to be a member of the Church of England, which keeps particular holy days for the apostles, St John Baptist, St Stephen, &c., and has one holy day for all the saints in general, and another for St Michael, and all the angels. [Case Stated, p. 135.] Now I call this paying a religious honour or worship (give it what name you please) as we do to God’s saints and angels. And if this be heathenish superstition in us, I should be glad to know what name it is to be called by, when it is practised by protestants. But I believe you will be forced to come to this answer, that in the religious honour you pay to saints and angels by keeping their holy days, you do not regard them as gods, but as the faithful servants and ministers of God: nor do you offer sacrifice to them, as the heathens did to their inferior gods, and that therefore you cannot be accused of heathenish superstition in keeping holy days in honour of them. But if this answer will leave no room for a parallel between the heathens and you, I hope it will convince you of the scandalous nonsense of the parallel you make between the heathen worship, and ours: and it follows hence, that though it were true, as it is most false, that the heathens worshipped the true God, your parallel would be defective in an essential point.

G.—Ay, but, my lord, you do not reflect that we do not pray to the saints and angels, as you do: and this is a material difference.

L.—Sir, it serves only to convince the world how incoherent you are with yourselves. It shews your religion is not built upon steady principles, but put together by humour and caprice. For is it not a contradiction in practice to scruple at desiring the prayers of saints and angels, when at the same time you make no scruple to keep holy days in honour of them? Neither you nor we make any difficulty to desire the prayers of our fellow mortals upon earth, who are yet subject to many failings: yet no church in the world was ever so extravagant as to institute holy days in honour of mortal men. Which is a convincing proof, that instituting holy days in honour of creatures is a religious honour or worship of a far higher degree than desiring their prayers; which is all that is meant by praying to saints. And therefore if there be no superstition, or breach of a commandment in the one, there can be none in the other.

G.—But, my lord, what do you say to the text, I have quoted from the Acts to prove that the heathens worshipped the true God?

L.—I answer it will clear itself, if it be but set in its own true light, it is thus: As I passed (says St Paul) and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore you ignorantly worship (that is, without knowing him) him I declare unto you. Then he proceeds to explain to them the nature and attributes of God, and tells them amongst other things, that he dwells not in temples made with hands, nor is like unto gold, or silver, or stone graven by art, or man's device. Whence I infer that the Athenians were wholly ignorant of the spiritual and infinitely perfect nature of God; since St Paul was forced to instruct them in the very first rudiments we usually teach children. I infer again that they worshipped merely at random something they knew not what : and therefore dedicated their altar to the unknown God. In all probability they had heard the God of the Jews or christians spoken of ; and as they were fond of any new deity (provided their old ones were not prejudiced by it) they immediately erected an altar to him. And is not this an admirable text to support your parallel ! Now let us hear what you have farther to say.

“ G.—My lord, the heathen worship of their lesser gods is “ what is forbidden in the first commandment, which respects “ the object of worship, that no religious worship is to be “ given to any but to the supreme God alone. The second “ commandment relates to the manner of worship, that is, by “ images. But this your church has hidden from the people, “ and divided the tenth into two to keep up the number, “ that the people might think they still have the ten com- “ mandments. And it is thus in your very Catechism ad “ Parochos. But of this hereafter.”—p. 120.

SECTION X.—OF DIVIDING THE COMMANDMENTS.

L.—Sir, I must take your words in pieces to separate truth from falsehood. It is true that the first commandment respects the object of worship, and forbids the heathen worship of their lesser gods, nay of their great god Jupiter also. It is likewise true, that it forbids religious worship to be given to any but the supreme God alone ; if by religious worship, you mean supreme divine adoration, or offering sacrifice. But if you mean, an inferior relative honour, it is false what you say ; and you must grant it to be so, unless you will own the Church of England guilty of a breach of the first commandment, whenever she keeps holy days for saints and angels, which I am sure is a religious honour, or worship ; call it by what name you please.

But when you tell me, that the first commandment forbids religious worship to be given to any but the supreme God alone, I should be glad to know, whom you mean by the supreme God. Do you mean the supreme god of the heathens, or the God of christians? For it is certain the heathens had a god, whom they regarded as supreme.

G.—My lord, I have already told you, that heathens worshipped one supreme and true God, and brought good proofs for it, and I will prove it more fully hereafter. What need then of your question, since there can be but one supreme true God.

L.—Well then, Sir, I infer that Jupiter, who certainly was the supreme god both of the Greeks and Romans, was according to you the very same true God, whom christians now adore; and since you now tell me, that the worship of the lesser heathen gods is the thing precisely forbid in the first commandment, I conclude that according to your doctrine it is no breach of that commandment to worship Jupiter. What pity is it that you have not printed a true protestant explanation of the ten commandments!

But you tell me our church has hid the second commandment from the people, and divided the tenth into two to keep up the number, and that it is thus divided in our Catechism ad Parochos. Sir, it is thus divided not only in that Catechism, but in St Austin himself, Quæst. 71. in Exod., who maintains expressly, that what you call the second commandment is but a part, or fuller explanation of the first: and he divides the commandments as we do. Yet I never heard St Austin taxed with hiding the commandments from the people, or designing to put a trick upon them by making them think they had the ten commandments, when they had but nine. I must therefore suppose the learned fathers, who were contemporary with St Austin, or lived in the following ages, either wanted your wit to detect, or your zeal to reprove so notorious a cheat. But since you intend to speak of this hereafter, I shall wait for your leisure to give a full answer to it. In the mean time I desire you to remember, that the deadly sin of calumny is forbid by one of the ten commandments, and you may take my word for it, that I will prove you guilty of this deadly sin, whenever you attempt to make good this charge, viz., that we hide any of the commandments from the people. However all endeavours are used by the ministers of your church to possess the people with this notion of us; and it were happy for you and many more that this commandment, thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour, had never appeared in the tables of the declogue.

I shall here only ask one question, viz., Why your dividing the first commandment into two, may not with equal justice be said to have been done to keep up the number, that the people might think they still have the ten commandments, as our dividing the tenth? For the scripture has not determined the matter. It only tells us, that there are ten commandments; but how many belong to the first table, and how many to the second, or whether the first or the tenth is to be divided into two, is nowhere specified.

What you say, viz., that the second commandment (as you call it) relates only to the manner of worship by images, is false. On the contrary, it forbids the worship of God to be given to images. And this is the natural import of these words, thou shalt not adore nor worship them. Exod. xx. 5, which regards the object of worship as well as these words, thou shalt not have strange gods before me; and surely differs very much from the false interpretation you put upon them, viz., that they forbid the worship of God by images. For how can that be true, since God himself commanded the ark, and the cherubims to be made with respect to his worship? Or did God command and forbid the selfsame thing? But it is somewhat remarkable, that you should content yourself with barely asserting a thing of that moment, and without so much as offering, at the least, proof of it. The only reason I can give for it is, that saying is much easier than proving.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The gentleman's following words appear to have no manner of connexion with what he said last. But since they immediately follow one another in his Case Stated, the reader must take them as they are.

SECTION XI.—THE PARALLEL CONTINUED.

“G.—The heathens had their good and evil demons, as their good and evil genii. But according to St Austin's rule, they must be evil demons, who accepted the worship of men, which were all the heathen demons——”

L.—Sir, I must make bold to refresh your memory; for you have already forgot your falsification of those words of St Austin, to which you refer me. So go on.

“G.—Therefore the word demon is taken in the worst sense, and translated devil throughout the New Testament: and what we translate the doctrine of devils, 1 Tim iv. 1, is the doctrine of the dæmones, or, the worship of demons; and a various lection has, who worship the dead. The dæmones of the heathens were their dead heroes whom they made divi by their apotheosis, as the Pope does saints by a canonization.”—p. 120.

L.—Now, Sir, I must own, your parallel is most admirable. For, as the heathens made gods of their dead heroes, who were most wicked wretches, and offered sacrifice to them; just so the Pope or Church of Rome declares men eminent for the holiness of their lives to be saints, and desires a part in their prayers; which is just as good a parallel, as is contained in the two following verses:—

Even as in a banquet there be many dishes,

Even so your doublet be too short for your breeches.

Pray, Sir, leave off this profane trifling, and begin to speak sense.

“G.—But it is too gross to put it upon the heathens that they thought every one of those gods, whom they made, was the supreme God, who made themselves.”—p. 120.

L.—Well, Sir! And who ever told you they did? However, though they did not think them all to be supreme gods, yet they offered sacrifice to them as much as to their supreme Jupiter.

“G.—They owned these to be lesser gods, and only the virtues and powers of the great God: and they thought, that they honoured the supreme God the more by doing honour to his substitutes, and all their worship was ultimately referred to him, so that he only was worshipped in all their gods and godesses. For they made him king of all “ their gods and goddesses. Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 4. c. 9. c. 11.

 “ And the common appellation given to Jupiter in Homer is “ the father and king of gods as well as men. And he re“ presents him as commanding all the other gods, sending “ them on his errands, calling them to an account, and some“ times chastising them. He was called Magnus Deus, “ the great god. And Lucian in his dialogues brings in “ Neptune making suit to Mercury, that he might speak with “ Jupiter.”—pp. 120, 121.

L.—Sir, not only Homer, but all the heathen poets call Jupiter the father and king of gods as well as men, and the Romans styled him Optimus Maximus, the best and greatest god. Which makes it plain, that Jupiter was the supreme god both of the Greeks and Romans. And since, according to what you now labour to prove, the heathens worshipped the one supreme and true God (because this is necessary to make good your parallel) the consequence is manifest, that the Jupiter of the heathens is according to your doctrine the same as the true God of the christians. This bishop Stillingfleet (of whom you have borrowed your noble parallel) taught first to the shame and scandal of christianity. But after Dr Goodwin's solid confutation of that scandalous piece, I never thought he would have had a follower. Is it then possible that persons, who pretend to be ministers of the gospel, should maintain that the infamous Jupiter adored by the pagans was the true God! For if he was the true God then, he is so still; and by consequence it is no blasphemy to say, I believe in Jupiter the Almighty Creator of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ his only son. And if any one asks me what Jupiter I mean? I may safely answer, Homer's Jupiter: that very Jupiter, whom the pagans adored. This shows how shocking and offensive to christian ears the consequences are, which follow from your maintaining that the Jupiter of the heathens was the true supreme God.

I am sure at least the primitive christians were not of your mind. For thousands of them lost their lives, because they refused to worship the Jupiter of the heathens, and they never refused to worship the true God.

Nay Origen tells us in plain terms, that he was not the true God, but a devil. We are ready, says he, to undergo any torments rather than confess Jupiter to be God. For we do not believe Jupiter and Sabaoth to be the same, neither indeed to be any god at all, but a devil, who is delighted with the name of Jupiter; an enemy to men and God. L. 5. contra Celsum. p. 487. This, Sir, breaks the very neck of your fine parallel, and so you may go on, if you please.

G.—We have sufficient testimony in scripture of the “heathens acknowledging the one supreme and true God, Nebuchadnezzar calls him God of gods and Lord of kings. Dan. ii. 47.”—p. 121.

L.—But in the very same verse he calls him Daniel's God, which is a sufficient innuendo, that even then he neither acknowledged nor worshipped him as his own God. I add, that this profession of the true God was only the effect of a sudden transport of admiration in regard of Daniel's wonderful discovery and interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream: but it made no real change either in his belief or practice. For the very next chapter contains a relation of the famous golden statue or idol set up by him with a positive command, that all should adore it. Nay, to shew plainly that he did not believe the true God, when Daniel's three companions were brought before him, and accused of refusing to adore his statue, he spoke thus insultingly to them, and who is that God, that shall deliver you out of my hands? Dan. iii. 15.

G.—But he calls him afterwards the most high God, 26.”

L.—He does so. But it was like his former profession, that is, a sudden transport, when he saw Daniel's three companions delivered by him in a most wonderful manner out of the fiery furnace.

G.—He says, I blessed the most high, and I praised and honoured him, that liveth for ever and ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom from generation to generation. And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and he does according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth, and “no man can stay his hand, or say unto him, what doest thou?

“Dan. iv. 34, 35.”—pp. 121, 122.

L.—This indeed looks like a sincere profession of the true God. But when was it, that Nebuchadnezzar made this profession? It was after God had humbled him in a strange manner, and then restored him to his kingdom, according to Daniel's prediction. However it is still a question disputed, whether this made such a lasting impression upon him as to reclaim him entirely from idolatry. The scripture no where assures us of it. Nor do we find in him the necessary marks of a sincere conversion: since he neither released the people of God from their unjust captivity, nor restored the sacred vessels, he had carried away in the pillage of the temple of Jerusalem: as he must have done, if he had been truly converted to God.

G.—Cyrus also calls him the Lord God of heaven. Ezra i. 2. And Darius the same in as high expressions, as any christian could use, the living God, and steadfast for ever: “and his kingdom that, which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end, &c. Dan. vi. 26.”—p. 122.

L.—Sir, the heathens, who held the plurality of Gods, could by fits and starts give those titles to the true one, without forsaking their false gods, or changing their worship. Therefore as to Cyrus, though he calls him the Lord God of heaven in the second verse, he plainly distinguishes him in the third from the god he worshipped himself. Who is there, says he, among you of all his people? His God be with him and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD GOD OF ISRAEL. He is the God WHICH IS IN JERUSALEM. Cyrus therefore did not regard him as the God of Babylon.

But as to your quotation from the 6th chapter of Daniel, it is the very chapter I should choose in the whole Bible to prove that the heathens did not acknowledge or worship the true God. Daniel's miraculous preservation from the lions is the principal subject of it; and Almighty God, who delivered his servant in so wonderful a manner, is called throughout the whole chapter the God of Daniel, to distinguish him from the god of the Babylonians. First, 5, Then said these men, we shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of HIS GOD.

2dly, 11, Then these men assembled, and found Daniel praying, and making supplications before HIS GOD.

3dly, It tells us, that when Daniel was cast into the den of lions, the king spake and said unto Daniel, THY GOD, whom thou servest continually, will deliver thee, 16, and 4thly, 'That the king coming early next morning to the den cried with a lamentable voice, O Daniel, servant of the living God, is THY GOD, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions? 20, Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live for ever, MY GOD has sent his angel, &c., 21, 22.

Who sees not here, that Daniel's God is designedly marked out as distinguished from the god of Darius and the Babylonians? Nay in the very edict, wherein the high expressions you speak of are found, Darius calls him the God of Daniel. So that those high expressions were indeed the fruits of a sudden transport of joy for Daniel's deliverance, but had no effect as to any change of worship. And it is very remarkable, that by that edict Darius does not command his subjects to worship, but only to tremble and fear before the God of Daniel, 26. So that whilst that prince honoured the true God in his edict, both he and the people continued their worship of idols in their temples.

"G.—My lord, they did not think it inconsistent to acknowledge one God above all, and yet to suppose that every nation had its own god or gods in subordination to the supreme God, and as deputies under him. This was their notion. And they supposed that Judea had its own tutelary God, as well as other countries. Therefore the king of Assyria having conquered it, sent to teach his people, who went thither, the manner of the God of the land, to appease his wrath, who had plagued them with lions. 2 Kings xvii. 26, 27, 33. But yet they forsook not their own gods, for it is said, they feared the Lord, and served their own gods.

“ And they allowed the same liberty to the Jews, who were “ not required in any of their captivities to renounce their “ own God; but only to worship the gods of the nations “ where they lived. And of these tutelar gods, they supposed “ one might be stronger or more powerful than another, and “ therefore they would boast of their gods one country against “ another. Thus said Sennacherib, who are they among all
 “ the gods of the countries, that has delivered their country out “ of my hand, that the Lord (the tutelar God of Judea) should “ deliver Jerusalem out of my hand? Where are the gods of “ Hamath, and of Arpad, &c. 2 Kings xviii. 34, 35.
 “ When Moses and Aaron told Pharaoh that the God of the “ Hebrews had met with them, he was not offended that they “ had another God besides those which were worshipped in “ Egypt; he took it as a thing granted, that every people had “ their own tutelar god.

“ This then was the difference between the Jews and Gen- “ tiles; the Gentiles thought it lawful to worship the tutelar “ god of any country, but still in subordination to the most “ high God, as has been shewed: on the other hand the Jews “ were obliged to worship the Lord God, the supreme God, “ and him only, and they were forbid to worship any of the “ gods of the nations.

“ But this sin they often fell into, and worshipped these gods, “ but still in conjunction with the Lord their God; and it is “ said, they did worship, and swear by the Lord and swear by “ Malcham. Zeph. i. 5. But Samuel told them, if ye return “ unto the Lord, with all your hearts, then put away the strange “ gods and Ashtaroth from amongst you—and serve him only “ —then they did put away Baalim and Ashtaroth, and served
 “ the Lord only. 1 Sam. vii. 3, 4.”—pp. 122, 123.

L.—Sir, What you said first concerning the king of Assyria sending to teach his people in Samaria the manner of the God of the land, is a good proof that the Assyrians, before they had taken Samaria, were utter strangers to the worship of the true God, and in all probability would have continued so, had it not been for fear of the lions. But, to be delivered from that plague, they sent for a Jewish priest to teach them the manner of the God of the land: and if Beelzebub had been the god of the land, they would have done the same. It is true, after that they modelled their religion into a mixture of Judaism and idolatry, and worshipped God jointly with their idols, as the Israelites following the wicked example of Jeroboam had done before them. But what is all this to the purpose? Does it not follow hence, that the heathens worshipped their false gods with subordination to the supreme true God, as you have most falsely asserted? Or does it follow, that Jupiter, the supreme god of the Greeks and Romans; or Baal, the supreme god of the Persians, or Osiris, the supreme god of the Egyptians, was the same true God whom christians adore, which is the scandalous point you chiefly drive at? Sir, the heathen idolatry consisted precisely, not in their joining the worship of false gods with that of the true one, but in their worshipping many false gods, one of which they called supreme: yet though the others were called inferior or lesser gods, they regarded them absolutely as gods, and in many things wholly independent; because they thought they could do either good or mischief by their own power; and therefore they endeavoured to render them favourable by sacrifices; for they sacrificed as absolutely to their lesser gods, as to their mighty Jove. The idolatry of the Jews indeed, when they fell into it, was their joining the worship of false gods with that of the true one, and therefore they are truly said to have forsaken the Lord; because there is but one true God; and he who serves not him alone, does not serve him at all.

“G.—It is called forsaking the Lord, when we will not “obey his commandments, but worship him otherwise than “he has required, and join others with him, which he has “forbidden.”—p. 124.

L.—Yes, Sir, when we join other gods or idols with him. But I hope he has not forbid us to praise him in his saints, or to honour those upon earth, whom he himself honours in heaven.

“G.—He said, the house of Israel is estranged from me, “separated from me by their idols: yet come and inquire of a “prophet concerning me. Ezek. xiv. 5, 7. And again, when “they had slain their children to their idols, then they came

“ the same day into my sanctuary, xxiii. 39. And he says to them, will you burn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods, and come and stand before me in this house, which is called by my name? Jer. vii. 4. It is said, they feared the Lord, and served their own gods after the manner of the nations. But it immediately follows, they fear not the Lord, because they do not after his statutes, wherein he commanded them not to fear other gods. And again, they feared the Lord, and served their graven images. 2 Kings xvii. 33, 34, 41. Yet this was departing from the fear of the Lord, but not a downright denial of the supreme God, or throwing him off from being any more their God, and taking any other god in his room as the supreme God. No, but it was taking other gods with him, of which he says, O do not this abominable thing, which I hate. Jer. xlv. 4.”—p. 124.

L.—Sir, I observe you are always very prodigal of your scripture texts, when you have a thing to prove, which is plain and undeniable. For who was ever so ignorant as to deny that the Jews joined the worship of idols with that of the true God? But what do you infer from it?

G.—This was the first sin, against which God took care to guard in the first commandment, thou shalt have none other gods before me, or with me. Exod. xx. 3, 23. And for the distinction that the worship of inferior gods, or ministers of God is not here forbidden, we say, where the law does not distinguish, we must not. For there is no law, but may be distinguished away. And this is exactly the same notion the heathens had of their dæmones. And the worshipping of these or fearing them, is literally what we call superstition. It is a means of grace, which God has not appointed.—p. 125.

L.—What, Sir! is the worship of demons or evil spirits barely superstition, and not idolatry? Or do we make the worship of demons a means of grace? This is bidding defiance to all shame. But it is not the only impudent calumny insinuated in this piece. You tell me first, that joining the worship of other gods (meaning the lesser gods of the heathens) with that of the true God is the sin, against which God took care to guard us in the first commandment. And do we deny it? On the contrary I assure you, Sir, (though I know you will be sorry to hear it) our divines teach, that it forbids the worship of all false gods whatsoever, that is, not only of those, whom the heathens called inferior gods, but also of your darling great god Jupiter, for whom you are so religiously concerned, as not to suffer him to come within the prohibition of the first commandment. This indeed is a scandalous distinction, which was wholly unknown to the primitive christians, who rather chose to lose their lives than worship Jupiter, as I have already shewed.

But as to the distinction you tacitly father upon us, viz., that the worship of inferior gods is not forbidden in the first commandment, pray, Sir, in what catholic author do you find this distinction? Our divines teach indeed with all the ancient fathers that a relative honour is due to God's saints and angels; and that this is no more forbid by the first commandment, than honouring God's servants upon earth. But is this the same as teaching that the worship of demons, or inferior gods is not forbid by that commandment? The commandment says, thou shalt have none other gods before me, or with me. But it does not say, thou shalt not honour the friends and servants of God.

You have indeed been very craftily cautious, first, to use the word worship; because it is an ambiguous word, and is promiscuously used to signify either divine, or only an inferior or relative honour. And 2dly, by another cunning sleight you make inferior gods, and ministers of God to be synonimous terms. Now I think the saints and angels are truly ministers of God, but not in the number of the lesser gods of the heathens, that are forbid in the first commandment. For if they be, your own church, which keeps one day for all the saints in general, and another for St Michael and all angels, is regularly twice a-year guilty of a breach of that commandment: unless you have the confidence to say, that keeping solemn days in memory of the saints and angels is not honouring them in any manner.

But I presume, Sir, you have now done with your noble parallel, which I think is one of the most notorious pieces of wilful and premeditated slander, that ever was maintained seriously. I shall add a few remarks to what I have already said, to justify this censure. It has been your business to make us appear as rank idolaters as the heathens ever were. And who would have expected any thing less for proof of this enormous accusation, than a full and convincing evidence at least of one of these three points? viz., either that papists do not acknowledge and worship the true God, or that they join with it the worship of false gods, as the Jews did; or that they offer sacrifice, and pay divine honours to the saints and angels. For, whoever is justly accused of idolatry, must be proved guilty of one of these three things.

Now, if you had but attempted to prove any one of these three articles in plain and express terms, all the world would have cried out shame upon you, because the calumny would have been too gross and barefaced. And this you were sensible of. Therefore, to give some plausible colour to your parallel, you have made use of all the little sinister tricks, that a good stock of wit, but a much greater of malice and insincerity could suggest to you.

First, It being notoriously known, that papists worship the true God, you could not possibly attack them on that side. Therefore, to lay the foundation of your parallel, and make them appear no better than heathens even in that essential point, you have laboured with all your strength to prove, that the heathens themselves worshipped the same true God, as christians now do. Though it be a flat contradiction not only to the general notion of mankind, but to innumerable texts of holy scripture.

2dly, Because it is an undeniable truth, that papists do not regard the saints as gods, but only as the servants of the true God, you had no other way to bring them upon the level with heathens, than by maintaining that all their lesser gods, were no more in their opinion than the powers or ministers of the true supreme God; though it be certain, they regarded them all as independent in many things as to their power of doing either good or mischief; and it is notoriously known, that they sacrificed to their lesser gods

as well as to Jupiter; and sacrifice is only offered to such as are properly called and esteemed gods.

But least our not sacrificing to saints and angels should spoil the beauty of your parallel, you took timely care to call St Austin to your assistance by a very dexterous and seasonable falsification of his words. For instead of his saying, that they, who proudly require SACRIFICE to be offered to them, and will be WORSHIPPED AS GODS are evil and proud spirits, you only make him say, that they must be evil spirits, because they required WORSHIP from men: and the reason, which induced you to this trick of legerdemain is very plain; because the word sacrifice spoils all, in determining the manner of worship, which St Austin says is a sure mark of their being evil spirits, who require it; whereas the word worship being equivocal, St Austin's meaning is left doubtful; and the advantage you make of it is to insinuate, that even the inferior honour we pay to saints and angels, which may be called worship, was condemned by that father.

This, Sir, plainly shews, how dear it sometimes costs men to carry on an unjust cause. Truth, honour, conscience, reason, common sense, all must be sacrificed to support it. And truly, Sir, I wish you may not have been at the expense of all these to prove papists idolaters. This I am sure of, that unless you can either prove, that saints and angels are evil spirits, or that desiring their prayers is giving them divine worship, you may as easily prove white to be black, as discover the least shadow of idolatry in our doctrine of the invocation of saints.

SECTION XII.—OF SUPPOSITIOUS SAINTS.

G.—My lord, in your catalogue of saints there are many suppositious ones to be found. What think you of the seven sleepers who slept 362 years, and thought it but one night?—p. 125.

L.—Sir, the seven sleepers are the seven martyrs of Ephesus, who when they were put to death slept in the Lord like St Stephen, Acts vii. 60. That is, died happily; and this is all I believe of their sleeping. The rest has been added by the fabulous Greeks, whose relations we give as little credit to as you yourselves.

“G.—What think you of the eleven thousand English virgins, all martyred together at Cologne, and the fine legend told of them?”—p. 125.

L.—Sir, I find nothing of eleven thousand virgins in our missals; but that St Ursula with her companions suffered martyrdom is no fable. This I believe, and no more.

“G.—What do you think of St George’s killing the dragon, and rescuing the king’s daughter? As true as our ballad of the dragon of Wantley?”—p. 125.

L.—Sir, I join issue with you, and the two dragons may go together, if you please. But is this a good argument, St George neither killed the dragon, nor rescued the king’s daughter, therefore there is no such saint? Nay if fabulous legends must deprive saints of their real being, we shall be in danger of losing the apostles as well as some other saints, who cannot be responsible for fables told of them any more than the apostles, of whom many fabulous stories were handed about even in the first age. One of the authors of those stories, a priest, was degraded by St John the evangelist.

“G.—My lord, as ridiculous as these stories are, yet there are days kept for all these, and offices made for them with prayers to them, and to God, that we may be saved by these their merits.”—p. 125.

L.—What, Sir! By St George’s merits for killing the dragon! There is indeed an office of him; but I do not remember there is any commemoration in it either of the dragon, or of the king’s daughter being rescued by him.

“G.—There are multitudes of the like, which you will find even to a surfeit in the devotions of the Roman church with their breviaries, missals, legends, and authors quoted at large.”—pp. 125, 126.

L.—To a surfeit indeed in that shameful libel; but the author’s quotations are many times full as honest and fair, as yours from St Austin upon the 96th Psalm.

“ G.—And can these prayers be in faith to persons that “ never were in being? And for the merit of actions that “ never were done? This is a means of grace of your own “ invention indeed!”—p. 126.

L.—Sir, a man must be very incredulous to pretend there never were such persons in being as the seven martyrs of Ephesus, St Ursula with her companions, and St George the ancient patron of England, who are the saints you have particularly culled out to pass your jests upon: but since they were once in being, I hope they are so still, and we may beg in faith, that is, with a safe conscience, the blessings of God through their intercession, to which the merits and holiness of their past lives give doubtless a value. But as to the merit of actions, that never were done, I have not yet seen a prayer, for example, to beg any favour of God in consideration of St George's killing the dragon, or rescuing the fair lady out of its jaws. And therefore your saying, this is a means of grace of our own invention, is such a piece of insipid nonsense, that I blush to repeat it.

“ G.—Besides what I have already said, many have been “ canonized for notorious crimes, as your St Thomas Becket “ of Canterbury, whose merit was, that he would exempt “ all ecclesiastics from the secular power, though even in civil “ or criminal causes, which was called asserting the liberties “ of the holy church, and it is fully asserted in the bullæ cœnæ. “ But notwithstanding all these authorities it is a wicked “ principle, and dissolves all civil government: it exempts “ from the king's obedience the first of the three estates of the “ realm, which has or ought to have the greatest influence “ upon the people, and transfers their allegiance to another “ sovereign, which is the highest treason by the laws of all “ well governed nations as well as by the laws of God. Yet “ for asserting this Becket was canonized; and for not giving “ way to it, the king was whipped by the Monks of Canterbury, “ to which he was forced to submit in those times of papal “ supremacy.

“ Such another was the last year's saint Pope Pius V., “ the great assertor, and last practiser of the power of the “ Pope to depose princes, and who broke the communion of “ the church of England.”—p. 126.

L.—Sir, I have already answered your objection concerning Pope Pius V. (Part I. Sect. 53.) against whom I perceive you have a particular spleen, because he excommunicated your virgin Queen, the foundress and first she-Pope of your church. But your saying, that many have been canonized for notorious crimes is a most notorious calumny, and more becoming the devil, who is the professed enemy of God's saints, than a christian divine.

You instance in St Thomas of Canterbury, of whom I have already spoken (Part I. Sect. 43.) and justified his standing up for the ancient liberties of the church, ibid. You say his merit was, that he would exempt all ecclesiastics from the secular power. Sir, his merit was his constant holiness of life, his pastoral zeal, and invincible patience in suffering the persecutions of his enemies. His merit was, that he would not betray his conscience, to comply with his prince; that he would not leave the church, wherewith God had entrusted him, in a worse condition than he had found it; nor yield up its liberties to the secular power, as an unworthy successor of his, your first protestant archbishop Cranmer, did afterwards. This I say, was his merit, which you call a notorious crime; and being assassinated (though without the king's orders) he had both God, and the king witnesses of his innocence.

What you add, viz., that the king was whipped by the monks of Canterbury, to which he was forced to submit in those times of papal supremacy, is false as to his being forced to it. He submitted indeed like another Theodosius to the penance enjoined him by the Pope's legate; but his whipping was no part of it. This he underwent voluntarily three years after, when he made a pilgrimage to St Thomas's tomb to beg his prayers against the French, the Scots, and his own rebellious son. And God was pleased to manifest in a singular manner how acceptable this humiliation was to him. For upon the very day that he lay prostrate at St Thomas's tomb, the king of Scots was taken prisoner. Soon after he raised the siege of Rouën, which his son and the French king attacked, and in a short time found himself quiet possessor of his kingdom. All these particulars you will find in the learned Du Pin. Cent. 12. p. 132, of whose veracity I know you have a great opinion.

SECTION XIII.—OF DEVOTION TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

“G.—There is one saint truly so, of whom I have reserved “to speak in this place, because of the excesses in your church “in their devotions to her bordering even upon blasphemy
“to any common ear.”—p. 127.

L.—Now indeed you startle me. I hope however we do not make a goddess of her, nor offer sacrifice to her: though we endeavour to pay her all the honour due to her as mother of God.

“G.—No less than a canonized person, St Bonaventure has “published what he calls the Psalter of the Blessed Virgin “Mary, wherein every one of the 150 Psalms, as likewise
“the Te Deum, and other most solemn adorations of God are “all turned to the Virgin Mary.”—p. 127.

L.—Sir, I answer first, that the Psalter attributed to St Bonaventure is not his. For neither Trithemius nor Gesnerus place it amongst his works. Nor is it probable a man of St Bonaventure's judgment and learning should be the author of such an indiscreet piece. I answer 2dly, that it is in the catalogue of forbidden books, and is therefore far from being a part of the devotions of the Church of Rome. So pray go on.

“G.—Rosaries, and books of devotions to her are many——

L.—That is very true, Sir.

“G.—Here is one translated into English for the use of “the Roman catholics here, entitled, The Devotion of Bondage, “or the Practice of perfectly consecrating ourselves to the service “of the Blessed Virgin, permissu superiorum 1632. It is licensed “and highly recommended both to clergy and people by the “Bishop of St Omers, with several indulgences granted to “those who shall devoutly make use of it. Wherein we “offer up ourselves both souls and bodies as bondslaves to “the Blessed Virgin. Among the high prerogatives of the “Blessed Virgin you will find this the sixth, p. 32, the sovereign “dominion that was given her not only over the world, but over

“ the Creator of the world. This indeed might well ground “ this petition made to her, jure matris impera filio, that is,
 “ by the right of a mother command your son. And her being “ called the mother of the whole Trinity in the missal. Polon.
 “ fol. 237.”—p. 127.

L.—Sir, it is the first time I ever heard of missal. Polon. But this I am sure of, that whoever styles the Virgin Mary the mother of the whole Trinity, and means what he says, is a rank heretic; and if he should teach this doctrine at Rome, he would either have a mad-house, or the prison of the inquisition assigned him for his lodging.

As to the book entitled the Devotion of Bondage, &c. Whatever approbation it had at its first coming forth, it has been condemned many years ago. And so it is impertinent to reproach us with it. I heartily wish your church took the same care to condemn and suppress all the scandalous, profane, and atheistical books that are publicly printed in London, and suffered to be in the hands of every body.

But as to those words, by the right of a mother command your son, though I allow the expression to be too hyperbolical, they are capable of a fair and orthodox construction, if they meet with an unprejudiced reader. For there are even in scripture some expressions, which carry with them the same vehemence, and in appearance the same hyperbolical excess. As, when it is said, that Joshua spoke to our Lord and the sun stood still, God OBEYING the voice of a man. Joshua x. 12, 14, and when our Saviour says of himself, that in heaven he will make his servants sit down at meat and will SERVE them. Luke xii. 37. For, as the former of these expressions does not signify a real obedience in God to the voice of a man, but his readiness to hear the prayers of those that fear him, nor the latter that Christ will really serve the elect at table, but only expresses his tenderness for them, and the care he will take to complete their joy and happiness; so these words, by the right of a mother command your son, do not signify that she should really command him, as she did when he was subject to her upon earth, but that she will use that interest with him in our behalf, which as a mother she has with him above all other saints.

G.—My lord, in the Primer, or office of the Blessed Virgin printed in English 1699, (and in the exposition before it is said to be of great antiquity, and composed by the church directed by the holy Ghost) you will find many prayers to her not only of intercession or praying for us, but to grant grace, pardon of sins, and eternal life in as full and positive terms, as could be asked of God himself. See the hymn, Memento rerum conditor, p. 34, and Ave maris stella, p. 53. And the prayer to her, p. 59, under thy aid—Sub tuum præsidium, which is taken out of the Roman pontifical in the office for the consecrating an image of the B. Virgin, where you pray for aid directly without mentioning any Intercession.”—pp. 127, 128.

L.—Sir, the Primer is certainly a prayer book of great authority amongst us, and I stand to every thing you can find in it. First, you dislike the hymn, Memento rerum conditor. I presume chiefly because it styles the B. Virgin the mother of grace. And is not she the mother of grace, who brought forth Christ the fountain of all grace; 2dly, you carp at the Ave maris stella, and the anthem, Sub tuum præsidium. But Sir, one verse of the Ave maris stella is this: bona cuncta posce, ask all good things for us, which fully explains the meaning of all the rest. And the anthem, Sub tuum præsidium is generally concluded with this versicle, Ora pro nobis, Pray for us. But suppose the word pray or intercede be not always expressed, may not the church be allowed to use her own way of speaking as well as other societies of men, especially when her meaning is as well known as the alphabet?

G.—Pray, my lord, whence must the people take the sense of their prayers, but from the signification of the words?

L.—But must the signification of those words be always interpreted by the rules of grammar? I think our councils and Catechisms are better interpreters of the sense of our public prayers, than William Lilly, or Littleton's Dictionary. When the scripture speaks thus: I say ye are gods, Psalm lxxxi., or tells us, that God obeyed the voice of a man, a grammarian will perhaps cry out blasphemy! But a divine will give him a civil reprimand, and tell him he must consult divines and not pedants for the true meaning of scriptural phrases. And so it is with the language of the church in her prayers. She is the sole interpreter of their true sense, and she has sufficiently declared, that in what form soever her prayers to saints are expressed, she means no more than to implore their intercession to the Giver of all good gifts. So that when we desire the blessed Virgin to help, comfort, or deliver us from sin, or bring us to eternal life, the true meaning is (and she knows it to be so) that we only desire her to obtain for us those blessings of God through the mediation of Jesus Christ.

SECTION XIV.—THE BLESSED VIRGIN NOT PUT UPON THE LEVEL WITH CHRIST.

“G.—My lord, your church blesses in the name of the Virgin Mary, which was never done to any creature. The priesthood was ordained by God to bless in his name. No apostle or angel ever blessed the people in his own name. Deut. x. 8. But in this Primer, p. 16, you will see the priest give the blessing in these words: The Virgin Mary with her pious son bless us; to which the people answer, Amen. Here the principal part is given to the Virgin. Her son only blesses with her, and she is first named. But if she be not preferred, yet she is here put upon the level at least with her son, and blesses the people jointly with him.”—p. 128.

L.—Sir, I should not be surprised to hear a grammarian argue as you do. But I take it to be beneath a divine to lay a stress upon a mere grammatical construction in a theological dispute. When a child, for example, says, bless me Father; here not only the principal part of blessing is literally and grammatically given to the Father, but God is not so much as mentioned, and the Father alone is named. And will you be so weak, as to conclude from thence, that the child's father is preferred to, or put upon the level with God? If you be, children themselves will tell you, that when they say, Father bless me, they mean no more than to desire their father to pray to God to bless them; and so when we desire the Virgin Mary to bless us with her son, we only beg of her to obtain for us a blessing of God through the mediation of Jesus Christ.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The gentleman, after his last words, labours hard to prove, that the angel whom Jacob prayed to bless his sons, was not an angel, but Christ: who (as he tells us) often appeared before he took flesh. I fancy indeed he will find but few of his opinion. But it being a point of no consequence is omitted, and the gentleman goes on thus:—

“G.—Epiphanius, Hær. 78, 79, reckons the worship of the Virgin Mary (not then so rank) among the Heresies under the name of the Collyridians, who offered cakes to the moon as the queen of heaven, which is the same name you now give to the Virgin, and she is painted standing upon the moon, her representative.”—p. 129.

*L.—*What will not prejudice prompt a man to say! The Collyridians offered cakes and flour in sacrifice to the queen of heaven, that is, worshipped her as a goddess; and yet their worship was not so rank as ours. And why so? Because we style the Virgin Mary queen of heaven, and she is painted standing upon the moon. Who will not be convinced by such strong reasons?

“G.—Epiphanius observes, that our blessed Lord, foreseeing the superstition that would come into the world on account of his mother, treated her always at a distance, never once called her mother, no not upon the cross, or by any other appellation, than that of woman, and checking her forwardness, said unto her, Woman what have I to do with thee? John ii. 4. She is as little named as possible in the gospels, where Christ pronounces a greater blessing to those that hear his word, than to the womb that bare him, Luke xi. 28. And she is not reckoned among those, who saw him after his resurrection. She is but once named in the Acts of the Apostles, and that upon no other account, than that she with other women continued in the communion of the Apostles after the ascension of our Lord, Acts i. 14. But none of her acts or miracles are recorded, though

“ abundance in the legends. And she is not once named upon any account whatsoever in any of the Epistles. Strange ! that this should be so forgot, which makes now so great a part in the devotions of the Church of Rome.”—pp. 129, 130.

L.—Strange ! do you say, Sir ? And is it not much more strange, that a christian divine should employ the very best of his rhetoric to lessen, and depreciate the blessed mother of Christ ! For were I an utter stranger to the principles of christian religion, and should hear a christian set forth the blessed Virgin as you have done, I should form no other idea of her, than that she was some despicable creature, whom Christ was ashamed to own for his mother ; whose forwardness, as you call it, he was forced to check : whom he utterly neglected at his death, and for whom neither the apostles nor evangelists had the least regard. This, Sir, is the idea, which your discourse would form in any man not guarded beforehand by the principles of christian religion.

It is true, the evangelists mention no tender expressions of our Saviour to his blessed mother : neither do they mention any tender expressions of hers to her son, nor even that she felt any grief at his death. But I hope we must not conclude from thence, either that she had a heart of stone, or that these omissions were intended by the Holy Ghost to prevent our being too tenderly affected towards our Saviour's passion : which suffices to shew the weakness of your chief remark.

However, Sir, the scripture is not so very silent concerning the blessed Virgin, as you represent it ; unless the very first chapter of St Luke be no part of scripture. For in that chapter you will find the whole foundation, on which our devotion to the blessed Virgin is built. What do you think of the angel's salutation, Hail, full of grace, our Lord is with thee ? Luke i. 28, which contains the sublimest panyeric, that ever was made of a pure creature. What do you think of the words of Elizabeth ? who was filled with the Holy Ghost, and she spoke with a loud voice, and said, Blessed art thou amongst women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Luke i. 41, 42 : she spoke with a loud voice, and was not afraid to be censured for naming the mother before the son, which is one of your weighty objections against the Church of Rome. Lastly, what do you think of the blessed Virgin's own prophetic words? For behold from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed, Luke i. 48; which may be called a plain prediction of the honour and respect, which the church has paid her throughout all ages. Strange! That our blessed Lord should foresee the superstition (as you call it) which would come into the world on account of his mother, and yet inspire his evangelists to write things of her, which give us the highest idea of her dignity and merits, and are the whole ground of that devotion, which you pretend Christ intended to prevent.

G.—But, my lord, you take no notice, that the observations I have made relating to the Virgin Mary, and which you have reflected upon with so much tartness, are not my own, but taken from Saint Epiphanius. Hær. 79.

L.—Sir, you wrong St Epiphanius, not only in misrepresenting the drift of his discourse, but also by adding to his words, and mixing your own undecent reflections with his in such a manner, as to make them appear to be his. For pray, Sir, tell me where will you find any of these reflections relating to the blessed Virgin in Saint Epiphanius? viz., that Christ called her woman TO CHECK HER FORWARDNESS? That she is as little named as is possible in the gospels? That our Saviour always treated her at a distance. That they, who hear the word of God have greater blessings pronounced to them than the mother of Christ? That she is not reckoned amongst those, who saw him after his resurrection, and that she is but once named in the Acts of the Apostles, and not once in the Epistles?

These, Sir, are all your own observations, and they shew the profound respect you have for the mother of Christ; but not one of them is to be found in St Epiphanius, whose words faithfully rendered are these: Wherefore we are also cautioned by the holy gospel, wherein Christ speaks thus: Woman, what is it to me and to thee? My hour is not yet come, John ii. 4: where, for this reason, he called her woman, least any one should believe the blessed Virgin to be of some more excellent nature [viz. than the rest of womankind]. Giving her, as it were, prophetically that name to refute the heresies, and schisms, which he knew would in aftertimes happen in the world: and least any one through an excessive opinion of the most holy Virgin should be addicted to the dotage and fooleries of that heresy. L. 3. T. 4. Hæc. 79.

Now, Sir, the heresy St Epiphanius treats of in the place quoted, is that of certain bigoted women of Thrace called Collyridians, who not only assumed to themselves the priestly office, but made a goddess of the blessed Virgin, and worshipped her with sacrifice: which madness or dotage he refutes at large, and then observes, that to prevent our falling into this dotage, viz., of believing the blessed Virgin to be more than a WOMAN, and worshipping her as a GODDESS Christ took care to call her woman, saying at the wedding in Cana of Galilee, Quid mihi et tibi mulier? nondum venit hora mea; Woman, what is it to me and to thee? My hour is not yet come. And is this the same as your unhandsome reflection, viz., that Christ foreseeing the superstition, which would come into the world [by which you mean what St Epiphanius never thought of] always treated her AT A DISTANCE, and, CHECKING HER FORWARDNESS, said unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee?

But, Sir, our blessed Saviour did not always treat his mother at a distance, as you pretend. For St Luke tells us expressly, that he went down with his father and mother to Nazareth, and was subject unto them, Luke ii. 51. That is to say, obeyed them, as dutiful children do their parents; which with your leave, Sir, is not treating them at a distance. Nay, at that very time, when instead of giving to the blessed Virgin the tender name of mother he called her woman, he had a regard to her request, and upon her intercession manifested himself by the first miracle, he ever wrought. Which I think was encouraging his future church to have a confidence in her prayers.

“G.—But there is an honour of an extraordinary nature “paid to her at the head of all the saints in the office of the “mass; where, before the consecration, the elements are offered up to God in memory of the passion, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ, and for the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, &c., in honorem beatæ Mariæ semper Virginis. Did Christ then suffer, rise, and ascend for her honour? It was for the honour and glory of God indeed, but to thrust her in, or any of the saints to share in this, looks a little too familiar, and putting them, at least her, near upon the level with the Almighty, since more could not be said to him.”—pp. 130, 131.

L.—No, Sir! That is very strange. For I can say to God, thou art my Creator, my Redeemer, my Sanctifier, my sovereign Good and last End. I can say to God, ‘Thou art infinitely powerful, infinitely good, and infinitely wise, &c.; finally, I can say to God, I offer to thee this holy sacrifice, and I cannot say any one of these things to the blessed Virgin without blasphemy. I therefore hope she is not put so near, as you will needs have it, upon the level with the Almighty.

Now, as to your argument, which is contained in this smart question, did Christ then suffer, rise, and ascend for her honour? You will as easily make a rope of sand, as shew any connexion between the consequence implied in your question, and the premises. What admirable logic is this! The elements are offered in memory of the passion, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, and in honour of the blessed Virgin Mary: therefore Christ suffered, and ascended for her honour.

G.—But what do you then mean by your in honorem beatæ Mariæ semper Virginis, &c., in honour of the Virgin Mary?

L.—That, Sir, is a fair question. For as we best know, so it is but just we should be allowed to explain our own meaning, which is precisely this: we offer up the sacrifice to God in remembrance of the death, resurrection and ascension of Christ, and in thanksgiving for the great gifts and graces he has bestowed upon his blessed mother, and other saints.

G.—But how can this be called offering the sacrifice in honour of the blessed Virgin? &c.

L.—Very properly, Sir; because the saints are honoured by our celebrating their memories in the solemn sacrifice of the mass and offering up our public thanksgiving to God for the victories they have obtained through his grace. And this is just what St Austin teaches (Ench. C. 110.): When the sacrifice (says he) is offered in the church for the faithful departed, it is to such as were good, but not perfectly good, a sacrifice of propitiation. But to the perfectly good, of thanksgiving. Now, Sir, you may proceed, if you please.

G.—My lord, you interrupted me. I told you just now, that offering the sacrifice in honour of the Virgin Mary and other saints, was putting them near upon the level with the Almighty.

L.—You did so.

“G.—And here we may see a good reason, why God “ would not have any religious worship paid to these, or any “ ministers of his kingdom, nor would be worshipped with “ them. For he saw there would be encroaching, and coming “ nearer to him, than was fit for the condition of creatures. “ They would have a share with him. Nay, that they might “ come at last to advance these above God himself, and “ prefer the saints even to Christ.”—p. 131.

L.—Sir, this whole piece comes a begging; for it confidently supposes the two very points, you ought to prove. First, That God has forbid all religious worship, that is, all honour to be paid to his ministers; nay it is a contradiction to your own practice in keeping one holy day for all saints, and another for St Michael and all the angels. 2dly, It supposes that we put creatures near upon the level with the Almighty, which I have disproved at large: but you are not disposed to take notice of any thing I say to you.

G.—My lord you are too quick for me. But I shall now prove, that you advance the saints above God himself, and prefer them even to Christ. “As it has been said, that “ Christ did nothing which St Francis did not do: yea, that he “ did more than Christ himself. Lib. Conform. fol. 1149.”

L.—Sir, I must own you have a peculiar talent at raking kennels for dirt and filth to throw at us. It is a providence however, that the words, you have picked up, are not to be found either in any Council, or Catechism, or papal constitution, or Pope Pius's Profession of Faith, where you ought to seek for our doctrine; but only in Lib. Conform. a book I never heard of before. But whoever is the author of it, I presume he does not mean that St Francis (though a most holy and eminent saint) either created the world, or redeemed mankind, or ever wrought any miracle by his own power. So that we may (I hope) acquit him of blasphemy, though not of indiscretion. And all you can conclude from it is, that there are some indiscreet writers in all churches whatsoever. But is a church accountable for all the indiscreet expressions of particular writers? I think not.

SECTION XV.—THE INDEX EXPURGATORIUS EXAMINED.

“G.—Now, my lord, we see the reason, why your Index Expurgatorius would not have it seen in the fathers that God alone is to be worshipped. For they have expunged this out of the indices of their works, that it might not be found by the people, who might take offence to see their worship divided betwixt God and creatures. [adorari solius Dei est: deleatur ex Ind. Operum Athanasii. Indice Lib. prohib. et Expurg. p. 52. Madrit. Ann. 1627. item ex Ind. Op. S. Aug. ibid. p. 56.]

“Was there ever so shameless a thing done by any church as to take upon them to correct and alter the fathers? It is plainly to stifle the evidence against themselves, and render every thing at least suspected, that they quote out of them. And the scriptures had been purged too, but that they are so common in the hands of protestants, that it could not be done without manifest detection, but how far they have gone towards it by mistranslations, adding or leaving out some words, I have shewed already. But to pursue the subject we are now upon——”—pp. 131, 132.

L.—Hold, Sir, let me answer this piece first; and I will do it with all the temper and moderation possible; though the foulness of the misrepresentation, it contains might justify the warmest language. You flatly charge us with correcting and altering the fathers in order to stifle, as you say, their evidence against us; yet in the same breath you contradict yourself by confessing, that the alteration you speak of, was made only in the indices of their works. For can any man be so stupid as to make no difference between the works themselves of the fathers, and the indices, that have been since made to them by other hands?

You add, that the scriptures had been purged too, but that they are so common in the hands of protestants, that it could not be done without manifest detection. Which reflection is as void of common sense as justice. For are not the fathers as common in the hands of all learned protestants as scriptures? And how then could we corrupt the fathers with greater security than the scriptures?

But, Sir, you forget the many hundred years before the Reformation, wherein popery was in possession of whole Christendom, as your book of Homilies testifies, and all protestants are forced to own. And had we not then all the opportunity imaginable to alter both scriptures and fathers, if we had been wicked enough to do it? For where were then the protestants to control us, or convict us of forgery? Pray, Sir, let me advise you to think of some better reason, than our fear of being detected by protestants, that hindered us from altering the scriptures? For though this may pass current with idiots, yet men of understanding will not be imposed upon in so gross a manner.

You say our correcting and altering the fathers renders every thing we quote out of them, suspected. But, good Sir, are our quotations from the fathers taken out of their indices? Are they not transcribed from their own writings? How is it possible a man of sense should commit such a blunder! Truly nothing but an over-eager desire of aspersing us could render you capable of it.

Now let us examine the bloody fact, which you set off with this pathetic exclamation: Was there ever so shameless a thing done by any church as to take upon them to correct and alter the fathers! Without dispute, Sir, falsifying the fathers is a most shameful thing: for otherwise I have been too hard upon you in censuring you so sharply for it. But I do not think it at all shameful to correct an index, which misrepresents the true sense of the father's words, it refers to: and this is truly the fact you inveigh so bitterly against.

One Wolfgangus Musculus, a German protestant, puts forth an edition of some works of the fathers, and makes an index to them: and to insinuate to the reader that it is their doctrine, that no honour is to be paid to saints, he puts down in the index this equivocal expression, adorari solius Dei est; God alone is to be adored, or worshipped. Which in the sense of the fathers, it refers to, is certainly true; but false in the intended meaning of the publisher. This therefore the Index Expurgatorius orders to be blotted out; because it insinuates a sense, which never was taught by any of the fathers; who certainly mean nothing else, than that God alone is to be worshipped with divine honour.

I shall instance in a parallel case to set the matter in a clear light. Suppose a Socinian should put forth an edition of the New Testament, and in his index to it should put these words, the son is not equal to the father, referring the reader to these words of Christ, my Father is greater than I, John xiv. 28; I ask, whether your church would not think it very just to correct and alter that index? Though the Socinians should clamour against it, and cry out, was there ever so shameless a thing done by any church, as to take upon them to correct, and alter the scriptures! But I really believe you would in that case be clear sighted enough to discern a difference between altering the scripture itself, and correcting a scandalous index made to it. And if you are not blinded with passion, you will also be clear sighted enough to see, that this is a full answer to your unjust clamours against the Index Expurgatorius, and the calumny your conscience is charged with in representing us as falsifiers of the fathers. But you were going to say something else, which you may now do, if you please.

SECTION XVI.—OF RELICS.

“ G.—My lord, not only the souls of the saints in heaven, “ but their dead bodies, or bits of them ; a finger, a toe, or a “ tooth, or a scrap of their clothes, a girdle, or a book, or any “ thing else, that they used, are worshipped, and made means “ of grace, and great miracles are said to be done by them.” —p. 132.

L.—Are said, Sir, do you say? And dare you deny it? If you do, the devils themselves, who have confessed it, will blush for you. Vigilantius, condemned by all antiquity for an heresiarch, was the devil's great champion against the veneration of relics, which was the church's universal practice even in her purest times. But let us hear how St Jerome complimented him upon it. Vigilantius, says he, fights with an unclean spirit against the spirit of Christ, by asserting that the tombs of martyrs are not to be reverenced. Lib. contra Vigil. And again, ibid. The devils, with which Vigilantius is possessed, roar at the relics, and confess they cannot bear the presence of the martyrs. Nay in the same book he tells him, that all the bishops in the world are against him. Ergo totius orbis errant episcopi? &c. And in his fifty-third epistle he writes thus: You tell me, that Vigilantius vomits once more his poison against the relics of martyrs, calling us DUST-WORSHIPPERS, AND IDOLATERS FOR REVERENCING DEAD MEN'S BONES. Oh, unhappy man, who can never be sufficiently lamented!

Here, Sir, you see yourself described in the person of Vigilantius by an eminent saint and doctor of God's church: which should, methinks, suffice to open your eyes, and make you see the badness of the cause in which you are engaged. If you had lived in the fourth century, and professed yourself a disciple of Vigilantius, as you now do, St Jerome would have treated you, as he did that infamous heretic. He would have told you, that you fought with an unclean spirit against the spirit of Christ. That, you were possessed by that evil spirit.

That all the bishops in the world were against you. That finally you were in a most unhappy and lamentable state.

But you think it a mighty jest, that we reverence (or, as you call it, worship) not only the bodies of saints, but a finger, a toe, or a tooth, or a scrap of their clothes. But pray, Sir, where lies the jest? May not the finger, the toe, or tooth of a saint, or a scrap of his clothes work miracles as well as the shadow of St Peter? Acts v. 15. Or the aprons and handkerchiefs that but touched St Paul's body, yet cured diseases, and chased away evil spirits? Acts xix. 12. Or must it needs be an entire body to make it a proper instrument for God to work miracles with? If this be the ground of your jest, Theodorct, who wrote in the fourth age, will disabuse you. Cities, and villages, says he, dividing among themselves the bodies of the martyrs esteem them their guardians, and the protectors and physicians both of their souls and bodies — For though the body be divided, the blessing is not: but is bountifully distributed according to the faith, with which it is approached. L. 8. cont. Græcos. T. 4. pp. 593, 594.

Nay the very ashes of the martyrs were held in the same veneration as their bodies; as appears from Vigilantius calling the Catholics DUST WORSHIPPERS, and is witnessed by St Isidore of Pelusium writing thus to Pagan: If this offend you, that we honour the ashes of martyrs, because they loved God, and served him constantly, ask them, who have been healed by them, and inquire into the number of distempers, from which they have been freed? If you do this, you will be so far from laughing at what we do, that you will be willing to join with us in so good a practice. L. 1. Ep. 55. Pray, Sir, follow the advice of this good saint, and leave off joining with heretics and pagans in ridiculing practices, which venerable antiquity has so solemnly recommended to us.

I shall only add St Ambrose's words after his discovery of the relics of St Gervasius and Protasius, which alone suffice to confute any thing you can say upon this subject. You have known (says he), nay you have seen many dispossessed, many cured, as soon as they touched the shroud of the holy bodies, from their infirmities. The ancient miracles of Christ are renewed. You see many cured by the shadow, as it were, of their bodies. How many handkerchiefs are they touched with? How many veils by touching the sacred relics, become instruments of the greatest cures? Every one is glad to touch the most distant hem, and if he does it, he will be healed. Ep. 22. Now, Sir, you may laugh on if you please. But even your protestant translators of Mr Du Pin, Cent. 8, p. 120, confess, that it pleased God for the testimony of his doctrine and truth to work great miracles by the dead bodies of his saints, in witness that they had been his messengers, and instruments of his will.

G.—My lord, God may work miracles by what means he pleases.—p. 132.

L.—Now, Sir, you are very good indeed. For you grant me all I desire.

G.—But does this consecrate the dead body of every saint to be a means of grace, and a worker of miracles?—p. 132.

L.—Sir, that is your ridiculous consequence, and not mine. All I say is, that when God works miracles by the body of any saint, he certainly does work miracles by it.

G.—Many miracles were wrought by the rod of Moses, is every rod therefore a means of grace either ghostly or bodily? Or may we consecrate any rod to be such a means?—p. 132.

L.—No, Sir. But if God pleases, he may work miracles by any rod. And so he may work miracles by the body of any saint; and if he does work miracles by it, we may surely believe, that he does work miracles by it.

G.—Nothing is such a means to us, but what God has commanded and appointed to be done, as baptism, and the Lord's supper.—p. 132.

L.—What, Sir! Did God command and appoint aprons and handkerchiefs, which wrought miracles, Acts xix. 12, to be such means of grace as baptism, and the Lord's supper?

G.—It is the institution and not the example, that makes “any thing a means of grace to us. Else we might go and imitate all the miraculous actions of Moses, or of Christ, and call them means of grace to us, because so used by them.”—pp. 132, 133.

L.—Sir, it is the institution, and nothing but the institution of Christ that makes such means of grace as baptism, and the Lord's supper. If therefore you speak of means of grace strictly taken, the sacraments alone are such means, as I have already frequently inculcated. But you are either very thick of hearing, or have a short memory. For you take no notice of any thing I say, but go on repeating the same gross mistakes twenty times over as confidently, as if they were first principles, or truths allowed of by me.

I tell you therefore once for all that the sacraments alone are means of grace strictly taken; which never fail of producing their effect, but when some wilful obstacle is put to it. But in a large sense any thing may be called a means of grace, which God is pleased to make use of at any time as an instrument to convey his blessings to us, though it be not ordained by any express institution in order to that end.

Now if you speak of means of grace strictly taken, what you say, viz., that nothing is such a means to us, but what God has commanded and appointed to be done, is true indeed, but nothing to the purpose. But if you speak of means of grace in the largest sense, it is absolutely false, nay incoherent with what you said just now, viz., that God may work miracles by what means he pleases. For, if he can work miracles, as most certainly he can, by what means he pleases, he can work them by instruments, which are not strictly means of grace, as the sacraments are: unless you will maintain, that whatever instrument God makes use of to work miracles by, becomes immediately a sacrament, that is, a means of grace strictly taken; and then Saint Peter's shadow, and all the aprons and handkerchiefs, which touched St Paul's body, and wrought great miracles, were sacraments, or means of grace strictly taken.

Either therefore every thing, by which God works miracles, is strictly a means of grace, or not: if it be, then the aprons and handkerchiefs, that touched St Paul's body, were strictly means of grace; which is absurd. If not, then the relics of saints may also work miracles without being strictly means of grace. Whence it plainly appears, that whatever you have said, or can say concerning our multiplying means of grace is wholly built upon the equivocal meaning of those words; which you take a pleasure to repeat even to a surfeit for no other reason, but because they are equivocal; and therefore proper to cast a mist before ignorant people's eyes.

G.—My lord, as to the relics in your church, many of them have been notoriously detected; and it has been found out, that the dead bodies of malefactors have been taken for the relics of saints, and great miracles said to be done by them.—p. 133.

L.—I hope, Sir, you do not mean, that great miracles have been said to be done by bodies, after they have been found out to be the bodies of malefactors. Nor do I believe upon your bare word that miracles have been attributed to the bodies of real malefactors, even before your pretended notorious detection of them. Perhaps you only mean such a notorious malefactor as St Thomas of Canterbury: who was found guilty of high treason, and had all his goods confiscated above three hundred years after his death, I may safely say by one of the most ridiculous farces, that ever was acted upon the theatre of this world.

G.—The same relic as the head or finger of such or such a saint is shewn in several places, and each contend that theirs is the right, and each have miracles avouched for them.—p. 133.

L.—Sir, this was fully answered at our last meeting upon the subject of miracles, [Part I. Sect. 25.] to which I refer you.

G.—Many instances of this with vouchers undeniable you will find in the devotions of the Roman church. How then can you worship such relics in faith, without which it is a sin?—p. 133.

L.—Sir, I have already told you the true meaning of St Paul's saying, whatever is not of faith is sin, viz., that whatever is done against conscience, or with a bad intention, is sin: which may as well be applied to a man mistaking stockfish for ling, as to the subject under debate. For, suppose we should mistake false relics for true ones, the saint, whose relics we suppose them to be, is still honoured by us; and the mistake is as innocent, as when we give an alms for God's sake to a cheat; which is no uncommon case.

But I observe once more, that whenever you speak of the respect we pay to relics, you take care to call it worship; because the word is ambiguous and may signify divine worship, as well as an inferior or relative honour, and you piously hope that it will be taken in the wrong sense. I therefore desire you to take notice, that we worship relics, or the images of Christ and his saints no otherwise than you worship the altar, or the Bible, when you bow to it. If you deny that you worship them in paying that respect to them, we do the same. If you grant you worship them, then creatures may be worshipped with a relative honour, and you cannot blame us for it.

In effect no one word is more equivocal than the word worship, and it is manifest, that all reasoning from such ambiguous words is nothing at the bottom but fallacy and amusement, and a mere design to confound and perplex people in order to hide from them the true state of the question. Pray, Sir, remember this, when you speak of images, which I presume will come next upon the board.

SECTION XVII.—OF IMAGES.

“ G.—Yes, my lord. For not only the saints, and their “ relics, but their images are with you made a distinct means “ of grace; for in the consecration of the image of a saint it is “ said, that whoever shall worship such a saint, coram hac “ imagine, before this image, may obtain so and so, for which “ end the image is blessed and sanctified. So that it is not “ enough to worship the saint; but if I do it before such a “ consecrated image, I shall obtain more grace than otherwise.
 “ This makes the image itself a means of grace, for there is “virtue there. Why else would it not do as well to pray, and not before such an image? Why else indeed are such images so formally consecrated, if there be no virtue in the consecration? And why do men go pilgrimages, or send vows to Loretto, or any other distant place, if they think there is no virtue in the image there more than in forty of the same sort, which they may have at home? And the saint represented by the image is as near them in the one place as in the other. There must then be some virtue communicated to one image more than to another.”—pp. 133, 134.

L.—Sir, there were many pools in Judea besides the pool called Bethesda. John v. 2. Yet God would only cure the sick in this. There were also many rods besides the rod of Moses, and many aprons besides those, that touched the body of Saint Paul; yet God wrought miracles only by those. And why then may he not bestow a blessing on one place or image more than another? And if he can do it, why should we not ask it of him? This, Sir, answers all your fine queries.

But I shall instance in a scriptural fact resembling very much the blessing or consecration, with which you are pleased to make so much mirth. It is written, 1 Kings viii. that Solomon dedicated or consecrated the temple, he had built in Jerusalem: and the whole subject of the prayer, or form of consecration, is to beg of God, that whoever shall pray in or towards that house, may obtain so and so, as is specified in the form of consecration.

Now, Sir, let us suppose some atheistical Jew should have reasoned thus in your language. The temple is here made a distinct MEANS OF GRACE; for in the consecration of the temple it is said, that whoever shall worship God IN OR TOWARDS THAT HOUSE, MAY OBTAIN SO AND SO; for which end the temple is blessed and sanctified. So that it is not enough to worship God, but if I do it IN OR TOWARDS SUCH A HOUSE, I shall obtain more grace than otherwise. This makes the house itself a MEANS OF GRACE; FOR THERE IS VIRTUE THERE. Why else should it not do as well to pray, and not IN OR TOWARDS THAT HOUSE? Why else indeed is that house so formally consecrated, if there be no virtue in the consecration? And why do men GO PILGRIMAGES, and SEND THEIR VOWS to the temple in Jerusalem, if they think there is no virtue in that house more than in any other place? And God, who is worshipped in that house, IS AS NEAR US IN ONE PLACE AS ANOTHER. There must be then some virtue communicated to one house more than to another.

Sir, whenever you answer this profane discourse of the supposed Jew, you will not be at a loss for an answer to your own.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The good-natured lord in the former conversation acquiesces to every thing his adversary has said, and only tells him calmly, then you are against any pictures or images, or paying any honour to the holy men departed: which gives occasion to the gentleman to answer thus:

G.—No, my lord, we are not so stingy: we scruple not “pictures for ornament, but for worship or for worshipping before them, as you call it.”—p. 134.

L.—That is very strange indeed. Suppose you had a picture or image of Christ crucified before you, would you scruple to say your prayers, or adore God with your face turned towards it? But why do you not likewise scruple to pray with your face turned towards the altar, or communion table? for then you worship before it, as we do before pictures: and we worship pictures no otherwise than you worship the altar or communion table by bowing to it, or kneeling before it.

SECTION XVIII.—THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND GUILTY OF INCOHERENCY.

G.—We also honour the saints departed as far as we think it laudable, and as we are verily persuaded, as far as they desire.”—p. 134.

L.—That is very well done, Sir, and we are verily persuaded, we do no more.

G.—But according to St Austin's rule before mentioned, “if they accepted our adoration, it would prove them to be evil spirits: and then you are to consider, that instead of “ intercessors, as you hope for by your worship of them they will vindicate themselves and become your accusers.”—p. 134.

L.—Sir, you should have said, according to St Austin's rule before FALSIFIED. Pray learn to speak properly. For St Austin neither calls it adoration, as you render it now, nor worship, as you rendered it before, but SACRIFICE; and in plain terms, to be worshipped as gods. So that there is no danger of their becoming our accusers, as long as we only desire a part in those prayers, which they continually offer to God for the church militant. And this is all we desire of them.

G.—But in the honour we pay them, we first take care not to specify any particular person as a saint, but who is so recorded in holy scripture. For we understand not “canonizations by men, who know not the heart.”—p. 134.

L.—But when Almighty God, who knows the hearts of men, has manifested their holiness by evident miracles, are we allowed to doubt of it? the ancient fathers were not so scrupulous; for they invoked not only scriptural saints, but likewise those, whom the living voice of the church had canonized. Saint Austin prayed to St Cyprian, L. 7. de Bapt. C. 1.; St Jerome to St Paula, Epist. 27.; St Gregory Nyssen to St Theodore, Tom. 3. p. 585. C.; and St Gregory Nazianzen to St Basil, Orat. 20. T. 1. p. 373, B. And they invoked them by name, and called them saints, though not recorded in holy scripture, which it seems your tender conscience will not allow of.

However, good Sir, your church is not so scrupulous as you would make her. Pray read the calendar of your common prayer-book. For there you will find several saints specified by name, and not recorded in holy scriptures; which I hope will help to cure you of the squeamish fit, you are fallen into.

G.—In the next place, my lord, we limit the honour we pay to saints by the rule of God's commandments, which we suppose most pleasing to them.”—p. 134.

L.—Do you only suppose it, Sir? Nay we are sure of it. For how should any thing, that is displeasing to God, be pleasing to the saints?

“G.—We keep particular holy days for the apostles, St John Baptist, St Stephen, &c., we bless God for them, “commemorate their virtues, and pray that we may follow “their example.”—p. 135.

L.—So far then we agree. And, if keeping holy days be any part of christian devotion, as I presume it is, this is just what we mean by what we call religious honour.

“G.—We have one day for all the saints in general, and “another for St Michael, and all the angels. Thus we honour “them.”—p. 135.

L.—Sir, I am glad to hear it: for all this is very good popery.

“G.—For this, my lord, we bear the reproach of our “four dissenters, as if we were too much inclining to popery. “You think we give too little honour to the saints, and they “think we give too much, but I hope we keep the mean.” —p. 135.

L.—Sir, notwithstanding your pretended mean, your church cannot avoid splitting upon one of these rocks. For, if it be forbid to pay any sort of religious worship or honour to the saints, your keeping holy days in honour of them is unjustifiable. But if there be an honour due to them, and if it be lawful to pay them that honour by keeping solemn days in memory of them; to refuse after that to pay a relative honour to the pictures that represent them, or the relics that were a part of them, is perfectly inconsistent with common sense; and the mean you boast of, is no better than a practical contradiction to the principle you allow of. Because reason itself, and the practice of all mankind tell us, that when a person has a just title to be honoured by us, we may lawfully pay a respect to things, that have a near relation to him; and when this title is wholly grounded upon a motive of religion; as when we honour a person whether dead or alive merely for supernatural gifts bestowed upon him by God, then the honour we pay him is not civil, but religious. And such is, by consequence, the honour you pay to saints and angels, when you keep holy days in memory of them.

For this reason the four dissenters (as you call them) laugh at you as mere botchers in the reforming trade. For whoever will set up for a reformer of the public faith or discipline of his mother church, must go thorough-stitch with the work. Otherwise he does enough to be condemned by the church, from which he separates himself, and too little to avoid the reproach of falling into incoherencies. Because what he leaves unreformed rises for the most part in judgment against him, and kicks down some article of his pretended reformation.

SECTION XIX.—THE SUBJECT OF IMAGES RESUMED.

“G.—We abstain from the pictures or images of the saints in our churches, because they have been abused to superstition, and to avoid offence. But in places not dedicated to worship, as in our private houses, we think them not unlawful more than the picture of any good man.”—p. 135.

L.—Truly, Sir, the saints are very much obliged to you for allowing them a place in your private houses amongst those of good men. However I think the apostles at least have some reason to take it ill, that Moses and Aaron, whose pictures are admitted into many of your churches, should be preferred before them.

“G.—Epiphanius was very zealous against having them brought into churches: and tells John bishop of Jerusalem in a letter translated by St Jerome, that finding a linen cloth hang up in a church-door (it is likely to keep out the wind) whereon was a picture of Christ, or of some saint, he tore it, and ordered a dead corpse to be buried in it. And he lamented the superstition he saw coming by these pictures and images then beginning to creep into the church.”—p. 135.

L.—Sir, all we can gather from this story of St Epiphanius is, that he judged, that the ancient pagan idolatry was not yet then so utterly abolished (as it certainly was not at that time in many places) but that the use of images or pictures in churches might be an occasion to revive it. He therefore did his duty in opposing the use of them: and it is what any bishop or pastor would do at present, if he had the same rational motive to induce him to it. For it is certain the church never obliged the faithful to the actual use or veneration of images or pictures as a thing essential to christianity. On the contrary it is a point of discipline only, which was not universally practised till idolatry was utterly extinguished in Christendom. But since that time the church had reason to declare, that the images of Christ and his saints are to be retained, and that a due honour and veneration is to be given them. Conc. Trid. Ses. 25.

G.—My lord, the abuse of things though otherwise lawful, which are not instituted by God for standing means of grace, as baptism and the Lord's supper may justly take away the use of them.—p. 136.

L.—That is very true, Sir; but it is not fit for a private man to make himself judge to determine whether they are abused or not.

G.—The brazen serpent was appointed by God as a means of grace for miraculous cures in the wilderness, and was preserved until the days of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 4. But when they burned incense to it, it became an idol, was broke to pieces, and called by a contemptible name Nebushtan: that is, a bit of brass. How much more reason is there to remove the pictures and images of saints (which God never appointed) out of our churches, when we see incense burnt to them, and they worshipped in your churches as means of grace? And yet there is no evil in the pictures themselves.—p. 136.

L.—Sir, the pictures and images of saints, are neither worshipped in, nor out of our churches as means of grace; nor do we believe any intrinsic virtue in them. But this pretty conceit of our pretended means of grace tickles your fancy so powerfully, that you cannot hold thrusting it in every where by head and shoulders, whether there be occasion for it or not.

As to what you say, that we burn incense to them, Sir, we burn incense to one another in the same manner as we do to pictures: and yet I hope we are not so mad as to make idols of, or pay divine honour to one another. There are several ways of shewing respect both to God and man. We bow to God, and we bow to men. We also kneel to God, and so we do to men. But, though the outward action be the same, I presume the respect we shew by it is not so. For it is strictly adoration, or divine worship when we kneel to God, and only an inferior respect, when we kneel to men.

Now, Sir, one way of shewing our respect is that of burning incense, which is an action as indifferent in itself, as that of bowing or kneeling. So that as bowing or kneeling are not appropriated to God alone, nor always used as an indication of divine excellency in the thing, or person we honour by those actions, so neither is the use of incense amongst christians. When we offer it to God, we signify by it the sovereign honour, we owe him: but when to creatures, it is no more than a ceremony to express the respect we have for them on account of the relation they have to God.

Bellarmin, L. 2. de Missa, C. 15, shews the antiquity of this ceremony; and the significations of it are many, and all tending to excite piety and devotion in the faithful: as, to put us in mind of the inaccessible glory of God, who appeared in a cloud, and the sweet odour of our prayers, if sent up from a heart inflamed with divine love.

G.—But my lord, the scripture tells us, that Hezekiah broke the brazen serpent, because the children of Israel burnt incense to it: which shews that their burning incense to it made it become an idol.

L.—Sir, it is very certain, that the Israelites in process of time made an idol of the brazen serpent: and therefore Hezekiah made no difference between it, and the statues set up in the high places, which were certainly idols, and worshipped as such by the Jews. So that although they had but bowed or kneeled to them, it would have been an act of idolatry: because any respect whatsoever shewn to an idol is an idolatrous worship. But their burning incense to the brazen serpent was a special act of idolatry in a Jew, because the burning of incense by way of a religious respect was appropriated to God by a ceremonial part of the Mosaic law, Exod. xxix.

13; Lev. vii. 5, &c., and there was an altar deputed particularly for it, Luke i. 11. But there is not any precept in the gospel either commanding, or forbidding the use of incense to christians, or appropriating it to God: and where no law is, there is no transgression. Rom. iv. 15. And by consequence the use of incense amongst christians even by way of a religious honour is a thing as indifferent as the actions of bowing or kneeling, which I presume do not make idols of the persons or things, towards which they are used.

SECTION XX.—CONCERNING IMAGES OF GOD.

“G.—But, my lord, I think there is one picture has evil in it, and is unlawful any where: And yet it is seen in your churches, and commonly over the altar. That is, the picture or image of God the Father, like an old man, &c. We are forbid to make it, and then we cannot worship it. See how positively God forbids it, Deut. iv. 15, &c., take good heed unto yourselves (for you saw no manner of similitude, that is, of God, in the day that the Lord spake unto you)—lest you corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female, &c. And again, They changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image like to corruptible man, &c. Rom. i. 23.”—p. 136.

L.—Sir, this latter text of St Paul condemns the pagan worship of idols, as I have shewed before: and the consequence you draw from it is, that therefore it is unlawful to make any picture or image of God. And is not this arguing with most exquisite skill!

But I presume the text of Deuteronomy is to supply all defects: for it is introduced with sound of trumpet, and I am summoned by you to see how positively it forbids the making any picture, or image of God. Truly, Sir, when I first heard myself thus solemnly called upon, see how positively God forbids it, I apprehended nothing less, than to find in some of the four evangelists this commandment in express terms, Thou shalt not make a picture or image of God the Father like an old man. But the text, you have quoted, has very much relieved me; finding especially, that it is not in any of the gospels, but only in Deuteronomy, which contains indeed the Jewish ceremonial law, but meddles not with the discipline of the christian church. However since you desire it so earnestly of me, I will do what I can to see the positive prohibition you speak of. But as yet I can only see two things, and those I see very plainly. First, that there is no such positive prohibition in the text you have quoted: and 2dly, that were there such a prohibition in that text, it would make nothing against us.

As to the first, to convince you that I am not mistaken, let us have the text entire which is thus: Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire) 15. Least ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image; the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female, 16. The likeness of any beast, that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl, that flieth in the air, 17. The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish, that is in the waters beneath the earth, 18. And least thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun and the moon, and the stars, even all the host of heaven, thou shouldst be driven to worship them, and serve them, which the Lord thy God has divided unto all nations under the heaven, 19.

This, Sir, is the whole text; and I observe first, that these words (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day, that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb) are no part of the law, or commandment here delivered by Moses. For they are placed within a parenthesis, which separates and distinguishes them from the words of the law. Neither do they command or forbid any thing, but nakedly relate a matter of fact. Nay they are thus placed within a parenthesis in your own Bible.

Whence I observe 2dly, that the law itself is entirely contained in these words: Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves least you corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female, the likeness of any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air, the likeness of any thing that creepeth on the earth, the likeness of any fish, that is in the waters beneath the earth, &c.

Now, Sir, though I have at present both my eyes open, I want your spectacles to see in what words God here positively forbids any image, likeness, or similitude to be made of himself. It is true, I plainly see these three words, image, likeness, and similitude: but I likewise see the things, they are referred to, expressly specified, viz., the likeness of a male or female, of beasts, of fish, of fowl, and creeping things: and these the Jews were positively forbid to make by the text you have quoted: but I am yet too blind to see the force of this consequence, ergo, that text positively forbids any image to be made of God.

G.—But, my lord, though these words, for you saw no manner of similitude on the day that the Lord spoke unto you in Horeb, be no part of the law, yet they are at least the reason of the law, and that suffices to make good the consequence I draw from them.

L.—No, Sir, they are not even the reason of the law. For though God should have appeared to the people in some visible likeness, as he did afterwards to Daniel, yet the reason of the law would have been the same; viz., to keep the people out of the occasion of idolatry, to which they were excessively inclined.

G.—But was it then lawful for the Jews to make images of God?

L.—I do not say it was; nor is it any thing to the purpose, whether it was or not. All I pretend to maintain is, that it was not forbid by the text you have quoted; on which nevertheless you lay as much stress, as if it were nothing inferior to a demonstration.

G.—But, my lord, to what end was it then, that Moses put the people in mind, that they saw no similitude of God in Horeb, if it was not to insinuate, that God forbade them to make any image of himself?

L.—Sir, this is only a guess or inference of your own, but no part of the law itself, as I have clearly shewed:

and therefore comes very short of your former triumphant expression, SEE HOW POSITIVELY GOD FORBIDS IT! However, since you will needs oblige me to give a reason, why Moses put the people in mind, that they saw no similitude of God in Horeb, I conceive that Moses put them in mind of it for the very same reason for which Almighty God did not shew himself to the people in any visible likeness. And if I may be allowed to guess why he did not then shew himself in such a manner, it appears to me most probable, that it was to prevent their entertaining an erroneous idea of God, and imagining him to be a corporeal being; as that gross and carnal people would have been apt enough to do. But to pretend that barely mentioning a fact implies a positive prohibition any more than the fact itself is not I think agreeable to common sense. And I never heard any man say, that God's not appearing to the people in a visible likeness was any more a positive prohibition to make an image of him, than his appearing in a visible likeness to Daniel was a positive command to make one.

But let us now suppose the Jews were positively forbid by this law of Deuteronomy to make any image of God, did not the same law as positively forbid them to make images of men or women; of fish, or fowl, or beasts, or creeping things? And are christians concerned in that law? If so, then all the statues in the Royal Exchange, and thousands more must be pulled down; the lion and unicorn must be removed out of your churches, and all statuaries banished out of Christendom. It is therefore manifest, that the whole text, you have quoted, contains only a ceremonial law, and is by consequence as little to the purpose (allowing even that it positively forbids the making any image of God) as if you had quoted the law of circumcision to prove the point in question.

It is indeed a thing unlawful in christians as well as Jews to have pictures or images of God so as to think them to be representations of the divine nature; and there needs no more to forbid this than the very first principles of revealed religion.

“G.—Pray, my lord, did you ever know a painter or “statuary, who attempted to draw a picture, or make an “image of a thought, or of a soul? And is not the great “God more invisible, and the divine nature much more “incomprehensible even to our thoughts or imaginations?
 “How then can it be represented to our eyes? I dare say “there never was a man since Adam, who would own any “such thing, or ever had so foolish a thought. No, but “when they drew any picture or similitude of God, it was “only meant to express some of his attributes or perfections.
 “As by fire his purity: by a giant with many hands his “power, with many eyes his providence, &c. And so you own,
 “that by an old man you only mean to express his antiquity.
 “And will not this excuse the heathen as well as you? See
 “the same excuse made by Maximus Tyrius. Diss. 38.
 “Whether statues were to be made for the gods? But here
 “you would put an impossible meaning upon the prohibition “of God to make it of no effect; and which will excuse the “heathens as well as yourselves.”—pp. 137, 138.

L.—Sir, if making images or pictures of the true God, that is, representing him in that visible likeness, in which he has really shewed himself to men; if this I say be the same as making images of false gods, then I will allow that the heathens may in this respect be excused as well as we. But I forget, alas, that the heathen Jupiter was the true God, as you have laboured hard to prove him.
 Though Origen, and the primitive christians believed him to be a devil: and as I am altogether of their mind, I think that drawing pictures and similitudes to honour the devil is not quite so excusable as doing it to honour God.

Now let us see what may be said to your first ingenious question, viz., whether I ever knew a painter or statuary, who attempted to draw a picture or make an image of a thought? To which I answer directly, that at what time soever a thought shall appear in a visible shape or likeness, I will then bring you acquainted with a painter or statuary, who shall attempt to draw a picture or make an image of it. I answer 2dly, that no picture can be made of a thought, or any spiritual thing so as to be a true representation of its proper nature.

But here you make a second assault upon me, and ask again, and is not the great God more invisible, and the divine nature more incomprehensible even to our thoughts and imaginations? How then can it be represented to our eyes? Sir, the divine nature is infinite, invisible, and incomprehensible, and therefore can no more be represented as it is in itself than a thought. But the likeness, in which God has appeared, may be represented: for I presume there are painters, that can draw the pictures, and statuaries that can make the images of an old man, and a dove: and you cannot be so ignorant of scripture history, as not to know, that God the Father appeared to Daniel in the likeness of an old man, and God the Holy Ghost appeared at our Saviour's baptism in the likeness of a dove. These corporeal figures therefore may lawfully be painted; may that of the Holy Ghost in the likeness of a dove is to be seen in all your common prayer books, that are printed with cuts: which by the by is a full confutation of the paradox you maintain, viz., that it is unlawful to make the picture of God the Father like an old man. For the Holy Ghost is as truly God as the Father; and if it be lawful to paint the Holy Ghost like a dove, as your church makes no scruple to do, how it should be unlawful to paint the Father like an old man is a mystery wholly incomprehensible to my weak understanding.

All then that is unlawful or forbid in these and other such like pictures is to imagine, that any corporeal figure can be a true representation of the divinity itself. But this you say is putting an impossible meaning upon the prohibition of God: and you dare aver there never was a man since Adam, who would own any such thing, or ever had so foolish a thought. What, Sir! has there never been a man since Adam capable of such a foolish thought! If I mistake not, I can name you a great many. For surely the heretics called Audiani lived since the time of Adam; and they held that God the Father had a human shape with arms, hands, legs, &c., that Adam's likeness to God was in his body; and that Christ sits literally at the right hand of God the Father.

2dly, Tertullian a wit of the first rank thought the soul a corporeal substance. Nothing (says he) is incorporeal, but that which is nothing. L. de carne Christi. C. 11. And again. God is a spirit. But who will deny that he is a body? A spirit is one sort of body, and has its own shape. L. contra Prax. C. 7.

Lastly, St Paul thought it proper to admonish even the wise Athenians, that there can be no true likeness made of God. We ought not to think (says he) that the GODHEAD IS LIKE UNTO GOLD OR SILVER, OR STONE GRAVEN BY ART, AND MAN'S DEVICE. And the time of THIS IGNORANCE God winked at, but now commands all men every where to repent, Acts xvii. 29, 30. It is therefore evident that some men since Adam were so ignorant as to think the Godhead like to the statues of gold or silver graven by art and man's device. And I hope you will not take it ill, if I rather think you grossly out in maintaining the contrary, than that St Paul was mistaken, or spoke impertinently to the Athenians.

It is certain the heathens worshipped their idols as gods. Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods, Lev. xix. 4. And the Israclites said of the golden calf, these are the gods, that brought thee out of Egypt. And again. They changed their glory into the similitude of a calf that eateth grass. Psalm cvi. 20.

SECTION XXI.—OF HEATHEN IDOLS, AND THE GOLDEN CALF.

“G.—My lord, it is absurd to say, that the heathens thought their images to be the things, of which they were the images. That was impossible; for then they would not be the images, but the things themselves. Who ever said, that a man's picture was himself? Though they are called the persons; as when we look upon pictures we say, this is such or such a man. But if any should put it upon us, that we mean the persons themselves, we must think them idiots or school-men, that love distinctions and wrangling. Maximus Tyrius in the dissertation before quoted tells us, that they had many images of the same god, as of Venus, Diana,

“ &c., and yet they did not think there was more than one “ Venus, or one Diana. Have you not multitudes of the “ pictures and images of the Virgin Mary? And yet you “ say not that there is more than one such Virgin. Now the “ heathens worshipped their images; and if you believe your “ own Catechism, you must think, that they took every one “ for God. For, hac omnia, they worshipped all these as “ God.

“ And it is as absurd to think, that they took that serpent
 “ or beast, whose image they made, to be God. Or if they “ meant not any particular serpent or ox (for example) by “ the image, they must think every ox or serpent to be God!
 “ But they were not so ridiculous; as Maximus Tyrius, and “ all as many of them as have wrote will satisfy you. But “ they made use of their images only as symbols, which being “ dedicated to such a god. They thought that this god would “ afford his presence with his symbol, and by it secure to “ them his favour, and protection. How near your consecra- “ tion comes to their dedication of images, I leave you to “ judge. But you put such monstrous things upon the “ heathens, as they disown, detest, and abhor. And yet you “ must do it, that your case and theirs may not appear so “ very like.”—pp. 138, 139.

L.—Sir, this reflection, together with your comparing our blessing of images with the heathen consecration of idols, is equally scurrilous and unjust.

You say, we charge the heathens with absurdities only to acquit ourselves; but it is very apparent, you acquit the heathens only to load us with infamy. And indeed the tender concern you shew upon all occasions for the reputation of the heathens would make one think you have adopted them into the number of your protestant brethren. But why should this surprise me? Since you own that you and they are united in the worship of one and the same God. Their Jupiter, (as you have endeavoured to prove) was the true God, and by consequence is so still. Their inferior gods were but symbols of his divine perfections: their statues were not worshipped as God, and the sacrifices they offered to them, were but a relative honour, which wholly terminated in the true God. And who would not now be ambitious to communicate with such true worshippers of God! Really, Sir, I am almost grown fond of their company, and begin to think you have done the papists a great deal of honour in putting them upon the same foot with the heathens.

G.—Bantering, my lord, is easier than answering. But I should be glad to hear you say something to the reasons I have given to prove that the heathens could not be guilty of the absurdities, you lay to their charge.

L.—Sir, you have effectually proved them to be gross absurdities, and I readily grant them to be so. But is that a good proof, that the heathens were not guilty of them? Or was their religion so very rational, that no absurdity could be a part of it? How happy would mankind be, if proving a thing to be absurd were a demonstration, that no man ever was, or could be guilty of it! I assure you, Sir, this argument would relieve you in many occasions, and be of good service to many more besides yourself. One very important consequence at least would follow from it, viz., that there is no such thing as Mahometanism in the world: for it is a religion filled with the grossest absurdities according to the notion all christians have of it. We must therefore conclude it is impossible that such wise men, as many of the Turks are, should be serious professors of it. And it will follow from your way of arguing, that we make monsters of them only to hide our own deformity.

I have heard of a book lately printed, which pretends to prove, that if men had faith, they would be immortal; and that it is a man's own fault if he dies; which is so excessively absurd, that, according to your ingenious way of arguing, I must say the book was never writ. And yet it is plain fact, that it was writ and printed, and is to be sold by the booksellers of London and Westminster. And so it is plain fact, that the heathens worshipped their idols as gods in spite of all your arguments to prove the absurdity of it. For the question between you and me is not, whether their so doing was absurd, but whether it be true in fact that they did so.

G.—But, my lord, Maximus Tyrius a heathen writer, who surely knew his own religion denies positively, that they believed their images to be gods.

L.—Sir, Maximus Tyrius is not the only writer, who, overcome by the strength and multitude of reasons against him, has been compelled to recede from his own principles. But be that as it will, I ask whether Maximus Tyrius or the word of God is to be believed by christians? Supposing then that Maximus Tyrius is for you, I am sure the word of God is flatly against you. For besides the plain words I have already quoted from Leviticus, and numberless places of scripture, which I omit for brevity's sake, the following text of Isaiah is decisive: The residue thereof he maketh a GOD, even his graven image. He falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, deliver me, FOR THOU ART MY GOD. Isaiah xlv. 17.

Nay, Jeremias charges the house of Israel with the same extravagance: As the thief is ashamed, when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed, they, their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets, saying TO A STOCK, thou art my father, and TO A STONE, thou hast brought me forth. Jer. ii. 26, 27. And are we after this to consult Maximus Tyrius to know, whether the heathens believed their idols to be gods? I have hitherto thought the word of God to be infallible; but it seems Maximus Tyrius is to be believed before it.

However I think you cannot deny, but that Minusius Felix, and Arnobius the philosopher are two as creditable witnesses as Maximus Tyrius. Now the former of these (in Octavio) speaks thus to the heathens: Behold an idol is cast, it is worked, it is hewed, it is not yet a god; it is leaved, it is fixed, it is set up, it is not yet a god; it is adorned, it is consecrated, it is prayed to, then it is a god. And the philosopher Arnobius, after his conversion to christianity, laments his past folly in these pathetic words: I lately revered, O blindness! statues taken from the furnace, GODS HAMMERED UPON THE ANVIL.—as if it had a secret virtue I flattered it, I spoke to it, I made requests to an INSENSIBLE STOCK. L. I. contra Gentes. This, Sir, I think is answer enough to your Maximus Tyrius.

But what do you think of the golden calf? For either Moses relates a falsehood, or the Israelites worshipped it as a god.

G.—I perceive, my lord, you must draw in the Jews too, else all will stand you in no stead. And you have no mercy upon them. You suppose them full as ignorant as you have made the heathen. They must believe that the golden calf on the same day they made it, to be the great God, who made themselves and all the world, and to have brought them out of Egypt long before itself was made. But the Jews will not let this go with you more than the heathen: they were not quite so foolish.”—pp. 139, 140.

L.—What, Sir! have you got another Maximus Tyrius to baffle the word of God once more?

G.—My lord, the Jews had seen Osiris worshipped in Egypt under the figure of an ox, from which they took their figure of the calf. And it was to secure God's presence amongst them upon the supposed loss of Moses, by whom they had received their law from God, and directions from him upon all occasion. But Moses had been absent from them forty days, and took neither meat nor drink with him; so that they thought he had been quite gone or dead, and that they should see him no more. And then how should they do to secure the presence of God amongst them?”—p. 140.

L.—To be sure, the making a golden calf was a most infallible expedient.

G.—They took to this way of an image or symbol of God, not that they forsook God, but to take care that he might not forsake them. And they meant his worship in that of the golden calf. Therefore they proclaimed the dedication of it a feast unto the Lord, Exod. xxxii. 5. And that it was wholly for want of Moses they did it (by whom they had found by long experience the presence of God secured among them) they themselves gave the reason. Up, said they, make us gods, which shall go before us. For as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.—pp. 140, 141.

L.—Well, Sir, you almost make me admire both the religious zeal and ingenious fancy of the Jews. Their religious zeal in taking such effectual care to secure to themselves the presence of God, and their ingenious fancy in doing it by the image of a calf. For I own a calf is something like an ox; and I find I must not question, but the Egyptian ox called Osiris was but a symbol of the true God. And so, allowing only for the difference in age between the Jewish calf, and the Egyptian ox, you have proved to a demonstration, that the true God was worshipped by the Jews under the symbol of the golden calf. Thus with the force of your eloquence you have cleared the world both of heathen and Jewish idolatry to make room for popish idolatry alone.

But, Sir, give me leave to ask you one question. Do you believe the scriptures?

G.—My lord, I think I do.

L.—Well then, Sir, you must drop all your fine reasons, and believe Moses' saying: He (i. e. Israel) FORSOOK God which made him, and went back from the God of his salvation.—Thou hast FORSAKEN the God which made thee, and hast FORGOTTEN the God thy Creator. Deut. xxxii. 15, 18. You must likewise believe the Psalmist saying: They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image. Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox, that eateth grass. They FORGOT God, who had saved them, who had done so great things in Egypt, &c. Psalm cv. 19. Lastly, you must believe St Stephen speaking thus to the Jews: Our fathers would not obey, but THURST him (i. e. the true God) from them, and in their hearts turned back into Egypt, Saying unto Aaron, Make us GODS to go before us. And they made a calf in those days, and offered sacrifice to their idol, and rejoiced in the work of their own hands. Acts vii. 39, 40.

Now, Sir, if you believe these sacred texts, as you profess to do, you are bound to retract what you said just now, viz., that the Israelites did not FORSAKE God, but only took care that he should not forsake them. For it is a flat contradiction to all the three texts. Moses says, and repeats it twice, that they FORSOOK God: you say expressly, they did NOT FORSAKE him. Either therefore Moses or you are in the wrong. Again the psalmist says, that they FORGOT God who had saved them; and St Stephen tells them, that they THRUST GOD from them, and in their hearts turned back into Egypt. You on the contrary aver that they only took care, that God should not forsake them: which you express in stronger terms thus, that it was to secure God's presence among them. Here then again either you, or both David and St Stephen are mistaken. For if it be true, that the Israelites only took care to secure God's presence to them, it must be false that they FORGOT HIM, and THRUST HIM AWAY from them. But if it be true, that they FORGOT him, and THRUST HIM AWAY from them (as I hope it is) then it must be false, that they only took care to secure his presence among them. Because a man, who is only solicitous to secure God's presence to him, cannot be said either to forget him, or thrust him away from him.

I must therefore advise you as a friend to be hereafter more wary what you say. For though by contradicting the general sense of mankind you only render yourself guilty of singularity or nonsense (which your zeal against popery will atone for amongst your protestant brethren) yet contradicting the plain word of God is barefaced impiety, which the very warmest zeal against popery will not excuse.

But suppose there were no texts directly against you, the very circumstances of the fact, as related by Moses, demonstrate the falsehood of your assertion. For, if the Israelites did not forsake God, but only took care to secure God's presence among them, how could their crime be of so heinous a nature, as Almighty God himself represents it to Moses, Exod. xxxii. 7—9, &c. Or why should Moses express his extreme abhorrence of it by such an extraordinary transport of zeal, as was that of his breaking in pieces the tables written with God's own hands? 19. Why did he reproach Aaron so bitterly for his compliance with the people's request, and call it peccatum maximum, a most grievous sin? 21. Finally, why did he command the Levites to destroy to the number of 23,000 of those, who in all likelihood had been the most forward in the matter? 27, 28. Pray, Sir, answer me these questions; and show how these facts can be reconciled with your saying, that the Jews did not forsake God, but only took care, that he might not forsake them.

“G.—My lord (to conclude this subject of images) let me ask you, suppose it were made treason to draw the picture of the king, or to bow to it; would you venture your life upon all the distinctions and excuses, which are made for the pictures of God? Yet you venture your souls upon it, if it be a sin: though you think it may be beneficial to you, as putting you in mind of him, or paying respect unto him.

“Now learn by this how dangerous a thing it is to make means of grace of your own invention, and to think that by your consecrations and dedications without warrant of God's word you can secure his presence with you, and procure the grace of health, or any benefit either to body or soul. “This is turning religion into superstition.”—p. 141.

L.—Sir, I have already answered your lampoon upon consecrations and dedications (Part II. Sect. 3. and Sect. 17.) and you have so surfeited me with your nauseous repetitions about our making means of grace, that I am perfectly sick of it.

As to your noble question, viz., whether supposing it were made treason to draw the picture of the king, or to bow to it, I would venture my life upon all the distinctions and excuses, which are made for the pictures of God? I answer first, that your question runs upon the supposition, that christians are forbid to make pictures of God; which I have already proved to be false: nay I have proved it from the practice of your own church, which makes pictures of God the Holy Ghost in the likeness of a dove, as we of God the Father in the likeness of an old man. And let me tell you, Sir, you will stand in need of all our popish distinctions, and one more into the bargain to bring yourself off, viz., that protestants may lawfully do it, but not papists.

I answer 2dly, that if any king should make it treason to draw a picture of him, or bow to it, I should conclude him to be distracted: and in that case I should be as mad as himself, if I ventured my life in his hands by doing any thing, that should put me under the necessity of a distinction to save it.

But you say, we venture our souls upon a distinction when we make pictures of God, if it be a sin. And do not you venture your souls upon the same distinction, when you make pictures of the Holy Ghost, or even of Christ, if it be a sin?

But pray, Sir, give me leave to ask you whether you ever eat blood-puddings?

G.—Surely, my lord, you are disposed to be merry.

L.—No really, Sir, I am very serious. For whenever you eat blood-puddings, you venture your soul upon two distinctions, if it be a sin? Because eating blood is positively forbid by the law of God. Here then you must distinguish, that it was forbid to the Jews, but not to christians. But, Sir, it is likewise positively forbid to christians. Acts xv. 29. And this prohibition was never repealed by any contrary decree. Here then you must venture your soul upon a second distinction: viz., that eating blood was forbid only for a time whilst it was an occasion of scandal to the converted Jews. Thus, Sir, some men have their consciences like purses, that may be either shut or opened as occasion serves. When popery is not the question you can venture your soul upon a distinction as boldly as any man living; but when papists are to be traded, your protestant conscience becomes so very nice and squeamish, that a distinction will not go down with you.

But I think we have now had enough of images. So let us proceed to something else. It shall be transubstantiation, if you please.

SECTION XXII.—OF TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

“ G.—My lord, transubstantiation is a mere school nicety,

“ which no man alive understands ; and yet it is transformed into an article of faith by the Council of Trent.”—p. 141.

L.—Sir, transubstantiation is a school nicety like consubstantiality : yet this (according to your way of speaking) was transformed into an article of faith by the first Council of Nice. And I believe transubstantiation is full as intelligible as consubstantiality. But if the incomprehensibility of a mystery be an objection against it, I know not what will become of the three creeds.

G.—Christ said, this is my body ; but as to the manner or means how it was so, he said not a word. Whether only sacramentally, figuratively, or symbolically ; or on the other hand, substantially, consubstantially, or transubstantially : these are inventions of our own, from our poor philosophy. And yet about these is our whole dispute, which has tormented the christian church in our latter age more than all the other mysteries of religion. Had we kept to the words of the institution, as Christ left them, and gone no further, there might have been various opinions in the schools concerning the manner of the presence of Christ in the sacrament ; and they, who had nothing else to do, might have spent their idle hours, and vain distinctions about it. But it had never broke the communion of the church, if it had not been adopted into an article of faith, and made a condition of communion. And now we must dispute about it.”—pp. 141, 142.

L.—What pity is it, that the church has made it her constant practice to define articles of faith, as often as new heresies were broached ! For, if she had but let every one follow his own fancy peaceably and quietly ; if truths opposite to new coined heresies had never been adopted into articles of faith, the communion of the church had never been broke ; but now they are made conditions of communion, we must dispute about them. This, Sir, has been the language of heretics in all ages, and the Arians declaimed as bitterly against the great Council of Nice for adopting consubstantiality into an article of faith, and making it a condition of communion, as protestants declaim against the Councils of Lateran and Trent for adopting transubstantiation into an article of faith.

But is it not very pleasant in you to complain how much the christian church has been tormented in this latter age with disputes about this matter? For pray, Sir, who were the first broachers of these disputes? Who were the aggressors? Was not the Catholic Church, when you separated yourselves from her, in as quiet and indisputable a possession of the doctrine of transubstantiation, as of any other article of religion? Was there in the beginning of the 16th century a town or village in the whole christian world, where it was not publicly taught and professed? Was it not defined against Berengarins (who likewise subscribed to it before his death) in eleven national or provincial councils near upon 500 years before the Reformation? Nay was not the very word adopted by the Lateran Council above three hundred years before Luther and Calvin set up for reformers? If then the church has been tormented with disputes about it in this latter age, the blame lies at their doors, who began these disputes. They were the Botefeus, that broke the peace, and not the papists, who only adhered to the ancient doctrine, they were in possession of.

However since I perceive you lay your greatest stress upon the words of Christ's institution. This is my body; and pretend that they do not determine, whether his body be in the sacrament substantially and transubstantially, or only figuratively, or symbolically: before I say any thing concerning the perpetual tradition of the church relating to the point in question I shall first prove it from the very words of the institution, provided you will but allow, that Christ spoke truth, and did not express himself absurdly. Which I think are two modest requests.

SECTION XXIII.—TRANSUBSTANTIATION PROVED FROM THE WORDS OF CHRIST'S INSTITUTION, THIS IS MY BODY, &c.

L.—To proceed gradually, I shall first prove, that they import a substantial presence of Christ's body; and after that there will be no great need of philosophy, but only of good common sense to infer the doctrine of transubstantiation.

That they import a substantial presence of Christ's body I prove first. Because all propositions like these, this is bread, this is a man, this is the tower, &c. (unless you point to their pictures) are in all common discourse as currently understood for the reality and substance of the things specified, as if the words really and substantially were added. Nay a man would be laughed at for a formal cautious coxcomb, if pointing to a loaf of bread he should say, this is bread really and substantially: or coming from court for example, he should tell me he had seen the king that day really and substantially. Because there is no difference between a thing, and its reality and substance. In like manner therefore when our Saviour said, this is my body, he declared as effectually, that it was his body substantially, or in substance, as if he had expressed it in the most formal terms. This is the common language of mankind. All wise men speak so, and all wise men understand it so; and if any man should pretend to mean otherwise, he would deservedly pass for a notorious equivocator, that says one thing, and means another.

I prove it 2dly, if Christ gave not his real body, but a morsel of bread to his apostles, when he said, take and eat, this is my body, then it follows, that he called a morsel of bread his body; which cannot be maintained without making Christ guilty of a downright absurdity. For nothing can be more absurd, than to hold a morsel of bread in a man's hands, and point to it and say, this is the living body of a man: it being contrary to the common practice of mankind, and the common laws of speech to call one thing by the name of another, with which it has no manner of resemblance or connexion: and that too without giving the persons, to whom it is spoken, the least intimation to serve as a key to let them into the true meaning of such an extraordinary and unheard of manner of speech. In effect, it is much the same, as if I should write to you in cyphers without ever giving you a key to understand me by.

I prove it 3dly, a sober man would be ashamed in any serious occasion to use a deceitful way of speaking, so as to call a thing by a name it was never known by before. As for example, to take up a piece of brick, and say this is a diamond. It is therefore incredible that Christ, who could say nothing unbecoming himself, should use this deceitful way of speaking in the most solemn circumstance, and action of his life: that is, when he was fulfilling the types and figures of the ancient law, declaring his last will and testament, and instituting the most venerable sacrament of the new law.

I prove it 4thly from the doctrine of your own church: I mean not the writings of some particular English protestants, who teach the real and substantial presence of Christ in the sacrament as we do, but your own church Catechism, which is printed in all your books of common prayer, has the authority of your whole church to recommend it, and delivers the summary of her doctrine dogmatically. Now in this Catechism to the question, What is the inward part or thing signified? it is answered: The body and blood of Christ, which are VERILY and INDEED taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's supper.

This, Sir, is the doctrine of your own church, of which I will not bate you a single ace in this dispute: for it expresses the real and substantial presence of Christ in the eucharist as fully as any of our Catechisms. Nay if VERILY and INDEED be not the same as really and truly, and of full force to exclude a mere figurative sense, I confess I am yet wholly ignorant of the signification even of the most ordinary words, and it will be impossible to know what men mean, even when they deliver themselves in the plainest terms. So that you must either own, that according to the doctrine of your church the words of Christ's institution import a real and substantial presence of his body and blood in the sacrament; or you must suppose her guilty of a most scandalous equivocation in so serious a matter, and confess she only makes use of the words VERILY and INDEED to put a cheat upon the people, and make plain bread and wine go down the better.

G.—But, my lord, what is all this to transubstantiation? For, allowing the words of the institution to import a real and substantial presence of Christ's body and blood in the sacrament, this neither determines them to transubstantiation nor consubstantiation, which therefore are mere inventions of philosophy, and no articles of faith.

L.—Sir, if reasoning from uncontested principles of faith be what you call mere inventions of philosophy, I will readily allow transubstantiation to be an invention of that sort: for it follows by a necessary consequence from the supposition, that the words of Christ's institution are to be understood literally: that is, if they import a real and substantial presence of his body and blood, as I have fully proved they do.

G.—But why does transubstantiation follow any more than consubstantiation?

L.—Sir, if Christ taking the bread into his hands had said, HERE is my body, then Luther, setting aside tradition, would have had reason on his side in saying that the bread and body of Christ are joined together in the sacrament. But Christ did not say, HERE is my body, but THIS is my body, which nothing but a substantial change can make really and literally true: for if what Christ gave to his apostles, continued bread after, as it was before the words of consecration, the proposition was absolutely false; because the sense of it then was, that the bread he gave to the apostles was his body; which implies a contradiction, and is as impossible, as that any two substances remaining different should be the same.

It is not then philosophy, as you pretend, but the plain text of scripture, which obliges us to believe transubstantiation; that is, an entire change of the substances of bread and wine, into the body and blood of Christ: as nothing but a substantial change could have made the words of Moses true, if when he threw down his rod, he said, this is a serpent; or of Christ, if he had said at Cana in Galilee, when the servants brought in water, this is wine. For, if the water which the servants brought, had remained in its own nature, and Christ had said to the governor of the feast, this is wine, would he not have spoken a manifest falsehood? In like manner therefore the words of consecration, This is my body, this is my blood, could not be literally true, when Christ pronounced them, if the bread and wine had remained in their proper substance.

Now, Sir, you may put what objections you please. But pray take notice, that there is not an article of the creed, which a man, if he pleases may not darken and perplex with sophistical reasons against it.

“G.—The first thing I have to say is, that it is very “strange there should be any dispute about it. For our “Saviour was then fulfilling a type of himself, which was “the passover, and he kept to the same phrase or form of “words, which was customary with the Jews in their celebra- “tion of it, only putting himself in the room of his type. “As, instead of, this is the paschal lamb, which was slain “for us in Egypt, he said, this is my body, which is given for “you.

“And when Moses sprinkled the blood, it was with this “form of words, This is the blood of the Testament, which God “has enjoined unto you, Heb. ix. 20. Instead of which “old Testament Christ said, This is my blood of the New “Testament, Matt. xxvi. 28. In which words there is no “difficulty at all. For no mortal ever understood these “words of Moses in a transubstantial sense; and why should “they the same words, when Christ spoke them following “the very form of the words of Moses?

“This made it familiar and easy to the apostles, who “called many things hard sayings, which were not so difficult “as this; and yet expressed no wonder or astonishment at “these words of Christ; which had been impossible for “them not to have done, if they had taken them in the sense “of transubstantiation: for it was a new thing never heard “or thought of in the world to deny all their senses at once pp. 143, 144.

L.—Sir, I find myself here assaulted with three arguments tacked together, and I shall answer them in the same order as they are proposed. First, you tell me it was customary with the Jews in the celebration of the passover to say, this is the paschal lamb, which was slain for us in Egypt. But, Sir, a fact of this nature ought not to come a begging. Where is your proof, that there was such a custom amongst the Jews? But this it seems is wholly superseded, it being much easier to suppose, than prove it.

However let us suppose it was a custom amongst the Jews to say at their passover, this is the paschal lamb, which was slain for us in Egypt; this was as easy and familiar a metaphor, as it would be in visiting a neighbour's garden to say, this flower grows in my garden; meaning flowers of the same kind. But to make Christ call wine his blood, or a morsel of bread his body, and that in the very institution of a sacrament, is such a violent, improper, and unnatural figure, as never was uttered by any one in his right senses. Christ could indeed as he was the Son of God, change wine into his blood, with the same ease as water into wine; but he could not speak absurdly, nor be guilty of an equivocation, which any sober man would be ashamed of. And therefore when he said, This is my blood, he could mean nothing else, than that it was his blood VERILY and INDEED, as your Catechism expresses it.

Your second argument is a very strange one. I shall put it into some form of syllogism thus: [Moses took REAL BLOOD, and said this is the blood of the Testament, &c., and Christ took WINE, and said, THIS IS MY BLOOD. But no mortal ever understood the words of Moses in a transubstantial sense, therefore the words of Christ are not to be understood in a transubstantial sense.] Was there ever such wretched stuff proposed in a serious dispute! For the plain English of it is this: BLOOD is called BLOOD without any change; and why then should not WINE be called BLOOD without any change? A man in the deepest fit of the spleen would scarce forbear laughing at this question. Yet it is the ground of

Your third argument, wherein you tell me, that the words of Moses rendered those of Christ easy and familiar to the apostles. This supposes, that the apostles reflected at that time upon the words of Moses. But I take it to be much more rational to think the apostles before the coming of the Holy Ghost were too dull to make the nice reflections and discoveries you suppose they did. However had they done it, it would make against your argument rather than for it. For what could be inferred from their interpreting the words of our Saviour by those of Moses, but that as when Moses said, this is blood, they understood blood in the literal sense, so they understood Christ in the very same manner, when he said no less positively, this is my blood? For as they could not doubt but that Moses spoke the truth, and meant what he said, so it was the farthest from their thoughts to judge their Master guilty of a shameful equivocation in so solemn an occasion: and therefore nothing can be more absurd than to argue as you do, viz., that the apostles imagined, that Christ called wine, blood, because Moses called blood, blood.

And why then should the apostles ask any questions about the matter? the apostles, Sir, believed every thing Christ said with an implicit faith, whether they comprehended it or not. The miracles, they had seen him work, convinced them, that he could not only change one substance into another, but likewise that the same infinite power, which could make that change, could hinder it from being perceived by their senses. And therefore when Christ told them in the plainest terms, that what he gave them to drink was his blood, they had no business to consult their senses for information whether he spoke truth or not; but took him at his word, and believed they received his blood VERILY and INDEED, as you are bound to do, if you believe your own Catechism.

As to what you say, that the apostles called many things hard sayings, which were not so difficult as this: pray, Sir, where do you find this? Have you a patent granted you to forge and coin scriptural facts as you please, because the badness of your cause stands in need of it? Sir, I desire you to let me know in what place of scripture besides John vi. 61, Christ's words are called a hard saying? But were they the apostles that called them so? No, Sir, but only some of the disciples, who thereupon separated themselves from our Saviour: who turning to the twelve said, Will ye also go away? 67, and Peter answered in the name of all the rest, Thou hast the word of eternal life, we believe, and are sure, that thou art Christ the Son of the living God. 68, 69. Which was far from calling his words a hard saying: though Christ at that very time promised to leave them his flesh to eat, and blood to drink. And so it is no wonder, that they made no replies, nor expressed any astonishment, when he performed that promise at his last supper.

ADVERTISEMENT.—It is very plain that the three foregoing sections contain several objections proposed by the gentleman, which ought not to be passed over without an answer. Yet, as the gentleman has managed the former conversation betwixt his lordship and himself, his peaceable antagonist lets him run on there for five whole pages without answering one single word in defence of his cause. I presume the gentleman imagin'd his protestant readers would interpret his lordship's silence for a tacit acknowledgment that papists have nothing to answer to any of the various objections contained in those five pages. But I hope I have now disabused them in the three foregoing sections; wherein those five uninterrupted pages are now parcelled out into several heads with their proper answers to them.

However his lordship being at length allowed to break silence blunders out the following piece of nonsense in answer to the gentleman's two last lines concerning the denying our senses. L. I wonder you should stand so much upon this. You object your senses and your reason: and yet you give them both up in the mystery of the Trinity, Incarnation, &c. This, I say, is rank nonsense. First, because our senses have nothing to do particularly with the mystery of the blessed trinity, and therefore it is talking like a ninny to say they must be given up in that mystery. And 2dly, as to the giving up our reason, it is false to say we give it up in any mystery whatsoever. For if we did, faith and religion would be against reason; which I take to be little better than blasphemy. It is true we submit our reason in mysteries that are above it: but submitting in this case is not giving up our reason, but acting according to it: because nothing is more reasonable, than that we should submit ourselves to divine revelation in mysteries surpassing all human reason, as has been fully explained. [Part I. § 51.]

All this the gentleman knew very well, as appears from his answer to the above said piece of nonsense [Case Stated, p. 143] which being the same in substance as what I have now given to it, needs not be repeated here. But the words he concludes with relating to the senses, together with his lordship's two repartees, in which he even outdoes himself in nonsense, deserve to be set down.

G. But for the other point, viz., that of contradicting my outward senses, I think is an unanswerable objection.

L. Why? must you not give them up as to the Trinity and Incarnation?

G. Not at all, my lord. They contradict none of my senses. Pray tell me, which of them do they contradict? Is it the sense of hearing, seeing, or smelling?

L. They are not the object of sense.

G. Therefore they contradict them not.

This is really overstraining the character of a dunce in the person of our noble peer, and exposing him too unmercifully. For to make him first tell the gentleman that he must give up his senses as to the Trinity and Incarnation, and then own in the same breath that those two mysteries are not the object of sense, is something so eminently absurd, that nothing but a driveler can be capable of it.

But let us now hear what the gentleman has to say concerning the contradiction of our senses in transubstantiation.

SECTION XXIV.—NEITHER REASON NOR RELIGION OBLIGES US TO JUDGE ALWAYS ACCORDING TO THE INFORMATION OF OUR SENSES.

G.—My lord, all our senses are contradicted in transubstantiation. And I stand upon it, that since the creation of the world, God never did nor said any thing, which contradicted the sense of any man. It would be destroying the certainty of every thing. Miracles are appeals to our senses, and without believing our senses we can trust to no miracles, and by consequence to no revelation.—p. 144.

L.—You tell me, you stand upon it, that since the creation of the world God never did, nor said any thing, which contradicted the sense of any man. It is very stoutly said indeed. But let us see whether you can stand your ground.

Pray, Sir, how long was it before the creation of the world that an angel appeared to Joshua in the shape of a man? Jos. v. 13, 14. That God the Father appeared to Daniel in the likeness of an old man? Dan. vii. 9.

That the Holy Ghost appeared over our Saviour's head in the likeness of a dove? Matt. iii. 16. And, to omit many other instances, that two angels appeared to the women at the sepulchre in the likeness of two men? Luke xxiv. 4. For I stand positively upon it that in all these scriptural facts the senses were contradicted in the same manner as they are in transubstantiation. Could Joshua discern by the ministry of any of his senses, that it was not a man, but an angel whom he saw with a sword drawn in his hand, and whose voice he heard commanding him to put off his shoes, because the ground whereon he stood was holy? And so proportionably of the rest.

But, Sir, are not your senses also contradicted as often as you receive the body of Christ VERILY and INDEED? Do your eyes see it? Your hands feel it? Or your palate taste it? No, surely. And yet you receive it VERILY and INDEED, that is, truly and really, if you believe your church Catechism. And is it not then talking mere unintelligible riddles to say, God never did any thing which contradicted the sense of any man? Nay and to stand upon it with a positiveness, which must surprise all men of common sense? Had you not much better own transubstantiation honestly and fairly, than to play and trifle in this manner with words even in sacred matters?

But you tell me, it would be destroying the certainty of every thing. That is to say, if things ever appear otherwise to our eyes than they are in themselves, we must never trust them any more. Pray, Sir, take care then never to look at the sun, or moon, or stars. For they all appear to your eyes much lesser than they are in themselves. But reason corrects the misinformation of our senses; and so it does, when revelation tells us, that the thing, which appears to be bread, is the body of Christ VERILY and INDEED.

Lastly, you tell me, that miracles are appeals to our senses, and without believing our senses we can trust to no miracles, and consequently to no revelation. The true meaning hereof is, that unless in all occasions whatsoever we judge according to the information of our senses, no man can rationally believe he ever saw a miracle. Now let us examine the truth of this assertion from the circumstances of a fact, which every body is acquainted with.

St Peter was imprisoned in Jerusalem; and the very night before he was to be delivered up to the people, an angel came to him as he laid asleep bound with two chains, and smiting him on the side raised him up, and bade him follow him. Whereupon his chains fell off from his hands, and when they came to the iron gate, which led to the city, it opened of its own accord. But as soon as they came together to the end of the first street, the angel disappeared: and then it was that St Peter knew for certain that God had sent an angel to deliver him. Acts xii.

Here then is a fact, wherein St Peter both believed, and disbelieved the information of his senses. For it is certain, that no sensation either of seeing, hearing, or feeling could inform him that it was an angel, whom God had sent for his deliverance. On the contrary, had he judged according to the information of any of his senses, he must have fallen into an error, in believing that he felt, heard, and saw a man. Yet at the same time he believed his eyes, and had nothing but his eyes to trust to in believing that he saw two miracles wrought in favour of him, viz., the falling off of his chains, and the iron gate's opening of its own accord. Now we do not find St Peter argued, as you do, viz., that without believing his senses in all things, he could believe no miracles. Neither do we find him arguing thus. My senses misinformed me, when I seemed to myself to see, hear, and feel a man; therefore I must not believe any of the innumerable miracles I have seen Christ work with my own eyes, nor by consequence believe any revelation. It is therefore false, nay blasphemous what you say, viz., that without believing our senses (in every thing) we can trust to no miracles, nor by consequence to any revelation; especially when revelation itself obliges us not to judge according to the information of our senses.

“G.—It is a needless supposition, for there is no such “revelation.”—p. 144.

L.—No, Sir! You must have a good stock of assurance to say so after the many scriptural instances I have produced to the contrary. Had not St Peter a revelation, that it was an angel, who appeared to him, when all his senses informed him that it was a man?

“G.—But if there were a revelation; if an angel should “appear to me, and bid me believe that I saw him, but not “to believe any thing else that I saw of a hundred things “round about him, I should without more ado either believe “that I saw the other things I did see; or if I must not “believe I saw them, I should not believe I saw him.”—p. 144.

L.—Sir, if I should hear an angel talk the nonsense you suppose him to talk to you, I would not believe him. For one absurd supposition does many times infer another. As, if I suppose you to be a horse, I may legally infer, you are no protestant divine. But if God should reveal to me by an angel, that what to my eyes and ears appears to be a man, is not a man, I should certainly believe the revelation of God in flat contradiction to the information of my senses. Nor should this hinder me from believing my eyes as to all other visible objects about me.

“G.—My lord, I take it for a certain rule, that we must “either believe our senses in everything, or in nothing.”—p. 144.

L.—Now, Sir, you speak out boldly, and like a true protestant hero. But if this be true, it follows first, that they, who at our Saviour’s baptism saw the likeness of a dove over his head, were bound to believe it was a real dove, and not the Holy Ghost: and so the Evangelists are made the authors of a falsehood. It follows, 2dly, that the women at the sepulchre acted absurdly in believing that they saw two angels. Yet they believed it firmly, and told the disciples they had seen a vision of angels. Luke xxiv. 23. It follows, 3dly, from your rule that St Peter was grossly mistaken, when he said, now I know for certain, that God has sent his angel, and hath delivered me out of the hands of Herod. Acts xii. 11. Lastly, it follows from your certain rule, that though God should at any time tell me, that my eyes misinform me, I am bound either not to believe him, or renounce the use of my senses for ever: which if it be not blasphemy or madness, I desire to know what is.

G.—Had not the apostles at the Lord's supper as much “reason to doubt, whether it was Christ they saw, or that “he spoke to them, as that it was bread, which they saw and “eat?”—p. 144.

L.—No, Sir, they had not; and the reason is plain. Because Christ did not tell them, that they saw him not, or heard him not. But he told them positively, that it was his body, which he gave them to eat. The apostles therefore had no reason to doubt of the reality of his body; nor could they believe it was bread, because a morsel of bread is no more a living body, than your head is a barber's pole. Nay you yourself, if you will stand to the doctrine of your own church, are bound to believe, that he gave them his body VERILY and INDEED. And, if he gave them his body VERILY and INDEED, how could it be nothing but bread, which they saw and eat? Or was it verily and indeed both bread and his body?

G.—My lord, if you come once to deceptio visus, it will “go quite through, and you cannot be sure of one thing “more than another: because the fault is in the eye, not in “the object. So that if transubstantiation be true, there is “nothing else in the world true but it.”—pp. 144, 145.

L.—Sir, the truth of transubstantiation hinders no more the truth of other things perceptible by our senses, than the truth of any mystery, that is above our reason, hinders the truth of things, that are within the reach of it. Neither is there any fault either in the eye, or in the object, but the fault is in the heart and understanding, if it presumes to question the divine veracity, and contrary to the infallible revelation of God believes that to be bread, which he declares to be his body.

G.—My lord, transubstantiation is no small prejudice to this “miracle of miracles, and a contradiction to itself, and to all “other miracles, and to every thing else in the world; that “it should be put upon us just for nothing but to stagger “our faith, and make us doubt of every thing!”—p. 145.

L.—Sir, transubstantiation is a mystery, which like the incarnation exercises my faith, but staggers it not, nor makes me doubt of any one truth I know of. Nay, on the contrary, they, who deny it, may with the same obstinacy deny the incarnation, with which of all mysteries it has the greatest resemblance; and which is both lampooned, and as strongly disputed against by Jews and Socinians, as transubstantiation is by you.

But it is above my understanding to comprehend your saying, that it is a contradiction to itself and to all other miracles, and to every thing else in the world; unless your meaning be, that I must utterly renounce the use of all my senses, if either reason or revelation assures me, that in some cases things are not what they appear to be. The absurdity whereof I have already sufficiently exposed.

However I am glad to hear you call the sacrament of the Lord's supper the miracle of miracles. And indeed it is but speaking consonantly to the doctrine of your own church teaching that the body and blood of Christ are received VERILY and INDEED in the Lord's supper: for this is truly the miracle of miracles. But if in taking it we receive nothing but plain bread and wine, it is not only rank nonsense to call it so, but a notorious cheat put upon the people, who will imagine great miracles and wonders are wrought, when every thing remains in its proper and natural being.

G.—My lord, if all the benefits of the death of Christ be conveyed to us, in the sacrament by a figurative and symbolical representation of his body and blood, and that it be so instituted for this end, it is to all intents and purposes as beneficial to us, as if we had eat the flesh of Christ off his bones, or drank the very blood that came out of his side, which is abhorrent to think; and to avoid which you call this an unbloody sacrifice. But how is it unbloody, if it be real blood, even the self same blood, that was shed upon the cross?—p. 145.

L.—And would you not have the people believe it to be real blood, when you tell them that the body and blood of Christ are received VERILY and INDEED in the Lord's supper? And if it be Christ's blood, VERILY and INDEED, can it be any other blood as to its substance, than what he shed upon the cross? Yet I presume your communicants do not take it in a bloody manner. But why then is it called an unbloody sacrifice? Because Christ the victim is not killed upon the altar, as he was upon the cross.

As to what you say, that all the benefits of the death of Christ may be conveyed to us by a figurative and symbolical presence, I answer, the question is not, what Christ might have done, but what he has effectually done for us. He might have redeemed us without dying on the cross, but must we infer from thence, that he has not died for us on the cross? In like manner, therefore, though all the benefits of his death and passion might have been conveyed to us by our receiving a morsel of common bread, or any other way, or without any sacraments at all, if he had been pleased to ordain it so, does it therefore follow that he has effectually ordained it so? On the contrary his infinite goodness has thought fit to communicate his own sacred body and blood really and truly to us; that is, not figuratively or symbolically only, but VERILY and INDEED; for I cannot express it in stronger terms.

SECTION XXV.—CHRIST'S BODY AND BLOOD ARE BOTH REALLY AND SPIRITUALLY PRESENT IN THE SACRAMENT.

G.—My lord, you yourselves allow, that his words must “be taken in a spiritual, not a carnal sense, because Christ himself said speaking of this sacrament (as you own) and “to solve that hard saying, at which many were offended, “of giving them his flesh to eat, he made it easy to them by “this explication: It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life, John vi. 65. May we not “then take his words in a spiritual sense?”—p. 145.

L.—Yes, Sir, we may; provided the reality of Christ's presence in the sacrament be not excluded by it. That is to say, provided it be consistent with our receiving his body and blood VERILY and INDEED. Now the words, you have quoted from St John, insinuate such a spiritual sense, as is neither inconsistent with the literal meaning of the institution, nor the reality of Christ's presence in the sacrament: but is only opposed to the carnal sense of those incredulous disciples, who according to their gross imagination knew of no other eating or drinking than for the nourishment of their bodies; and (to speak in St Austin's own words) thought our Saviour intended to cut off pieces of his own flesh from his body for them to eat, and therefore said, this is a hard saying. Aug. in Psalm 98.

Now, to correct this gross mistake, Christ said, it is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. As who should say, it is not dead corruptible flesh, and changeable into the substance of your bodies, that profits in order to salvation: but the flesh, I intend to give you for the nourishment of your souls, has all its saving qualities from the spirit or divinity, by which it is quickeneth.

This is exactly conformable to St Austin's comment upon those words: What then (says he) is the meaning of this, the flesh profits nothing? As they understood it, as it is torn in pieces in a dead body, and sold in the shambles, it profits nothing: but it profits as animated by the Spirit—for if the flesh profited nothing, the word would not have been made flesh, that it might dwell in us.

Thus St Austin. And who would not now be surprised to find most protestant authors as well as yourself lay such a stress upon this text, as even to make it the principal support of their error? But ignorant people must be imposed upon by some scriptural text; and this being obscure in itself was fittest for that purpose; though, if rightly understood, it cannot furnish you with the least shadow of an argument against the real presence of Christ's body and blood in the sacrament. Christ says, it is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. That is (according to St Austin) dead flesh, as cut and sold in the shambles, profits nothing, but it profits as animated by the Spirit: and is it not playing at cross purposes to infer from thence, that therefore Christ's living body is not received really and truly in the sacrament?

G.—My lord, the body of Christ is taken and received in the same manner as it is present in the sacrament: and you yourselves allow, that it is there present in a spiritual not carnal manner.

L.—Sir, it is certainly true, that the body of Christ is received in the same manner as it is present in the sacrament; and therefore as it is received VERILY and INDEED; that is, really and truly, and without equivocation; so it is VERILY and INDEED, that is really and truly, and without equivocation present in the blessed sacrament. But real and carnal are not the same. And therefore, though the body of Christ be really and truly present in the sacrament, the manner of its presence is spiritual; not as spiritual is opposite to real, but as it is opposite to carnal. That is, as it is opposite to that gross idea or notion, which the unbelieving disciples had of the meaning of our Saviour's words. For they imagined he was to be cut in pieces, and that they were to eat his flesh, as that of common animals, for the nourishment of their bodies.

Christ's body therefore is not present in this carnal manner; yet it is really and truly present in the sacrament as to its substance, though the manner of its presence be spiritual.

First, As to its condition, or endowments: I mean, its being glorious, impassible, incorruptible, immortal. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. It is sown a natural body, and it is raised a spiritual body. 1 Cor. xv.

2dly, As to the manner of its being in place; which is not according to the usual laws of bodies commensurated to, or circumscribed by place, but more resembling the idea we have of spirits. Thus, when Christ came to his disciples, the doors being shut, his entrance was spiritual, though real.

3dly, It is spiritual as to the end, for which it is received, viz., the nourishment of our souls.

4thly, As to the persons, by whom it is received. For the unworthy communicant receives it with his mouth only, and therefore the flesh profits him nothing; but it is spirit and life to the worthy communicant; because he receives it spiritually, as well as truly and really.

5thly, and lastly, Its manner is spiritual as to our sensation, because we have not from our senses any information of its presence, but only from our faith.

Thus then the manner of its presence is spiritual: but it is a spirituality no ways opposite to its reality. And therefore your argument is of no force to prove against us, that we allow of a mere figurative, or symbolical presence.

“G.—My lord, there is not one man in your communion, but must own that the words of institution are figurative. For example, this cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you, Luke xxii. 20. Here is first the cup for the wine by a metonymy called continens pro contento. Then the cup being the new testament, I suppose you will allow is another figure. And it is another, it is shed for which shall be shed; for his blood was not then shed. This last figure you have boldly avoided in your mass, where it is put effundetur, shall be shed instead of effunditur, or effusum according to the Greek ἐκχυσόμενον. However the two other figures stand unalterable.”—p. 146.

L.—Pray, Sir, what figure is there in these words of St Matthew, this is my body: this is the blood of the new testament, which shall be shed for many for the remission of sins? xxvi. 26, 28. I presume you will not deny these to be the words of the institution. And if St Luke has made choice of figures to express the same thing; must figures expound plain words, or plain words the figures?

However that be, I cannot but pity the hard shifts you are put to, in being forced to make this an argument of importance, viz.: Amongst the words of the institution as delivered by St Luke, there are some figures; therefore the whole institution is to be understood in a figurative, or symbolical sense. Suppose a master should speak thus to his servant: this bottle is not good, bring me a better bottle of the same wine; here is the very metonymy you speak of: yet I believe the servant would not be such a blockhead as to think his master demanded a bottle of figurative or symbolical wine. In like manner therefore, when St Luke uses the aforesaid metonymy in thus delivering the words of the institution, this cup is the new testament in my blood, though cup and testament be figures, a man must be either very weak or very perverse to conclude, the Evangelist means figurative or symbolical blood; and if he does not, what matter is it, whether cup and testament be figures or not?

If Christ had said, this cup is the new testament in wine, would the metonymy have hindered you from taking the word wine in its literal sense? And why then should it hinder you from taking the word blood in its literal sense, when he says, this cup is the new testament in my blood? You may as well say, that if there be some metaphors in any sentence, as thus: the furnace of tribulation, and the rod of reproof make men wise, every word in that sentence must be understood metaphorically; which would turn all such ways of speaking into rank nonsense; though they be used even in the most familiar discourses. And the reason is, because all figures of this nature are so easy and familiar, that no man of common sense can misunderstand them, and the forementioned words of St Luke are as plain to all but professed triflers, as these words of St Matthew: This is the blood of the new testament, which shall be shed for many for the remission of sins. But to call bread a living body, or wine blood, that is, to give things names they were never known by in the world; and that in the very institution of a sacrament, and without any previous or concomitant intimation of their meaning, is such an absurd, unnatural, and equivocating way of speaking, that we cannot without impiety judge Christ capable of it.

As to the third pretended figure, which you say we have boldly avoided in the mass, Sir, I either have a pair of very bad spectacles, or the Latin version has effundetur in St Matthew xxvi. 28, and fundetur, that is, shall be shed in St Luke xxii. 20. And so the mass being in Latin, and many hundred years older, than the English protestant Bible, has boldly followed the Latin version, which had the approbation of the Catholic Church many ages before reforming came into fashion.

“ G.—My lord, to convince you, that the words of Christ
 “ are figurative, and that the elements do not lose their nature
 “ by the consecration, they are called by their own names

“ after the consecration, as wine is called the fruit of the vine
 “ after the consecration, Matt. xxvi. 29; Mark xiv. 25.
 “ And it is called bread, which they eat in the sacrament,
 “ and we are called bread, because we partake of that bread,
 “ 1 Cor. x. 17; xi. 26—28. We are bread by the same figure,
 “ that bread is flesh: and we are no more sure, that we are “ not bread, than that the sacrament is not bread.”—p. 146.

L.—Pray, Sir, forget not your Catechism, but vouchsafe to remember, that the body of Christ is received verily and indeed in the Lord's supper. This therefore we are sure of. But I hope we are not equally sure, that either you or I came out of a meal tub, or were baked in an oven VERILY and INDEED. I shall answer your texts immediately.

G.—But see now the arbitrariness of your interpretation. “ When it is said of bread, this is flesh, that is so very plain, “ it must be taken literally: but when it is said of bread in “ the sacrament, this is bread, the expression is so obscure, “ that it must be taken figuratively. Is not this destroying “ the meaning of all expressions to take words figuratively “ or literally just as you think fit, and contrary to the common “ usage, as understood in all other things?”—p. 147.

L.—Sir, to take words figuratively or literally just as a man thinks fit is certainly destroying the meaning of all expressions, and if you will but stand to this one principle, there is an end of the dispute between you and me concerning transubstantiation. For then you will find yourself obliged to understand the words of the institution literally; since they cannot possibly be otherwise understood but by the most strained and arbitrary interpretation; as I have clearly proved. Nay your own church understands them so by declaring, that the body and blood of Christ are VERILY and INDEED taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's supper; to which words you can give no figurative sense without the most arbitrary interpretation in the world: and if Christ's body and blood are received verily and indeed in the sacrament, there must be either a substantial change of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ; or they must be joined together; as Luther holds.

But, as an arbitrary way of taking words figuratively destroys the meaning of all expressions, so it is no less destructive to the common laws of speech to conclude from thence, that therefore figures which are easy and natural, and taken for such by the generality of mankind, are likewise arbitrary. Because it is morally impossible either to write or speak without the use of such figures; and they are so far from obscuring, that they give the greatest beauty, strength, and lustre to any sort of discourse. Now then let us consider, whether calling the elements by their own names after the consecration be not figures of this sort, or whether there be any arbitrariness in the use of them.

I prove there is no arbitrariness in it, because it is the common custom of mankind to give a thing the name of that, out of which it is made. Thus it was said to Adam Gen. iii. 19, dust thou art; because though then a living man he had been made of dust. Thus the person's name is given to his corpse; as Joseph desires leave to bury HIS FATHER, Gen. l. 5. And, behold there was a DEAD MAN carried out, the ONLY SON of his mother, Luke vii. 12. The serpent was made by a substantial change from Aaron's rod, which even lost its former appearance, yet is still called a rod, because made from it. They cast down every man his rod, and they became serpents; but AARON'S ROD swallowed up their rods, Exod. vii. 12.

Thus it is plain we are not guilty of arbitrariness either in taking the words of the institution literally, or the words bread and wine after the consecration in a figurative sense. Nay nothing but one obstinately resolved to be in the wrong can understand either of them in any other sense.

G.—My lord, we are called bread, 1 Cor. x. 17. And we are called bread by the same figure, that bread is flesh.

L.—Sir, both these propositions, we are bread, and bread is flesh are literally false. And if Christ had said, this bread is my body, the expression would have been figurative. Because it is equally nonsense to say that bread is a living body literally, as it is to say, that, we are bread literally. But Christ did not say, this bread is my body, but only, this is my body: which, according to the common way of speaking, signified no more, than that the thing present, which he gave to his apostles, was his real body.

SECTION XXVI.—OBJECTIONS FROM THE FATHERS ANSWERED.

G.—My lord, every one abounds in his own sense, but I appeal to that of the ancient fathers.

L.—With all my heart, Sir.

TERTULLIAN.

“G.—Tertullian says, that Christ made the bread his body, “by saying, this is my body, that is, the figure of my body. “Contra Marcion. lib. 4. c. 40.”—p. 147.

L.—Sir, Tertullian's true meaning is, that Christ made the bread (which before was but a figure of his body) become his real body by saying, this is my body. The institution therefore did not make it a figure, but changed it into the reality, whereof it was a figure before. Now that this is the true meaning of his words I prove from the very subject of his dispute with Marcion, who held that our Saviour came to destroy the law: but Tertullian proves, he came to perfect it by fulfilling the prophecies and figures; and brings this instance, that Christ changed bread (which in the old law was a figure of his body) into his body. Which is a plain proof, that these latter words of the passage quoted [that is, the figure of my body] are transplaced, and cannot be referred to any thing but the bread.

G.—But, my lord, the transposition you speak of, is but an odd sort of figure; and by the help of it you may do wonderful feats, and make the fathers say what you please.

L.—Sir, I do not pretend to commend Tertullian's style, or propose his writings as the standard of good Latin. But fact is fact, and it is an undeniable one, that Tertullian frequently made use of that figure out of respect to the word of God, which he would not interrupt by interposing his own words. This made him say, Lib. contra Prax. C. 29, Christus mortuus est, id est, unctus; Christ is dead, that is anointed; instead of saying, Christ, that is the anointed, is dead. And in the very book against Marcion, C. 2, he writes thus: Aperiam in parabolam aurem meam, id est similitudinem. I will open to a parable my ear, that is, a similitude. Where his meaning is undoubtedly this: I will open to a parable, that is, to a similitude, my ear. So that let the transposition be as odd a figure as you please, it is manifest Tertullian has frequently made use of it; nor can you explain him otherwise without making him talk wide from the purpose.

ORIGEN.

“G.—Origen says of the sacrament, that it goes into the belly like other meat, and so into the draught. But says, he speaks concerning the typical and symbolical body of Christ in the sacrament, in Matth. c. 15.

“It was said of the body of Christ, Psalm xvi. 10, that it should not see corruption. But we know the sacrament will corrupt; therefore it is not the same.”—p. 147.

L.—Sir, when I was a young scholar, I remember I answered this argument by distinguishing, that the outward part of the sacrament, viz., the accidents of bread and wine will corrupt, but not the inward part, which is verity and indeed the body and blood of Christ. And, though I know you to be an enemy to popish distinctions, I must desire you to accept of this for your answer.

As to Origen, you have clipped his words, and concealed that part, which fully explains his meaning. I presume your reason for so doing is, because the words, you have omitted, imply the very distinction I have now given. For his genuine words are these: (This food consecrated by the word of God and prayer, AS TO THE MATERIAL PART OF IT, goes into the belly and so into the draught.) This shews that Origen speaks not of the sacrament absolutely, but with this limitation, as to the material part of it; meaning the accidents of bread and wine: which he calls the typical and symbolical body; because the accidents of bread and wine are a sign, type, or symbol of Christ's body nourishing our souls.

THEODORET.

"G.—Theodoret likewise calls the sacrament the symbols of the body and blood of Christ: and says that upon their consecration they are changed indeed, and made other things, but still remain in their own proper nature and substance, and shape and form: and are visible and tangible as they were before. Dial. 2."—pp. 147, 148.

L.—Sir, as to the first part of your quotation, Theodoret never calls the sacrament mere symbols of the body and blood of Christ: and if he does not call it so, he says nothing to serve your turn. Do not we also call it the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ? And what is a sacrament but a sign or symbol? But I hope you will not conclude from thence, that therefore we believe it to be a mere empty sign or figure of Christ's body and blood.

The latter broken piece, as you have quoted it, is wholly unintelligible. I shall therefore cite the whole passage, which is taken out of Theodoret's second dialogue; where under the name of Orthodoxus he maintains the catholic cause against an Eutychian, whom he calls Eranistes. His words faithfully translated are as follows:

ERANISTES. What do you call the gift, which is offered, before consecration? ORTHODOXUS. Food made of certain grains. ERAN. And how do you call the other symbol? ORTHOD. We give it a common name, which signifies a drink. ERAN. How do you call them after the consecration? ORTHOD. The body and blood of Christ. ERAN. And do you believe, that you receive the body and blood of Christ? ORTHOD. I do believe it. ERAN. As therefore the symbols of Christ's body and blood are one thing before consecration, but are changed, and made other things after consecration, so Christ's body after his ascension was changed into the divine substance. ORTHOD. You are taken in your own nets. For the mystical signs depart not from their own nature by consecration. For they remain in their former substance, and form and shape, and are visible and tangible as before. But they are understood to be the things, which they are made, and so they are believed, and they are adored, as being the things, which they are believed.

These are Theodoret's words. But if any man can conclude from them that he denies either the real presence or transubstantiation without making him contradict himself, I will own he has a talent at reconciling contradictions, which I am yet a stranger to.

The reason hereof is clear, because he grants first, that the gift, which was bread and wine before consecration is after the consecration called the body and blood of Christ. 2dly, that he believes it to be the body and blood of Christ. And 3dly, that they are adored, as being the things, which they are believed. Now if this be not professing the real presence and transubstantiation, no papist has ever made a profession of that article of his faith. Nay Eranistes lays it down as a principle agreed on by both sides, that the mystical symbols of bread and wine are changed, and made the body and blood of Christ by consecration, and concludes from it, that in the same manner Christ's body was after his ascension changed into the divine substance: which argumentation would be wholly impertinent if both Orthodoxus and Eranistes did not believe the change of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ.

“G.—My lord, Theodoret writes, as you have observed, “against the Eutychians, who said, that the human nature of Christ was absorpt, or swallowed up in the divinity. So “that there remained now none but the divine nature in him, “and that he was no more a man; and used this comparison, “that it was in like manner as in the sacrament, where the “bread was changed into the body of Christ. Yes, said “Theodoret, it is in the same manner, that is, in no manner “at all. For that the bread, though changed in its use and “significancy, yet lost not its nature, but remained truly and “properly bread as before. But had he believed transub- “stantiation, this had been a full and absolute confirmation “of the Eutychian heresy instead of a confutation. For “then there had remained no more of the human nature in “ Christ, than you believe the substance of the bread to remain in the sacrament. This explains the meaning of Theodoret even beyond his words.”—p. 148.

L.—Beyond his words, indeed. For surely never were a man's words more foully misrepresented. First, instead of Theodoret's saying, you are taken in your own nets; you make him speak thus: Yes it is in the same manner; that is, in no manner at all: which (besides the falsification of his words) is a manifest contradiction to his professing immediately before, that he believed the gift, which was bread and wine before consecration, to be the body and blood of Christ after the consecration. 2dly, your fixing upon Theodoret this meaning, viz., that the bread is changed only in its use and significancy, but remains truly and properly bread, is no less a contradiction to his words immediately following, wherein he declares that the symbols after the consecration are understood to be the things which they are made; that they are believed to be so, and are adored as being the things they are believed. For I appeal to common sense whether all this can be spoken of a change barely in use and significancy.

I add, that if Theodoret meant no more than a change in use and significancy, it will follow contrary to all probability, that he has made his Eutychian adversary argue the most childishly imaginable. For his argument would run thus: as the bread and wine are changed only in use and significancy, so the humanity of Christ is really changed into the divinity. Which being most eminently absurd cannot be attributed to Theodoret with any colour of reason. And it is an unanswerable proof that Orthodoxus and Eranistes, that is, Theodoret and the Eutychian his adversary agreed in this common principle of their faith, viz., that the bread and wine are by consecration really changed into the body and blood of Christ; because he makes it the ground and foundation of the Eutychian's argument or similitude to set forth the change made in the humanity of Christ after his ascension into heaven. Which is the particular branch of Eutychianism attacked by Theodoret in the passage quoted, as appears from Eranistes's words.

G.—But, my lord, how is this consistent with Theodoret's telling the Eutychian, that he is taken in his own nets? For if they both supposed a real and substantial change in the sacrament, the similitude came home to the point, and could not be retorted upon Eranistes.

L.—This, Sir, is the knot of the difficulty, to which I answer directly; that the mystery of the holy Eucharist according to catholic doctrine contains two things. First, that the bread and wine are substantially changed into the body and blood of Christ. And 2dly, that the accidents, or natural proprieties of bread and wine, as figure, taste, colour, &c., remain the same they were before. This latter truth Theodoret expresses by telling Eranistes, that the mystical signs depart not from their former nature by consecration, but are visible and tangible as before; which being a principle agreed to by his adversary, Theodoret had just reason to tell him, that he was taken in his own nets, in drawing a similitude from a mystery to establish his error, which very mystery contained a confutation of it. For immediately after the passage quoted, he concludes, that as the symbols after consecration retain all their former natural proprieties, so the body of Christ even after his resurrection and ascension was circumscribed, visible, and tangible, and had all the qualities of a human body glorified.

It is true, Eranistes lays the whole stress of his argument upon the substantial change wrought in the sacrament; as every man, that argues rationally, is supposed to set the best foot foremost: but Orthodoxus takes the advantage against him from the other part of the mystery; viz., the natural proprieties of bread and wine remaining after the consecration, and infers from it, that therefore the natural proprieties of Christ's body always remained; which he tells Eranistes is taking him in his own nets. Because though all agreed that the natural proprieties of bread and wine remain without their substance in the sacrament, no man ever said that the natural proprieties of Christ's body ever were without his real body; and so it followed by a clear consequence from the very similitude insisted upon by Iranistes, that the humanity of Christ was not absorpt in the divinity, and that there were always two real natures in Christ; the disbelief whereof was the capital error of the Eutyechians.

All this shews plainly, how little reason you have to say, that if Theodoret had believed transubstantiation, it had been a full and absolute confirmation of the Eutyechian heresy instead of a confutation. For, to speak properly, the doctrine of transubstantiation is neither a confirmation nor confutation of the Eutyechian heresy; nor has it any more connexion with it than the change of Moses's rod into a serpent; or the change of water into wine at Cana in Galilee. But since the Eutyechians drew a similitude from one part of the mystery of transubstantiation to colour their error, Theodoret had reason to answer them in their own way, and a just title to take the advantage of the other part of that mystery against them. So that nothing is more frivolous than what you add; viz., that (if Theodoret believed transubstantiation) then there had remained no more of the human nature in Christ, than we believe the substance of bread to remain in the sacrament. For you may with just as much good sense infer the same consequence, if Theodoret believed that Moses's rod was changed into a serpent, or that Christ changed water into wine: both which miracles I presume Theodoret believed without prejudice to the catholic cause.

G.—But, my lord, Theodoret says positively, that the mystical signs depart not from their own nature by consecration.

L.—No more they do in Theodoret's sense: because the mystical signs, that is, the accidents remain the same after, as they were before consecration. Now accidents have their proper nature and essence as well as substance; and the natural proprieties of things are often called their nature: as we say, it is the nature of ice to be cold, of water to moisten, and of fire to burn. So St Hilary, Lib. 10. de Trin. says, that fire in the Babylonian furnace lost its nature. And in the very same sense Theodoret speaks, when he says, that the mystical signs depart not from their own nature, that is, their natural proprieties by consecration.

G.—Ay, but Theodoret says more. For he adds, that they remain in their former substance, and form and shape, and are visible, and tangible as before.

L.—He does so. But pray, Sir, take the very next words with them. But they are understood to be the things, which they are made; and so they are believed, and they are ADORED, as being the things, which they are believed. That is, the true body and blood of Christ; as he professed to believe a few lines before. This, Sir, explains Theodoret's meaning, and shews, that he takes the word substance, not as it is opposite to accidents, but for a collection of them, as form, shape, visibility, tangibility, &c. For otherwise his meaning will be, that, though the bread and wine be changed into the body and blood of Christ; and, though the things, into which they are changed, are to be adored, yet they are nothing but plain bread and wine after, as they were before consecration; which is both a contradiction and blasphemy. It is a contradiction to say, that bread and wine retaining in all respects their former nature are changed and made the body and blood of Christ: and it is blasphemy to say, that bread remaining plain bread is to be adored: and nothing can clear Theodoret either from the one or the other, but taking the word substance for a collection of natural properties.

G.—But where does your lordship find the word substance ever taken in that sense?

L.—Sir, the English word substance does not bear so large a sense, as substantia in Latin, or ουσια in Greek; which is the word Theodoret makes use of in the text quoted. And therefore, though it be improper in English to give to accidents the denomination of substance, it is not so in the other two languages. Aristotle, who as a philosopher is supposed to follow the strictest laws of speech, writes thus, Lib. 5. Metaph. C. 8.: The word substance [ουσια] may be taken in two different senses. First, for the last subject [and this we properly call substance in English]. 2dly, FOR ANY ACCIDENT, THOUGH SEPARABLE FROM THE THING. And thus the Latin word substantia is taken by St Peter Chrysologus saying, a glorious body is changed in substance, but not in person. Mutasse substantiam, sed non mutasse personam. Serm. 82, and by St Austin saying, Man by sin fell from the substance in which he was made. Per iniquitatem homo lapsus est a substantia, in qua factus est. Psalm lxi. In both which places the word substance is taken for accidental qualities. Which suffices abundantly to justify my answer. However if you can find me any other English word to answer the full extent of the Greek ουσια, or the Latin substantia, I shall be obliged to you for it, and use it for the future in translating the text, you have objected from Theodoret.

G.—My lord, Theodoret says in the same place, that our blessed Saviour, who called himself the living bread and the vine, has also honoured the visible signs with the title and appellation of his body and blood, not changing their nature, but adding to nature grace.—p. 148.

L.—Sir, this passage is not in the same place with the former, but is taken from Theodoret's first dialogue. However the principal difficulty it contains is already answered. For since the visible signs lose nothing of their natural qualities by consecration, they may properly be said not to be changed in their nature: and the grace, which Theodoret says is added to nature, is Christ himself; of whom St Paul says, the grace of God, that bringeth salvation, has appeared to all men. Tit. xi. 11.

As to Theodoret's saying, that Christ, who called himself the living bread and the vine, has also honoured the visible signs with the title and appellation of his body and blood: his true meaning is, that the elements, which of their own nature are nothing but bread and wine, are honoured with the title and appellation of Christ's body and blood, by being made his true body and blood by the words of consecration: as a man of a mean extraction is said to be honoured with the title of lord or duke, when he is really made one. And that this is Theodoret's meaning is manifest from his own words immediately preceding the piece you have quoted. ERANISTES. I should be glad to know why the names are changed.

ORTHODOXUS. The reason is evident to those that understand the mystery. For Christ would not have us regard the nature of what we see. But as the names of the elements are changed, so to apprehend by faith the change, which is made in them by grace.

I shall conclude with a passage from Theodoret, where treating professedly of the sacrament, I presume he will speak his mind plainly. Christ (says he) at his last supper shewed the TRUE ORIGINAL, of which the paschal lamb was a TYPE; opened the gates of the holy sacrament, and gave his PRECIOUS BODY AND BLOOD not only to the eleven apostles, but also to the traitor Judas.—Those words [he shall be guilty of the body and blood of our Lord] mean this: that as Judas betrayed him, and the Jews insulted him, so they offer him a very great affront, who take his MOST HOLY BODY with unclean hands, and put it into a defiled mouth, in 1 Cor. xi.

Here he declares first, that the body and blood of Christ are truly contained in the sacrament: and 2dly, that they are given to all communicants both good and bad. And let any man now judge, whether this be not papistical doctrine. Nay, the four protestant Centuriators acknowledge Theodoret to be an abettor of transubstantiation. Theodoret (say they) affirms dangerously, that the symbols of the body and blood of Christ after the invocation of the priest are changed and become another thing. Cent. 5. C. 10. Let us now consider, whether any other amongst the fathers will be more favourable to you.

GELASIUS, AND FACUNDUS HERMIANENSIS.

“G.—Pope Gelasius says, that the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, which we take, is a divine thing, by which we are made partakers of the divine nature: and yet it ceases not to be the substance and nature of bread and wine. And certainly (says he) the image and similitude of the body and blood of Christ is celebrated in the mysteries.

“And Facundus says the same. Not (says he) that the bread is properly his body, or the cup his blood, but that they contain the mystery of his body and blood.”—p. 149.

L.—Sir, what has been already said to Theodoret, will fully answer Gelasius; who makes the same comparison as Theodoret did, and almost in the same terms. His design too is the same, viz., to shew, that, as the natural proprieties of bread and wine, though changed into the body and blood of Christ, remain after consecration; so after the incarnation there remain all the natural proprieties of human nature, and by consequence the human nature itself in Christ.

But pray, Sir, who has privileged you not only to suppress a material part of his words, but even to alter in your translation the broken piece you have quoted, by substituting and instead of or? For Gelasius says not substance AND nature, but substance OR nature. It ceases not (says he) to be the substance or nature of bread and wine: and he seems to have designedly used the particle or, to mollify the harshness of the preceding word substance, and make way for his own following explanation, viz.: that the sacraments by the divine operation of the Holy Ghost pass into the DIVINE SUBSTANCE; yet remain in the PROPRIETY of their nature: which you have wholly omitted; because it is rank popery, and makes Gelasius a witness for transubstantiation.

As to his saying, that the image and similitude of the body and blood of Christ is celebrated in the action of the mysteries; it imports no more than what children are taught in their Catechism, viz., that the eucharist is the sacrament of our Saviour's body and blood: because every sacrament is a sign or image of the thing it contains. And the words of Facundus Hermianensis saying, that they contain the mystery of Christ's body and blood, will bear the same meaning. For the eucharist, or sacrament of Christ's body and blood is certainly a great mystery; and every Roman catholic in the world will subscribe to his saying, that the bread is not properly his body, nor the wine his blood: but that they are changed into his body and blood. Have you any more fathers to quote?

G.—Yes, my lord, St Austin, and St Chrysostom.

L.—St Austin and St Chrysostom, do you say? Then

I fear you are in a bad way. But let us have St Austin first.

ST AUGUSTIN.

“G.—St Austin says, if sacraments did not bear some similitude to the things, of which they are the sacraments, they would not be sacraments at all. But from this similitude they often take the name of the things themselves. As, says he, the sacrament of faith, which is baptism, is called faith.”
—p. 149.

L.—Sir, I have more difficulty to find an objection in these words of St Austin, than to give an answer to it. For I do not see what other sense St Austin's words will bear, than that as every sacrament is a visible sign of invisible grace, Christ has instituted such visible signs for sacraments, as bear some similitude to the peculiar grace they produce. As bread and wine, which are nourishing things, and the matter of the holy eucharist, signify the spiritual nourishment of our souls, which is the peculiar grace of that sacrament; and it is therefore called the nourishment of our souls. And so of all the other sacraments.

But let us now hear St Austin deliver three truths diametrically opposite to the general protestant doctrine.

First, That Christ's immortal body is really present upon the altar under the sacramental signs.

2dly, That we receive it not only with our hearts, but also with our mouths. And 3dly, That it is actually received even by the unworthy communicant.

The first of these we have in his Confessions, where he writes thus of his mother: She desired to be remembered at thy altar, wheremat she had been constantly present without missing any one day: and FROM WHIENCE SHE KNEW WAS DISPENSED THE HOLY VICTIM, by which the handwriting that was against us, was blotted out, and by which the enemy was conquered, that numbered our sins. Lib. 9. Conf. C. 13.

The 2d. We receive with a faithful heart and MOUTH Jesus Christ giving us his flesh to eat, and his blood to drink : though it be more shocking to eat man's flesh, than to kill it, and to drink man's blood, than to shed it. L. 2. Contra adversarium Legis et Prophetarum.

And the 3d in these words : They, who, as the apostle says, eat and drink damnation to themselves, yet EAT THE VERY FLESH OF CHRIST, AND DRINK HIS VERY BLOOD. Serm. 11. De verbis Domini. C. 11.

All these are necessary consequences of transubstantiation, and shew plainly that a mere figurative or symbolical presence are contrary to St Austin's doctrine.

He adds (in Psalm xviii. 5) that no man eats the flesh of Christ but he adores it first. As likewise (in Psalm xxxiii.) that Christ upon the altar is offered in sacrifice. There was, as you know (says he), formerly a sacrifice of the Jews according to the order of Aaron in victims of cattle, and this is a mystery. There was not then the sacrifice of the body and blood of our Lord, which the faithful, and those that have read the gospel know: which sacrifice is now spread over all the world.

And is not then St Austin a very proper judge for a protestant to appeal to? Now let us hear St Chrysostom.

ST CHRYSOSTOM.

G.—St Chrysostom speaking of the vessels, in which the sacrament was put, in which (says he) there is not the true body of Christ, but the mystery of his body is contained in them. Opere imperf. in Matt., and Epist. ad Cæsarium, in Biblioth. p. Col. 1618.

L.—Sir, the author of the book you have quoted is not St Chrysostom, but a rank heretic. And you yourself must own him to be one, unless you will maintain it to be orthodox doctrine, 1. That marriage is of itself a sin. 2. That a second marriage is only an honest fornication; and 3. That the catholic doctrine of the divinity of Christ is the Homousian heresy: all which, and many other errors are scattered up and down in the writings of that author.

The epistle to Cæsarius is likewise suspected to be spurious by the learned. But this all men of sense must grant, that if it contradicts St Chrysostom's constant doctrine in his undoubted works, it ought to be rejected. Let us then hear himself speak, and he will teach us these three considerable truths.

First, That the body and blood of Christ are in the sacred vessels.

2dly, That the body of Christ is at the same time in heaven and upon earth.

And 3dly, that we must not trust our senses in this mystery: though you told me but a while ago, and were positive in it, that God never said, nor did any thing to contradict man's senses.

The first truth is delivered in the following words: The apostle (says St Chrysostom) tells us, that what is in the CHALICE is the same as that which flowed from his side. And the wise men adored that body even lying in the manger; but you do not see it in a manger, but upon the ALTAR. Hom. 24. in 1 Cor. x. 16.

The second truth is delivered by the same father in the two following passages: O miracle! O divine bounty! He, who sits above at the right hand of the father, is at the very same instant in all men's hands. L. 3. De Sacerdotio. C. 4.

And again; this mystery here changes for the earth into heaven—For I will shew thee here placed upon earth even that, which is most precious and adorable in heaven.—The body of [Christ] the King is the most magnificent thing in heaven; but you may now see it upon earth. Hom. de Sancto Philogonio.

The 3d truth is thus set forth at large by St Chrysostom. Let us always believe God, and not contradict him, THOUGH THAT, WHICH HE SAYS, SEEMS TO CONTRADICT BOTH OUR THOUGHTS, AND OUR SENSES.—For his words cannot deceive us, but OUR SENSES MAY BE EASILY DECEIVED. He never errs, but THESE ARE OFTEN MISTAKEN. Since therefore he says, 'This is my body, let us be fully persuaded of it.—How many say now, O that I could see him in his own shape! Or his clothes, or any thing about him! Believe me YOU SEE HIM, YOU TOUCH HIM, YOU EAT HIM. You would be content to see his clothes, and he lets you not only see him, but also touch him, and eat him, and receive him within you. Hom. 83. in St Matt.

And in the same Homily he tells us, the priest's office is only ministerial, but that the elements are sanctified and CHANGED by Christ.

Here we have both transubstantiation clearly taught, and the grand protestant objection from its contradiction to our senses fully answered. And had I not reason to tell you, it would go badly with you, if either St Austin, or St Chrysostom were to give verdict. Believe me, Sir, whenever you appeal to the fathers, whether Greek or Latin, you put yourself into the hands of enemies, and must expect to succeed accordingly.

SECTION XXVII.—THE GENTLEMAN'S UNSEASONABLE BOASTING.

“ G.—My lord, not to trouble you with more quotations, I refer you to Bishop Cosin's history of transubstantiation: where beginning at the institution, he sets down in every century the words of the fathers upon this point. A little book long since printed both in English and Latin, not yet answered (that I hear) and I believe unanswerable. Wherein you will see a cloud of witnesses, through the first ages of the church, and so downwards in perfect contradiction to this new article of your faith.

“ And as the scriptures, primitive church, and fathers are all against you, so have you nothing but an unintelligible jargon of metaphysics, upon which the schoolmen ring changes, till the noise of their bells have deafened common sense and reason. Such are their subtillies upon substance, accidents, subsistence, modusses, and modalities, and many more such quiddities; and their distinctions of materialiter and formaliter, per se, and per accidens, and a thousand more to solve all difficulties, and reconcile contradictions. No absurdity can be named out of the reach of a distinction. And when we understand it not, it operates most effectually, because then we may suppose there is something in it.”

p. 150.

L.—Truly, Sir, to hear you swagger at this wild rate, one would think you had an adversary at your feet begging for quarter. But if you be in this gasconading humour, when you ought to be sensible, that you just come from being driven out of all your entrenchments, how would you proclaim your victory with beat of drum, and sound of trumpet, had the advantage of any one argument been visibly on your side?

You began the attack with arguments from scripture: but finding your own artillery turned against you, you made haste to call the senses to your assistance, and these you bragged of as an invincible host. But they were unable to stand their ground against plain scriptural facts, common experience and reason. Lastly, you halled into the field some fathers; the greatest part of them most wretchedly disguised or mangled; and you would needs force them to maintain a cause, against which they all solemnly protest, when they are allowed to speak their own minds. Yet you have the confidence to tell me with a serious air, that scriptures, primitive church and fathers are all against me, and that I have nothing in the world on my side but an unintelligible jargon of metaphysics, with a deal more of such rodomontado stuff.

However I must own you have managed the fathers with most exquisite skill, sometimes by the most strained and contradictory interpretations, and other times by suppressing some material part of the text, which might serve as a key to open the true sense and meaning of the author. By the help of these ingenious artifices the fathers may be made mere punchinellos, or speaking trumpets, and in spite of their great age be taught the modern protestant language, which they were utter strangers to 1200 years ago.

But you refer me to Dr Cosin's unanswerable history of transubstantiation, and particularly to his quotations from the fathers; out of which you thought fit to choose to the number of seven. And I presume I may be allowed to have that good opinion both of your judgment, and zeal for the cause, as not to doubt, but that out of the numerous quotations, with which Dr Cosin has crammed his book, you have picked the very choicest. For it is not reasonable to suppose, that a judicious collector, who had so much choice before him, would leave the best, and take the worst. Whence it is obvious to guess, what sort of lumber you have left behind, when the wretched ones you have made choice of, are the very best of the bunch. One of your quotations, is taken from an heretic instead of an orthodox father. Your mentioning St Chrysostom, and St Austin have served for no other purpose than to give me a fair occasion to shew how flatly those two fathers are against you: three other fathers are downright falsified. For Origen's words are clipped to conceal their true meaning; and in your quotations from Theodoret and Gelasius you have practised the art both of clipping and coining. Thus, after all your boasting, your quotations turn only to your confusion: and if these be the most select ones of your unanswerable Doctor, it will be no rashness to judge, that the rest of his quotations are either nothing to the purpose, or that he has taken care to cook and dress them with the same exquisite skill, as some of those you have already entertained me with.

SECTION XXVIII.—SOME ANIMADVERSIONS UPON DR
COSIN'S HISTORY OF TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

BUT, to come to a closer examination of that author, I perceive it is his example has encouraged you to that wild and defenceless assertion, viz., that the whole primitive church, and all the fathers are against us. For I find him under the same sort of delirium, p. 159, where he tells us, that transubstantiation is a mere novelty, invented about the middle of the twelfth century, and confirmed by no ecclesiastical or papal decree before the year 1215. This I own is laying the axe to the root, if the Doctor can make good what he says. For, if he can prove, that the doctrine of transubstantiation is a novelty invented about the middle of the twelfth century, he certainly gains his cause: But, instead of that, he has deprived himself of the very possibility of proving it by what he writes, p. 137, which is a flat contradiction to it. His words are these: At last a new form of retractation was imposed on Berengarius, whereby he was henceforth to confess under pain of the Pope's high displeasure, that the mystic bread is substantially turned into the true and proper flesh of Christ.

Here, Sir, if you can bring off your unanswerable author, you will do him a signal piece of service. Berengarius began to broach his new doctrine concerning the Eucharist about three years before the middle of the eleventh century, and one article of his heresy was, that the bread and wine are not changed by consecration into the body and blood of Christ: as appears plainly from the very form of retractation, which he was obliged to make in these remarkable words: I Berengarius with my heart believe, and with my tongue confess, that the bread and wine, which are placed upon the altar, are by the mystery of holy prayer, and the words of our Redeemer substantially changed into the true and proper and life-giving flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. This, Sir, is the retractation Dr Cosin speaks of; and was made in the Roman council under Pope Gregory VII. the 79th year of the eleventh century.

Now, if it be true (as it most certainly is) what the Doctor tells us, p. 137, that Berengarius was obliged to make a public profession of the doctrine of transubstantiation in the eleventh century (in which he lived and died) I desire to know how it can likewise be true, what he tells us, p. 159, that transubstantiation is a novelty invented about the middle of the twelfth! unless a doctrine can be professed about four score years before it is invented: this I think is a sufficient warning to any man not to believe the Doctor upon his bare word.

But, setting aside the grossness of this palpable contradiction, which is no small blemish in an unanswerable piece, the falsehood of his historical account may be demonstrated from unquestionable facts. Transubstantiation (says the Doctor) was invented about the middle of the twelfth century; yet all the learned know, that Beren- garius began to write against it about the year 1047, that is, about a hundred years before the Doctor's epocha.

Nay his new scheme of a mere figurative or symbolical presence no sooner appeared in public, but was opposed by the most learned writers of that age, and condemned the first time in a council held at Rome under Leo IX. anno 1050, and the same year in two councils more, one held at Vercelles, the other at Paris. Five years after it was again condemned in two councils, one held at Florence, the other at Tours. And four years after that in a council at Rome under Nicholas II. in which council Berengarius threw his own writings into the fire; though (as bishop Lanfranc feared) with a bended body, but not an humbled heart, inclinato corpore, sed non humiliato corde. After that it was again condemned in a council at Rouen, anno 1063; in another at Poitiers, anno 1075; and in two others at Rome under Gregory VII., anno 1078 and anno 1097.

Thus was Berengarius's doctrine against transubstantiation condemned by 10 provincial councils during his life; and seven years after his death (which happened anno 1088) it was again condemned in a numerous council at Plaisance, in which the decree is thus expressed, that the bread and wine, when they are consecrated upon the altar, are truly and essentially changed into the body and blood of our Lord, and not in figure only. Tom. 10. Conc. Lab. p. 502.

Now, Sir, these undoubted facts are first an unanswerable proof, that the doctrine of transubstantiation was believed by the church in the middle of the eleventh century; and it could not be then believed, if it was first invented about the middle of the twelfth; that is, about a hundred years after; as the Doctor tells us.

They are likewise an unanswerable proof of the falsehood of what he adds, viz., that it was not confirmed by any ecclesiastical or papal decree before the year 1215. For I take it to be an undoubted truth, that the eleventh century was before the thirteenth. And I think the decrees of eleven provincial councils, at some of which the Pope himself presided in person, may properly be called ecclesiastical and papal decrees. So that the Doctor is most grievously out in both the parts of his story.

G.—My lord, the word transubstantiation never was heard of till the fourth Lateran Council which was held An. 1215. So far therefore Dr Cosin has truth on his side.

L.—But other words equivalent to it were frequently heard of even amongst the ancient fathers, as I have already instanced in some, and shall instance in more immediately. But, Sir, are we disputing about the word transubstantiation, or the doctrine signified by that word? Has Dr Cosin writ his elaborate history only to prove that transubstantiation is a new word? Or was there any need of forty quotations from the fathers to decide this weighty point? Truly, Sir, though I have but a very indifferent opinion of the Doctor's performance, I cannot think him such an errant trifler, as this would make him.

You know as well as I that the thing signified by the word transubstantiation is a change of one substance into another. And in relation to the eucharist it signifies a change of the bread and wine into the body and blood of our Saviour Christ made by the words of consecration. And the question is not, whether the word transubstantiation be old or new, or when it was first made use of to signify that mystery; but whether the mystery signified by it be the ancient faith of the Church. Nay I have so good an opinion of the Doctor's judgment as to presume he means the doctrine itself, and not the word, when he tells us, that transubstantiation is a novelty invented about the middle of the twelfth century, and that it was not confirmed by any ecclesiastical or papal decree before the year 1215.

But, if he slinks away from the true question, and means no more than to trifle about the word, I know not where he will find an adversary, and I am very ready to grant, that as the word consubstantial was first made use of in the great council of Nice to express the divinity of Christ against the Arians, and that as this was not coining a new article of faith, but only a new word to express the ancient faith more clearly; so in like manner the word transubstantiation was first used in the Lateran Council held anno 1215, to express the ancient faith of the Church in relation to the mystery of the holy eucharist.

But what is all this to the Doctor's purpose? Is this a consequence becoming a man of sense and learning, the word transubstantiation was not generally made use of before the year 1215, therefore the doctrine signified by it is a novelty, and was not confirmed by any ecclesiastical or papal decree before that time! If you have nothing better to say in defence of your unanswerable author, it will go hard with him in the judgment of all unbiassed men. For, as to the doctrinal part in question, I have already demonstrated from undeniable facts, that the doctrine of transubstantiation was believed by the Church in the eleventh century, and that by consequence it was not a novelty invented about the middle of the twelfth. From the same unquestionable facts I have demonstrated, that, if the eleventh century was by good computation before the thirteenth, the same doctrine was confirmed by eleven provincial councils; or ecclesiastical decrees before the year 1215. And this is a full and plain confutation of the chief article of the Doctor's history; which was to fix the epocha of the general belief of transubstantiation no higher than the thirteenth century.

But to give you still a more ample demonstration of the Doctor's fruitful invention, and skill in romancing, he tells us, p. 131, that almost all the French, Italians, and English of those times were of Berengarius's opinion. And p. 132, that it was maintained by many famous nations. A man must surely have a very large stock of confidence to assert two facts so notoriously false. For, first, if almost all the French, Italians, and English held Berengarius's doctrine, and if it was maintained by many famous nations, how came it to pass, that in the very age he lived in, there were eleven provincial councils called to condemn it, and not one to approve or defend it either in Italy, France, or England, or any other nation of the known world! Were all the famous nations, the Doctor speaks of, intoxicated with wine, or laid fast asleep with opium, that they could not stand up for the common cause of religion, nor oppose councils against councils to support the sinking credit of their champion, and save him from being run down by numbers! Or must we suppose it to be the common practice of bishops to define a doctrine contrary to their own conscience and belief! Such pretty suppositions as these may indeed relieve the Doctor in some measure: but without their help it is impossible for any man in his right senses to believe, that many famous nations, nay even one single famous nation was for Berengarius, when there are no noted facts to render it credible, and innumerable ones to disprove it.

2dly, If Berengarius asserted the ancient doctrine, and had so many famous nations for him, I ask, whether the Greeks were of the number of these famous nations? For I am sure the western nations were all against him. And if the Greeks were for him, why did they not engage openly in his quarrel? They were at that time so exasperated against the Latins, that they even reproached them with the most trivial things, as shaving their beards, eating hogs'-flesh, and consecrating in unleavened bread; but never accused them of any error relating to the subject in question: which is a demonstrative proof, that the Greeks agreed with the Latins, and were against Berengarius in this mystery.

3dly, The most learned writers of the eleventh age knew nothing of the many famous nations, the Doctor speaks of; and I may modestly presume, they could not be ignorant of the religion professed in any noted nation of Christendom.

Hugh bishop of Langres in France writing to Berengarius, told him, that he scandalized the whole church: universalem ecclesiam scandalizas.

Durandus abbot of Trouarn in Normandy told him he impugned the doctrine of the whole Catholic Church. Quod catholica per orbem universum predicat ecclesia.

Laufranc primate of England, and a man of extraordinary parts, in the beginning of his book against Berengarius tells him he holds an opinion contrary to the whole world. Contra orbem sentire capisti. And Guitmond abbot of Averse told him, he was the author of his sect. It is (says he) notoriously known at this time, that this mad doctrine never was taught before Berengarius began to run mad. L. 3. Notissimum est hoc tempore, priusquam Berengarius insanisset, hujusmodi insanias nunquam fuisse. And in the same book he reproaches him, that not even any poor town or village had received his doctrine: neque enim eis vel una civitula vel villa concessit. And pray, Sir, in what part of the terrestrial globe were then the many famous nations discovered since by your unanswerable Doctor?

SECTION XXIX.—THE ANTIQUITY OF THE DOCTRINE OF TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

BUT, to return to that piece of Doctor Cosin's history, where he tells us, that transubstantiation was first invented about the middle of the twelfth century, I shall now produce some testimonies of fathers, that lived in the fourth: and if these teach the doctrine of transubstantiation as plainly as Bellarmin himself, then the Doctor must stand condemned. I have already fairly proved St Austin and St Chrysostom to be found papists in relation to the article in question. To these I shall for brevity's sake only add four more, two Greek, and two Latin fathers (for I omit a whole cloud more of venerable witnesses) viz., St Cyril of Jerusalem, St Gregory Nyssen, St Ambrose, and St Jerome. Whoever cannot find the doctrine of transubstantiation in these fathers, must have very bad eyes. I say the doctrine; for I am not disposed to trifle about the word.

St Cyril (Catech. Mystag. 4.) writes thus: Jesus Christ (says he) in Cana of Galilee changed water into wine, which has some affinity with blood, by his will only. And can we not believe him, THAT HE CHANGED THE WINE

INTO HIS OWN BLOOD?—Let your soul rejoice in the Lord being persuaded of it as a thing most certain, that the bread, which appears to our eyes, is not bread, though our taste do judge it to be so, but that it is the body of Jesus Christ. And that the wine, which appears to our eyes is not wine, though our sense of taste takes it for wine, but that it is the blood of Jesus Christ. Nothing can be plainer than this.

St Gregory Nyssen in the same century having said, that the immortal body of Christ (as a powerful preservative) is received into our bowels, and then inquired, how this same body, which is distributed to so many thousands of the faithful over all the earth, should be entire in each of these, and in each part, which they receive, and yet not cease to remain entire in itself? He answers, because the visible substance of bread and wine are changed into it. The body of Christ, says he, is deified by his person. And therefore I have reason to believe, that to this day the bread being sanctified by the word of God IS CHANGED INTO THE BODY OF GOD THE SON.—For there the divine person sanctified the body, which had bread for its nourishment, and so was as it were bread. And here in like manner, bread, to use the words of the apostle, is sanctified by the word of God and prayer. Not so, that it is to be changed into the body of Christ by nourishing it; BUT THAT IT IS SUDDENLY CHANGED INTO IT BY THESE WORDS, this is my body; THE NATURE OF THOSE THINGS THAT APPEAR, BEING TRANSELEMENTED INTO IT BY THE POWER OF CONSECRATION. In Orat. Catech. Cap. 37. T. 3. Edit. Par.

This I think is teaching the doctrine of transubstantiation, though the word itself be not made use of.

St Ambrose likewise teaches it so very plainly, that the protestant Centurists made bold to give him a reprimand for it, saying, Ambrose did not write well of transubstantiation. Cent. 4. C. 4. Col. 295. It seems then he wrote of it; and since he lived above 700 years before the middle of the twelfth century, I know not what will become of Doctor Cosin's epocha.

Let us then see how he handles this subject in his book De Initiatis: Perhaps, says he, you may tell me I see another thing.—I must therefore prove, that what you receive, is not that which nature framed, but that, which the benediction has created; and that the benediction has a greater force than nature. Moses held a rod in his hand, he threw it down, and it was made a serpent. Again he took hold of the serpent, and it returned into the nature of a rod—The rivers of Egypt ran with streams of pure water, when presently blood gushed forth out of the fountain. There was no water in the rivers, and again at the prayer of Moses the blood ceased, and the nature of waters returned—.

To those he adds other miracles: viz., that when Moses held up his rod, the sea opened a passage for the Israelites. That Jordan ran back. That Moses brought water out of a rock by striking it; and that Elisha made iron swim upon the water contrary to its nature. Then he goes on thus: We see therefore that grace is stronger than nature. Now, if a man's blessing could change the course of nature, what do we think of the divine consecration itself, in which the very words of our Saviour operate? For the sacrament, which you receive, is made by the words of Christ. And if Elisha's words were able to draw fire from heaven, will not Christ's words BE ABLE TO CHANGE THE SPECIES OF THE ELEMENTS? We read of all creatures in the world, he said and they were made, he commanded, and they were created: Is not then the word of Christ, which could give a being to that which had none, able to CHANGE THOSE THINGS WHICH ARE, INTO WHAT THEY WERE NOT BEFORE? For it is not less TO GIVE NEW NATURES TO THINGS, THAN TO CHANGE THEIR NATURES.

Lastly, St Jerome Epist. ad Heliod. writes thus: God forbid I should speak detractingly of those men [Bishops] who succeeding the apostles in their functions do MAKE THE BODY OF CHRIST with their sacred mouth.

These certainly are authentic witnesses of the public faith of the church in their times, both in regard of their holiness and learning; and because they never were accused by the church of any error against faith; which censure they could not have escaped, had they been guilty of broaching any doctrine contrary to the known faith of the universal church. Whence it is plain, that they taught no other doctrine, than what they had received by a constant tradition from the apostles: for otherwise they would undoubtedly have been publicly censured for introducing novelties into the church.

Even many protestants convinced by these, and other numberless testimonies of the ancient fathers have owned the antiquity of transubstantiation. For besides the Centurists, who blame several fathers by name for teaching it, Adamus Francisci (marg. Theol. p. 256) confesses that transubstantiation entered early into the church. And Antonius de Adamo another protestant writer (Anat. Miss. p. 36) fairly owns, that he has not hitherto been able to know, when this opinion of the real and bodily being of Christ in the sacrament did begin. Which according to St Austin's maxim against the Donatists, is owning in effect, that it had its beginning from Christ, and his apostles.

Hence I may fairly conclude, that Doctor Cosin's calling transubstantiation a novelty invented about the middle of the twelfth century, and your telling me that the primitive church and fathers are all against it, are two assertions wholly void of truth.

St Ignatius bishop of Antioch, in the very first age a disciple of the apostles, and an illustrious martyr, is alone sufficient to disprove both the Doctor, and yourself; and give us certain information of what the primitive church believed and taught concerning the eucharist. For in his genuine epistle to the church of Smyrna he has these remarkable words (quoted also by Theodoret) of the heretics of his time: They do not admit eucharists and oblations, because they do not confess, THAT THE EUCHARIST IS THE FLESH OF OUR SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST, WHICH SUFFERED FOR OUR SINS, AND WHICH THE FATHER RAISED AGAIN BY HIS BOUNTY.

SECTION XXX.—TRANSUBSTANTIATION NOT REPUGNANT TO THE CURRENT PRINCIPLES OF PHILOSOPHY.

G.—My lord, you have repeated many times that the substance of bread and wine are changed into the body and blood of Christ ; but that the accidents of both remain.

L.—Well, Sir, what then ?

“G.—Then I ask, whether you know the difference betwixt “ substance and accident ?”—p. 150.

L.—Sir, when I was a boy, I was taught to answer, that substance is a being which subsists by itself, and that the essence of an accident is not actual inhesion, but a natural exigency to inhere. So that, though by a supernatural power it may exist without any subject, it still retains its essence, because it naturally requires a subject, even when it exists without one.

G.—My lord, this seems to be a philosophical scheme cooked up expressly to make the hard morsel of transubstantiation go down the better.

L.—Sir, I believe the cookery does not please your palate. However it is good sound Aristotelian philosophy. And Aristotle (who lived long enough before transubstantiation was known in the world) could not easily be bribed by papists to come in to their notions. Now he taught expressly, that accidents are really distinguished, and may consequently by a supernatural power be separated from their substance; as we say they are in the sacrament of the holy Eucharist. And so we cannot be said to have made a precarious philosophical scheme in favour of transubstantiation: since we only maintain, that it is not repugnant to current principles held for many hundred years before christianity was established.

G.—My lord, when the substance of bread is gone, how can the figure, and colour, and taste of it remain? “For “ then there will be accidents of nothing. There will be “ roundness, and nothing round; whiteness, and nothing white; “ a taste and nothing tasted; which is ridiculous.”—p. 151.

L.—It is so, Sir, if quantity be nothing. But quantity according to Aristotle's philosophy is a physical accident distinct, and by consequence separable from substance; and it is the immediate subject of the other accidents mentioned by you; which in reality are but so many different modifications of quantity: and therefore cannot be destitute of their proper subject, whether quantity be joined to, or separated from its substance; as it is in the sacrament of the holy eucharist.

G.—My lord, if quantity, and other accidents subsist by “themselves, why are they not substances? For that is “the definition you give of substance.”—pp. 151, 152.

L.—Sir, the reason is, because they do not subsist naturally by themselves, as substance does, but only by a supernatural power.

G.—But if it be by miracle, that they stand by themselves, then by miracle they are substances, and there is an “end of the jargon.”—p. 152.

L.—Sir, I hope there is. For I have already told you, that their essence, according to Aristotle’s philosophy (which I think you have not yet confuted), is not an actual inhesion, but a natural exigency of it, which remains when they are miraculously separated from their substance. And therefore, good Sir, the miracle, by which they are thus separated, does not convert them into substances.

G.—If your lordship be in earnest about this logic of “substance and accidents, will you lay a good wager upon “it?”—p. 153.

L.—Hudibras says, fools for arguments lay wagers.

G.—Yet you have laid all your honour and estate upon “it. But are you so sure of it, that you would take your “oath upon it.”—p. 153.

L.—Whatever you may fancy, Sir, I do not know that I hazard the value of a farthing upon the logical question of substance and accidents.

G.—That is very strange, my lord. Is it not a point of faith with you, that the accidents of bread and wine remain after the consecration?

L.—It is, Sir; if by accidents you mean the signs or appearances of bread and wine. But whether those signs or appearances be true physical accidents, or only modi- fications of the object, or such impressions made upon our outward senses by the body and blood of Christ, as bread and wine, if they had been present, would have made; are mere school questions, upon which I shall never be disposed to hazard either my honour or estate, much less pawn my soul upon the truth or certainty of them; the faith of the church being not the least concerned in them.

G.—But, my lord, did you not just now defend transubstantiation by the philosophical distinction between substance and accidents?

L.—But, Sir, do you make no difference between building faith upon philosophy, and shewing that the one is not repugnant to the other? I believe all mysteries of faith purely upon divine revelation, and not upon their non-repugnance to human reason, which only shews them to be possible. But if a man be such a trifler as to muster up boyish arguments from philosophy against them, am I not a debtor to the wise, and to the unwise, and bound to shew that christianity and philosophy are not irreconcilable? And for this reason I have insisted upon the Aristotelian distinction of accidents and substance: not that the mystery of transubstantiation is built upon that philosophical distinction, or depends upon it, but only to convince you, that it is not repugnant to the current principles of philosophy.

“G.—My lord, this is that philosophy, and vain deceit or fallacy, which the apostle says will spoil or hurt our faith. “Doting upon questions and strifes of words—perverse disputings—and oppositions of science falsely so called, which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Col. “ii. 8; 1 Tim. vi. 4, 5, 21, 22.”—p. 153.

L.—Sir, the apostle censures those, who draw arguments from philosophy to overthrow, or ridicule the sacred mysteries of christian religion. So that you have only provided a scourge for your own back; and, if you will but consider yourself attentively in the looking-glass St Paul has set before you, it will discover to you the weak condition of your cause. I have proved transubstantiation from scriptures, and the unquestionable tra- dition of the church. And what do you oppose against these solid proofs but arguments from human reason, the testimony of our senses, and poor trifles of philosophy, which the apostle justly calls, doting upon questions and strifes of words, perverse disputings, and opposition of science falsely so called? These are the arguments, with which you attack us; and when we have the condescension to take notice of them, and oppose philosophy against philosophy (which indeed is more than you can in rigour oblige us to in controversies of faith), you cry out, that we have nothing but an unintelligible jargon of metaphysics on our side. As if philosophy were intended only to run down christian religion, and it were an abuse to employ any part of it in its service.

ADVERTISEMENT.—N. B. that the gentleman's whole reply to the notorious nonsense, he has made his catholic lord speak in his Case Stated, p. 151, can only be ushered in by the nonsense itself which it confutes. This is the reason, why a great part of pp. 151—153, is here omitted. For though his lordship has now answered every thing, that looks like an objection in those pages; it was impossible to repeat word for word all the gentleman's fine drollery contained in them without making his lordship personate the dunce as effectually as he does in the former conversation. For he is there made to answer, p. 151, that actual inherence, or insticking (to render the farce more ridiculous) is the essence of accidents. And the gentleman taking the advantage of his blunder draws consequences from it, and plays most unmercifully upon him.

If any one has so much idle time to throw away, he may read the forementioned pages in the gentleman's Case Stated. Where he will see how poorly his lordship comes off at last: when weary of being pelted with hard words, and unable to resist the gentleman's powerful logic, he asks quarter, and begs leave to believe as the church believes. To which his triumphant adversary answers in the following manner.

SECTION XXXI.—OF IMPLICIT FAITH.

“ G.—Can you believe what the church believes without knowing what she believes? This is believing nothing.
 “ It is implicit indeed! At this rate you need but one article
 “ of your creed, to believe the holy catholic church. And all
 “ the rest may go off implicitly, though you should know

“ nothing of any other of the articles. And what a man knows nothing of, he can give no reason for. But St Peter bids us be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope (or faith) that is in us. Which supposes our understanding it ourselves, and not an implicit faith in others of we know not what. So that if you make transubstantiation an article of your faith, you are obliged to understand it aright.”—p. 154.

L.—Sir, I think I do understand it aright; for I know that the transubstantiation, which the church believes, is a change of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ made by the words of consecration. And this is as much as I need to know or understand for my belief of it: and neither you, nor the wisest man upon earth knows any more in proportion of the dark mysteries of the blessed trinity, the incarnation, the propagation of original sin, and such other articles of faith, which we both equally believe and profess. Yet I bless God I shall always be ready to give an answer to every man, that asketh me, a reason of my faith, or belief of these mysteries: and the answer I am ready to give is, because God has revealed them; and the church, which is the ground and pillar of truth, teaches them. And whoever is not satisfied with this answer, must bid adieu to christianity.

You say, this is believing with implicit faith. And I say, there is not a christian in the world, let him be as wise and learned as he will, but is bound to believe innumerable things with implicit faith. I presume, Sir, you have not the vanity to pretend to know, much less to understand the whole Bible. Yet I have the charity to think you believe both all the facts and doctrinal truths whether intelligible or unintelligible contained in it. Nay you must either do it, or renounce all revealed religion. And what is this but believing with implicit faith? But suppose any one should have the vanity to think he knows and understands the whole Bible, yet it is certain there are thousands amongst christians, who do not; and are not these bound to believe what they neither know, nor understand of it with an implicit faith? When St Peter said to our Saviour, John vi. 68. Thou hast the words of eternal life: had he not an implicit faith of all the mysteries of christian religion? And is this a thing to be ridiculed?

You say, at this rate we need but one article of our creed, viz., to believe the holy Catholic Church. But I deny your consequence. Because there are several articles, all are bound to believe with an explicit faith. As, the being of a God, the divinity of Christ, &c., and therefore early care is taken to teach children their creed, and explain to them all the articles it contains. But let us hear, what you have still more to say against transubstantiation.

SECTION XXXII.—NO DANGER OF IDOLATRY FROM THE ADORATION OF CHRIST IN THE EUCHARIST.

“G.—But there is something yet more terrible behind. For, if there be no transubstantiation, then you worship bread and wine with latria, by which you mean the supreme worship due to God alone.”—p. 155.

L.—How scrupulous are men sometimes even against their conscience! But pray, Sir, would you be so very much frightened, if an Arian should argue thus against the divinity of Christ? But there is something yet more terrible behind: for if Christ be not God, you are all idolaters. Sir, we have no different classes of revealed truths as to their certainty; all being equally grounded upon God's veracity: and we are as certain of the revelation of Christ's real presence in the eucharist, as of the divinity of his person.

“G.—But, my lord, though transubstantiation were granted, and fully understood, yet it is impossible for any man to know whether he worships plain bread and wine, or the body and blood of Christ; because in the rubric of the mass, de defectibus circa missam, there are several cases put, wherein the consecration is void, and there is no sacrament made, and then there is nothing there but plain bread and wine. One of these cases is, if there be a greater mixture of any other grain than of wheat in the cafer. Another is, if the wine be made of sour grapes or grapes not ripe; si vinum sit ex uvis acerbis vel non maturis; which is pretty hard “ to know for the people, who never taste it, or the wor“ shippers who see or taste neither but only a pixis, or a cup

 “ they look not into: and in both these cases besides others
 “ it is said, non conficitur sacramentum, there is no sacrament “ made. And so it is said, if the intention of the priest be “ wanting, which is impossible to know. Upon which head “ they put a pleasant case; as suppose a priest intends to “ consecrate ten wafers (for example), and after conse“ cration there may be found eleven or more; then none “ of them are consecrated, because the intention going “ only to ten, it cannot be known, which these ten are.
 “ But if there be nine or fewer, they are all consecrated, “ because the intention going to ten, it includes all within “ that number. Besides you take it wholly upon trust, “ whether there be any consecration at all; because your “ priests do not consecrate before the people, when they “ administer the sacrament, but at set times they consecrate “ numbers of wafers together, which they reserve for occasions,
 “ and for daily worship. Again it is said in some cases, dubium “ est an conficiatur sacramentum: that it is doubtful whether “ the sacrament be made or not. And what shall we do in “ this case? Is it a doubt whether we worship God or a “ creature? Or is it indifferent to which we give latria?”
 pp. 155, 156.

L.—Sir, many of your observations are wholly frivolous; but the sum of all is this, viz., that an unconsecrated host may possibly be mistaken for a consecrated one; which is easily granted. And you conclude from it, that they, who adore Christ supposing him by mistake present under that host, are guilty of idolatry, which I deny. For how is it possible a person intending nothing else but to adore Christ, should commit idolatry whether he will or no? Idolatry is a most grievous sin, and every sin is an act of the will freely consenting to it. Because, though a man may sometimes commit a sin even against his inclination out of compliance, or for lucre, it is a mere chimera to sin against one's will. And how then can he commit the sin of idolatry, when his heart and will are wholly intent upon adoring Christ, whom he supposes to be really present.

We read John xii. 21, that several Gentiles came with a desire to see Christ. Now let us suppose, that for want of a guide to direct them, they had prostrated themselves at the feet of some other, would any reasonable man have condemned them as guilty of idolatry? Or suppose St Mary Magdalene, as she took Christ to be the gardener, John ii. 15, had with as much innocence afterwards taken the gardener for Christ, would this have made her an idolater? I presume your excessive zeal would have passed sentence of condemnation upon her. But I can never imagine, that a true and ardent love of Jesus Christ can be the sin of idolatry.

But let us hear, how an eminent protestant writer answers this frivolous objection. I mean Dr Taylor: who in his Liberty of Prophesying, Sect. ii. Numb. 26, writes thus: Idolatry (says he) is forsaking the true God, and giving divine worship to a creature, or to an idol, that is, to an imaginary god. Now it is evident, that the object of their [i. e. the papists] adoration in the blessed sacrament, is the only true and eternal God, hypostatically joined with his humanity; which humanity they believe actually present under the veil of the sacramental signs. And if they thought him not present, they are so far from worshipping the bread in this case, that themselves profess it idolatry to do so. Which is a DEMONSTRATION, that their soul has nothing in it but what is a great enemy to idolatry: and nothing burns in hell, but proper will. Thus Doctor Taylor; who writes like a fair adversary, and a man of sense.

As to the two smart questions, wherewith you conclude, viz.: Is it a doubt whether we worship God or a creature? Or is it indifferent, to which we give latria? I answer it is not. Because our adoration is directed wholly and solely to Jesus Christ; who I presume is neither a pure creature, nor an idol.

G.—But do you not adore the host? And if it be an unconsecrated one, do you not then adore a creature?

L.—Sir, the host implies two things. First, the sacramental signs, and 2dly, the true body and blood of Christ. And therefore, when we are said to adore the host, the meaning is, that we adore Jesus Christ under the veil of the sacramental signs. But our adoration is not directed to the accidents themselves any more than the adoration of Christ clothed upon earth was directed to his clothes. And so there is no danger of idolatry, though the host, which the people present suppose consecrated, should by mistake or malice be an unconsecrated one. Because their act of worship being directed to Christ alone supposed to be corporally present and not to bread, their mistake regards the place alone, and not the object.

ADVERTISEMENT.—His lordship in the gentleman's Case Stated having some difficulty to get rid of the foregoing objection, answers (according to his usual method of mistaking things) that in the supposition of an unconsecrated host, they who adore it are guilty only of material, but not of formal idolatry. To which the gentleman replies in the following manner.

SECTION XXXIII.—OF SCHOOL DISTINCTIONS.

“ G.—These school distinctions are mere cobwebs, and will bear no weight. For material idolatry is idolatry, else it were not material idolatry. And if our intention will solve it, it will solve it also as to the heathens, who directed their worship, and referred it ultimately to the true God, as has been shewn.

“ But I hope you will not make Solomon so stupid, as you have made the heathen, and to think that he believed Ashtoreth the goddess of the Sidonians, and Milchom the abomination of the Ammonites, and the other gods of the nations whom he worshipped, to be every one of them the one only supreme God. Yet he is charged with idolatry, whether material or formal is not the question; nor is there a word of it in the scriptures; for idolatry is idolatry, let it be of what sort it will; and these distinctions are only to excuse it, and let it loose among us.

“ The Arians were charged with idolatry for worshipping Christ supposing him but a creature: and they were so far from disowning the true God, that it was his honour they pretended in denying the divinity of Christ. So of the “ Socinians, and our Unitarians among us, who give them“ selves that name for supporting the unity of the Godhead.

 “ Yet they are charged with idolatry for worshipping Christ
 “ as an inferior God. And they have the same distinction “ as you of latria and dulia, a higher and lower degree of “ worship. But all religious worship is forbidden to any but “ to God alone. These degrees of it are of human invention “ to excuse your breach of the commands of God. But we “ are to keep far from the forbidden thing, not try how near “ we can come to it by distinctions of our own coining. We “ ought to make a hedge about the law, as the phrase of the “ Jews was to guard against any approaches towards the “ breach of it. Or in the apostle’s words, to abstain from all “ appearance of evil. And remember, that you venture your “ soul upon these distinctions. Which then are in the safest “ way, we who follow the direct rule of God’s commandments, “ as they are plainly laid down to us in holy scripture without “ turning to the right hand or to the left, without either adding “ to them, or diminishing from them as we are commanded, “ Deut iv. 32; or you who distinguish the plainest precepts,
 “ and make them speak metaphysics?

“ By which the worship of the devil may be justified: for “ it is plain, that when he offered to our Saviour all the “ kingdoms of the world, he meant not that he was the supreme “ God and sovereign disposer. For he said, that is delivered “ unto me, and to whomsoever I will I give it. Luke iv. 6, 8.
 “ And it is as plain by the answer our Saviour gave him, “ Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him alone thou “ shalt serve, that all sort of religious worship was forbidden to be “ given to any but to God alone. And St Austin makes all
 “ to be devils who require and accept it. Latria and dulia “ signify both the same thing, that is, service; and here all “ religious service is reserved to God alone. The distinctions
 “ of the schools is vain, and meant only to elude the commands
 “ of God, and introduce all superstition.”—pp. 156—158.

L.—Sir, since you are so very sharp upon school distinctions, I shall consider presently, whether you be not many times obliged to have recourse to them as well as we. But in the case we have now before us, to wit, of an unconsecrated host, the distinction between formal and material idolatry is wholly unnecessary. For I deny positively, that in that case a person adoring Christ

(whom he supposes really present under the sacramental veils) commits even material idolatry. Because the direct object of his adoration is not bread or the accidents of it, but Jesus Christ alone: who being neither a pure creature, nor a false god, his adoration of him is no idolatry at all, neither material or formal, but an act of divine worship. Pray remember what Dr Taylor has already told us upon this subject.

However, though the distinction of formal and material be unnecessary, as I have now fully shewed, in the case under debate, what wretched stuff do you entertain me with, when you tell me, that material idolatry is idolatry, else it were not material idolatry. Which is just as wisely said, as if a young logician should argue thus: a dead man is a man, else he were not a dead man. And you add, if our intention will solve it (that is, excuse it from being idolatry) it will also solve it as to the heathens, who directed their worship, and referred it ultimately to the true God. Which is flatly false, though you confidently add, as you have shewed: whereas you should only say, as you have endeavoured and laboured hard to shew to your immortal honour. For you may as easily prove the devil to be a beauty, as that the heathens directed their worship, and referred it ultimately to the true God.

Your instance concerning Solomon is the widest imaginable from the purpose. For though he neither believed Ashteroth, nor Milchom, nor the other heathen idols, whom he worshipped, to be true gods, yet he was certainly guilty not of material, but true and formal idolatry; because his direct intention (though out of compliance to his mistresses) was to offer divine honour to their idols; and his crime was precisely this, that knowing them to be the statues of devils or evil spirits he paid them the supreme worship, which is due to God alone.

As to the Arians, Socinians, and Unitarians mentioned by you, they may likewise be justly charged with idolatry, if believing Christ to be no more than a pure creature, they worship him as God, which I never heard they did; but you say, they come off with the distinction of latria and dulia; then I am sure they do not worship him as God; as I shall prove immediately, by explaining the meaning of that distinction.

But let us now see, whether you can stand your ground against Socinians, Anabapists, and Jews, without the help of school distinctions, which you declaim so bitterly against. Suppose a Socinian should prove his blasphemy against the divinity of Christ from these words of St John xv. 18, My Father is greater than I; how would you answer him?

G.—Very easily, my lord, for I would tell him those words are to be understood not with relation to the divine, but human nature of Christ.

L.—Very right, Sir. But it seems then that school distinctions are not always mere cobwebs, or vain things that will bear no weight, but they are sometimes both useful and necessary to support religion. And pray remember (as you just now exhorted me) that you venture the very foundation of christian religion, and your own soul into the bargain upon your distinction of the forementioned plain words of Christ. For if the distinction be vain, you are guilty of real idolatry in worshipping Christ as God. But if distinctions be good and legal in a protestant's mouth against Socinians, I may modestly say they are equally good and legal in a papist's mouth against protestants.

G.—But, my lord, do we distinguish the commandments?

L.—Sir, to answer this, I have a second question ready for you. Is not this precept, thou shalt not kill, one of the ten commandments?

G.—What then?

L.—Why then, Sir, all those are guilty of a breach of this commandment, who kill their enemies in war. For the commandment is general and absolute; and there is no distinction, or limitation tacked to it.

G.—But, my lord, all the world understands it of killing by private authority.

L.—Then all the world must condemn the malicious nonsense you have talked, and own, that the plainest commandment may be distinguished, and made to speak metaphysics, as you call it.

But I have a third question to ask, is not Saturday, or the seventh day of the week meant by the Sabbath day in holy writ?

G.—Yes, my lord. For God himself says Deut. v. 13, 14: Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. And therefore Saturday is called in Latin, dies Sabati, as it is still the day of worship amongst the Jews.

L.—Well, and is not this precept, thou shalt keep holy the Sabbath day, among the commandments of the Decalogue? Is it not clear and precise as to the very day of the week?

G.—Who doubts it?

L.—And why then do you keep the Sunday instead of Saturday holy?

G.—My lord, the particular day, which we call Saturday, was only commanded with relation to the Jews, but not to christians, who have therefore changed the Saturday into the Sunday.

L.—What! still another distinction even of the very plainest precept, and that without the least foundation in the word of God! Did you not just now tell me, that such distinctions are mere human inventions to excuse our breach of the commands of God? That we are to keep far from the forbidden thing, not try how near we can come to it by distinctions? That finally we ought to make a hedge about the law, or in the apostle's words to abstain from all appearance of evil? Thus you preached to me just now with a great deal of zeal. But pray, Sir, what becomes now of all this fine cant? For either the commandments may be distinguished, or not. If not, how can you defend yourself either against Anabaptists denying the lawfulness of shedding blood according to the fifth commandment, or against the Jews insisting upon the express commandment of keeping the Sabbath, that is, the Saturday, holy? But if they may, is not all you have said against our distinguishing the commandments mere pedantic cavilling and nonsense?

Suppose a Jew should retort upon you, what you just now said to me, viz.: Which then are in the safest way, we who follow the direct rule of God's commandments as they are plainly laid down to us in holy scripture without turning to the right hand or to the left, or you who distinguish the plainest precepts, and make them speak metaphysics? Suppose, I say, a Jew should retort this canting stuff upon you, you must either turn Jew, or make him an answer, which will be a cap to fit your own block, unless you have this pretty salvo to come off with, viz., that a popish distinction of the commandments is meant only to elude them, and introduce all superstition, but that protestants may distinguish them without any such felonious intention: and then we shall have a supernumerary metaphysical distinction, which the schoolmen yet never thought of.

However I perceive the popish distinction of latria and dulia will by no means go down with you. But pray, Sir, what do you call the honour you pay to saints and angels, when you keep holy days in memory of them? For I am apt to think this distinction, as popish as it is, will be here full as serviceable to you against the dissenters, as it is to us against the Church of England. For, give it what name you please, if keeping holy days be any part of christian devotion, all the world besides yourselves will call it a religious honour; because when we honour persons merely for supernatural gifts bestowed upon them by God, then the honour we pay them is in the common language of mankind called religious. And, if the English word, worship, be extendable, as it certainly is, to all sorts of religious honour, then it follows, that besides the supreme religious worship called latria, which is due to God alone, there is likewise an inferior religious worship called dulia, paid to God's saints and angels even by your church. Which plainly shews, how wretchedly you are out in saying that latria and dulia signify both the same thing:

and the consequence of all is, that you are no less out in your main assertion, viz., that all sort of religious worship is forbid to be given to any but to God alone; unless you will acknowledge, that your own church is as guilty of acting contrary to that pretended prohibition, as papists themselves. Nay, it is impossible for you to answer the dissenters but with the help of that very popish distinction, or something equivalent to it, which you have taken so much pains to ridicule.

As to your saying, that St Austin makes all to be devils, who require or accept of any religious honour, I am only sorry you put me again in mind of your sins past: I mean your controversial sin of falsifying; which in a dispute about religion may be counted amongst the deadly ones; and ought therefore to be repented of and retracted, rather than aggravated by an insulting repetition.

But the finest stroke is yet to come, viz., your saying, that by the distinction of supreme and inferior worship, which we call latria and dulia, the worship of the devil may be justified. What, Sir! are you in good earnest, when you talk such extravagant stuff? May the devil be worshipped with an inferior or relative honour as well as the friends and servants of God? This I presume is a piece of divinity, in which you have not yet many followers. However, as you have already one holiday for all the saints in general, and another for St Michael and all the angels; who knows, but that by your interest and zeal the reformation of the Church of England may be so well improved in time, that a day may likewise be set apart for Lucifer and his angels? For since the one may be justified by the other, why should not the devil have his due? I am sure the religious honour you pay to saints and angels in keeping their holidays is justified by the practice of both churches; and if that will justify our giving the same religious honour to the devil, I see no reason why, according to this new system of protestant divinity, he should not have a holiday allowed him.

The papists indeed will be highly scandalized and cry out shame against it; because they make a large difference between the faithful friends and servants of God and his incorrigible mortal enemy the devil. They discover in the former the beautiful supernatural gifts of grace and glory, which entitle them to an inferior religious honour for the sake of him who has bestowed those gifts upon them, and to whom that honour is ultimately referred: but they see nothing in the devil, which can justify their honouring him in the same manner.

It is true, the devil was so true to himself (as you have carefully remarked to do him justice) as not to pretend to be the supreme God and sovereign disposer of all things. But does it follow from thence, that he may be put upon the level with God's most faithful servants, and be honoured by us as they are? For shame, Sir, see your error, and be sensible to what extravagances the prejudice of education will hurry a man, that gives himself blindly up to it.

SECTION XXXIV.—SOME TOUCHES OF THE GENTLEMAN'S
SKILL IN DROLLERY AND SLANDER.

“G.—My lord, besides the cases already mentioned by me, there are some unworthy ones put in the rubrick of the mass; as if a dog or a mouse should eat the sacrament—— if a priest should vomit it up again, in which case he is to lick it up reverently, unless it be nauseous (that was well put in,) and then it is to be disposed of so and so. And again, if a fly should drop into the cup, how the fly is to be dealt with.—And one reason given for taking the cup from the laity was, that the laity (at that time I suppose) wore long beards, and least the blood of Christ should drop upon them or stick to their whiskers. All these are the genuine effects of superstition, occasioned by the notion of transubstantiation.”—p. 159.

L.—Sir, all religion is superstition to those, who have little of it besides the empty name and show. However this pleasant drollery is at least a testimony, that we are convinced in our hearts of what we profess with our tongues: since it appears from it how extremely solicitous we are both to prevent indecencies in the administration of the sacrament, and remedy them the best way possible, when they chance to happen.

But let that be as it will, I shall put a case somewhat like one of the unworthy ones you have mentioned. Your church Catechism teaches, that in the Lord's supper the faithful receive verily and indeed the body and blood of Christ. Now suppose a sudden fit of vomiting should take a faithful protestant in the very moment he receives the sacrament, I ask whether he may not in that case vomit up verily and indeed, what he has just then received verily and indeed? And if this should happen, I desire to know what is to be done? If you can propose any thing more decent than what is prescribed in the rubrick of the mass, I am very confident your advice will not be neglected, unless you be for the licking part, of which there is not a word in the rubrick you refer me to. But this dirty fiction was necessary to furnish some matter for a jest.

However I must here desire you to take notice, that for one scurrilous jest a protestant can make upon transubstantiation, a deist or atheist, disposed to shew his wit that way, shall make a thousand upon the incarnation and death of the Son of God: and, if lamprooning be good arguing, we may soon be laughed out of the very fundamentals of christianity.

“ G.—But here, my lord, I must beg leave to observe, “ that the natural effect of superstition is atheism and deism;
 “ as one extreme runs into another like east to west. For “ men of sense must find out the deceit that is in superstition; “ and then placing all religion on the same foot (as in your “ communion upon the authority of your church) they must “ think the whole to be a deceit, or in the modish word priest- “ craft, and the contrivance of those who gain by it. Whence
 “ it is that the holy scriptures and the legends have the same “ foundation in the Church of Rome, that is, her authority:
 “ therefore the common people believe them both alike, and
 “ the men of sense believe neither. And this does so lead “ towards the general defection foretold, that in a great “ measure it is it. For it destroys the foundation of religion, “ and turns it all to superstition. And when the infidelity, “ which that begets, shall come to be publicly owned, then “ where shall faith be found upon earth? It is now acted in “ the opus operatum : and instead of the two sacraments which “ Christ has appointed as means of grace, the whole face of “ your religion is covered with ten thousand of your own “ invention. The unlimited power taken in your church of “ consecrating every thing into a means of grace, your worship “ of saints (many of them legendary) their relics and images, “ of crosses and of the host, make up the bulk of your religion

 “ and devotions.”—pp. 159, 160.

L.—And, Sir, the bulk of this discourse of yours is made up of slander, and the old thread-bare nonsense of opus operatum, means of grace, sacraments of our own invention, &c. already repeated twenty times, and as often confuted. [Vide Sect. 1, 3, 4, Part II.] Fine stuff indeed for a man of sense!

You say, faith is now acted in the opus operatum. And is not this a pretty handle for atheists to lay hold of to ridicule the sacrament? Will they not say that in the administration of baptism (which I defy you or any man to explain without the doctrine of opus operatum) faith is only acted by priests and parsons as so many mountebanks upon a stage? I know you are not much concerned for the five sacraments, we acknowledge more than you, and which by a true protestant figure, called slander, you have multiplied into ten thousand. But if faith be only acted in the use of these sacraments and the customary benedictions of the church—(of which you also have your share, as I have shewed, sect. III.)—if faith, I say, be only acted in these, will not atheists and deists have a fair handle to reproach us, that we are likewise no better than stage-players in the administration of the two sacraments acknowledged by you, and other public devotions of the church? Will they not have reason to regard all religion as priestcraft, which you say is now the modish word? But pray, Sir, who brought that scandalous expression chiefly into vogue? It was a member of the Church of England, who had so mean an opinion of the religion he was then of, and particularly of the ministers of it, that he scarce ever represented them in his writings but under the most vile and contemptible characters. But when he became a Roman Catholic, for which he lost his pension of poet laureate in king William's reign, he used no such profane language. Nay he employed his pen in defence of the religion he had embraced, and particularly of the mystery you impugn with so much bitterness. Which shews, that though he were acknowledged by all to be a man of excellent sense, he could see nothing of the superstition you lay to our charge; nor find out the deceit or priestcraft you speak of, but in the religion he had abandoned: and he was so far from becoming an atheist or deist by the change, that it purged him effectually of the atheistical principles he had imbibed, and used to maintain and glory in, whilst he was a member of your church.

This leads me to a direct answer to the first part of what you spoke last; where you observe, that the natural effect of superstition is atheism and deism: and out of the abundance of your charity for us, you confidently suppose us to be deeply concerned in that superstition, whereof atheism and deism is, as you tell us, the natural effect.

Here then to make your observation fully answer the charitable end you drive at, you ought to shew, that professed atheists and deists were far more numerous in this nation before, than they have been since the reformation. For, if what you commonly call popish superstition (which is precisely the pretended superstition you speak of) has a natural tendency to atheism and deism, the undeniable consequence must be, that during the many hundred years, wherein that superstition was universally professed and practised in this nation, when it had the law on its side, and the authority of all the tribunals both civil and ecclesiastic to support it, the consequence I say must be, that in those days of popery, atheists and deists must, like Egyptian locusts, have overspread the whole land; whereas it is a noted fact, that those wild beasts never appeared in herds, or bare-faced to destroy the vineyard, till the fences of the church were laid open, and her authority made precarious by the blessed reformation.

Pray, Sir, if the natural effect of what you call popish superstition be atheism or deism, will it not follow, that this effect must appear very remarkably in those of our communion? Shew me then the professed atheists or deists amongst Roman Catholics. Shew me from some history, that there was a sect of deists or free-thinkers in Great Britain before its religion was reformed; and then your observation will be allowed to have at least some sense in it. But if you can shew no such thing; if, on the contrary, it be as well known as any piece of public news, that all the noted atheists, deists, or free-thinkers in Great Britain were either brought up in the protestant communion, or turned protestants to be at full liberty to turn afterwards what they pleased; if it be a certain truth, that the two sects of deists and free-thinkers are of a much later date than the Reformation, and had their grand lesson of private judgment in opposition to church authority taught them in protestant schools; then give me leave to tell you, Sir, that the men of sense, you appeal to, will be so far from judging the religion you traduce to be the source of atheism or deism, that they will certainly judge your observation to be as void of justice, as it is of common sense.

And what then will they think of the scandalous piece that follows, viz: That the holy scriptures and the legends have the same foundation in the Church of Rome, that is, her authority; and that therefore the common people believe them both alike, and our men of sense believe neither? This certainly is a calumny of so black a nature, that protestants themselves cannot but be highly scandalized at it. For as to our common people, there is not a child amongst us that knows his Catechism, but is a living witness against you, and will tell you he has been taught, that the scriptures were writ by divine inspiration, and have divine authority for the truth of every thing they contain: but that their belief of the legends, like that of any profane history, is grounded merely upon human authority: and they are free to believe or disbelieve them according as their own private judgment shall direct them.

But as to what you add, that our men of sense neither believe scriptures nor legends, I am very confident there is not a man of sense or probity in your own church, but will blush for you, and disclaim any part in this gross calumny. So I leave you to account for it at the great tribunal. I shall say nothing to the consequence you draw from it relating to the pretended general defection. For consequences grounded upon barefaced calumny are sufficiently answered by exposing the calumny itself.

SECTION XXXV.—TRANSUBSTANTIATION AS ANCIENT AS CHRISTIANITY.

Now, Sir, to conclude the subject we have been so long upon, I shall propose an argument, which appears to me to be a moral demonstration, that the doctrine of transubstantiation is as ancient as christianity, and never had a beginning but from the apostles themselves. I shall explain myself in the clearest manner I am able; and the first thing I remark to you is, that if the doctrine of transubstantiation be a novelty, it is one of the most extraordinary nature that ever was broached: both because it is not a mere speculative doctrine, but the ground of the most solemn practical devotions of the church; and because it is in itself the most seemingly repugnant to all the senses and reason of mankind.

G.—And what does your lordship infer from thence?

L.—Sir, I infer from it, first, that a novelty, of this nature, could not be brought into the church without noise, disputes, and troubles; and in a word, without the greatest difficulty and opposition imaginable: because people are not wont to part tamely and quietly with their ancient faith; especially when a doctrine the most repugnant in appearance to sense and reason is substituted in place of it. I infer, 2dly, that the exact time, manner, and other circumstances of a novelty of that importance being brought in, and made an article of faith must of necessity be known by all the learned part of the world: Whence I infer, 3dly, that the histories of the time, in which this happened, must all be filled with particular relations of the most memorable events occasioned by this wonderful change in the public faith of the church.

Now I have already proved, with the utmost evidence against Dr Cosin, that the doctrine of transubstantiation was held both by the Greek and Latin church in the eleventh century, when it was first openly writ against by Berengarius, who was immediately opposed by the ablest pens of that time, and condemned by eleven provincial councils in that very age; the last whereof defined in express terms, that the bread and wine, when they are consecrated upon the altar, are truly and essentially changed into the body and blood of our Saviour, and not in figure only. Tom. 10. Conc. Lab. p. 502.

If then the doctrine of transubstantiation be not as ancient as the apostles themselves, but a novelty invented since their time, it must have been introduced into the church in some age between the death of the apostles, and the eleventh century. And unless protestants can prove this fact from the uncontestable evidence of as authentic histories and records, as there are (for example) to prove that England was converted in some age between the death of the apostles and the eleventh century, they labour in vain to persuade any man of sense that the doctrine of transubstantiation is a novelty invented since the time of the apostles.

The reason hereof is manifest, because all changes in religion are constantly attended with such a train of remarkable circumstances and events, as cannot possibly escape the notice of historians; and I can as easily believe the greatest contradiction in nature, as that such changes can really happen without being mentioned in the general histories both of the times, which gave birth to them, and of the kingdoms, which were the principal theatres, on which they were transacted.

Thus we have the history of the Arian, Nestorian, Eutychian, and other less considerable heresies transmitted to us by innumerable hands, which inform us not only of the names, but of the very personal qualities of the chief authors of them: of the very year and place, wherein they were first broached: of the progress they made, the opposition they met with, the disturbances they occasioned, the books that were writ for and against them, the councils that were called to condemn them, and other such particulars, from whence we cannot but form a fixed judgment, first, that the main facts contained in these histories are no fictions; and 2dly, that the doctrines so particularized in every circumstance relating to them have all the marks of being novelties brought into the church since the time of the apostles.

Now if this be so in relation to all heresies or new doctrines, that ever were broached in the church: if none of them could ever escape either being detected by the vigilancy of her pastors, or recorded in the writings of those, whose business it is to instruct posterity in the transactions of past ages: if this, I say, be so, then let any one judge, whether it be possible, that such a change in the public faith of the church as the introducing of transubstantiation must have made (if it were not apostolical doctrine) could be compassed without the same violent struggles, disturbances, and opposition! And then I ask, whether it be possible, that such considerable events could be passed over in silence by the histories of the times, in which they happened? I take this to be as morally impossible, as that the changes of religion in the reign of queen Elizabeth, or the Revolution under king James II. should be wholly omitted by an historian writing the lives of those two persons.

This then is the substance of my argument in short. Transubstantiation was the public faith and doctrine of the church in the eleventh century: therefore, if it was not taught by the apostles themselves, it was introduced in some age between the death of the apostles, and that century. But a novelty of that extraordinary nature, and so repugnant in appearance to all the senses and reason of mankind could not be introduced without noise, disputes, and troubles, and throwing the whole church into disorder and confusion; and such remarkable events cannot but be recorded in the histories of the times, in which they happened; therefore if nothing of this appears in ancient or authentic history, it is a moral demonstration, that they never happened at all: and that by consequence the doctrine of transubstantiation is as ancient as christianity, and derived from the apostles themselves.

Let us suppose the whole christian world agreed now in the belief that the bread and wine remain unchanged in the sacrament, and that this belief had been handed down to us from the very time of the apostles till now. I ask, first, whether it would be possible for any man in this case to introduce the doctrine of transubstantiation without being opposed even by some whole national churches, many universities, and by numberless persons both of the prelatie order and inferior clergy? I ask, 2dly, whether this opposition would not cause great disturbances and troubles, and throw the whole church into the most violent ferment? And I ask, 3dly, whether such a revolution in the public faith of the church, in case it should succeed, could be passed over in silence by all the writers of the age, wherein it happened? I cannot think there is a rational man upon earth, but his reason and conscience will tell him, they are all three morally impossible in the case supposed. And indeed there is no example of it since the very first establishment of christian religion.

I add, that if transubstantiation be not apostolical doctrine, it is a most gross and pernicious heresy: and since it is an uncontestable truth, that it was believed, professed, and maintained by the universal church against Berengarius in the eleventh century, if it be an heresy, it must have been invented in some preceding age, by some particular heresiarch, in some particular town or country; and it must have had a name to distinguish it both from other heresies, and the orthodox faith opposite to it.

Here then to give a solid answer to this argument, you are bound to shew from some authentic ancient history all the following particulars, viz., in what age between the death of the apostles and the eleventh century the doctrine of transubstantiation was first invented. Who was the first author of it. In what town or country it was first professed. (For all new doctrines must have their beginning of place as well as time.) By what name the professors of it were distinguished from other heretics, and what councils were called to condemn it. Because there never was a noted heresy in the world, but was distinguished by some name, and condemned in some council, or by the church diffusive. Finally, you must inform me by what methods it made such a prodigious progress, as to be at length acknowledged, professed, and maintained by the universal church, as I have fully proved it was in the eleventh century.

These are the most important particulars, wherein I demand to be satisfied. For nothing less can suffice to convince any man of sense, that the doctrine of transubstantiation is a novelty invented since the time of the apostles. Neither must you pretend to slur me off with precarious guesses, bare possibilities, or imaginary suppositions of your own fruitful invention; but you must produce authentic history to attest the facts I insist upon, as all men of learning can do to witness every fact of moment relating to any noted heresy, that ever was in the world.

But, if neither you, nor any body else can undertake this task without exposing himself to the laughter of mankind: if there be no ancient history extant, in which there appears a fair account both of the beginning, the author, time, place, and progress of the doctrine in question, with the most remarkable events, that attended it till its full establishment in the eleventh century, when it was the public faith both of the Greek and Latin church: if, I say, nothing of all this can be found in any ancient history or records, then I repeat once more, what I said before, that such a universal silence relating to a thing of that moment is a moral demonstration, that the doctrine of transubstantiation never had any other beginning than from the apostles themselves according to St Austin's rule, which is grounded upon constant experience and common sense, viz., that when any doctrine is found generally received in the visible church in any age whatsoever, whereof there is no certain author or beginning to be found, then it is sure, that such a doctrine came down from Christ and his apostles. L. 4. de Bapt. C. 6. 24., as also Lib. de Unit. Eccl. C. 19.

Give me leave, Sir, to illustrate all this from an example which will set the whole matter in the clearest light. I maintain, that the doctrine opposite to transubstantiation is an heresy. If you ask me how I prove it to be one? I answer that I prove it from a full collection of all such historical facts as I demand of you to prove that transubstantiation is a novelty or heresy. For I will shew the doctrine opposite to it to be a novelty brought into the church many ages after the time of the apostles. I will name the chief author of it, the time when, and the place where he first broached it; the name it was distinguished by, and finally the opposition it met with in the universal church.

It was first publicly maintained about the middle of the eleventh century at Lyons in France. The chief author of it was one Berengarius a canon of that place, and his doctrine was called the Berengarian heresy. He had few followers in those days, and himself retracted it before he died. Yet it alarmed the whole church, and caused very great disturbances. The ablest pens were employed against it, and it was condemned by eleven provincial or national councils before the end of that very century. And all these particulars with many more are transmitted to us by all the ecclesiastical histories of that age.

This I think suffices to convince any man of sense, that the doctrine opposite to transubstantiation was regarded as an heresy by the Catholic Church in the eleventh century, and it follows manifestly from it, that if transubstantiation itself had ever been regarded as an heresy by the Catholic Church in any of the preceding ages, it must have undergone the same fate, found the same opposition, if not greater by reason of its seeming extravagance, caused the same disturbances, excited the zeal of particular persons to write against it, and occasioned the calling of councils to condemn it. But since no ancient ecclesiastical historian, or other writer has ever mentioned any such thing: since neither the person by whom, nor the place where, nor the time when it was first broached in any of those ages, nor finally any opposition made to it by the church in any age between the apostles and the eleventh century was ever recorded in any history, that ever appeared in the world; I say once more that this is a moral demonstration, that the Catholic Church has never regarded transubstantiation as a novelty or heresy, but as a doctrine derived from Christ, and his apostles. For it is wholly inconceivable, that the doctrine opposite to transubstantiation should have been so vigorously opposed by the church, if it were not a novelty; and that transubstantiation itself, if it were a novelty, should never meet with any opposition at all. Now if you please, Sir, you may proceed to some other subject.

SECTION XXXVI.—CONCERNING THE WORSHIP OF THE CROSS, AND IMAGES OF CHRIST.

G.—My lord, not only the host, or body of Christ supposed to be corporally in the sacrament, but the cross of Christ, or any effigies of that cross, and the images of Christ are worshipped in your church with the supreme divine adoration of latria.—p. 160.

L.—Sir, that is false, and being extremely injurious, it is rank calumny: for I defy you to prove from any Catholic divine, that we worship the cross or images of Christ with SUPREME DIVINE ADORATION.

G.—My lord, it is taught by a great saint of your church, whom you call the Angelical Doctor, St Thomas Aquinas, who says [3 Par. Qu. 2, Art 4.] that crux Christi est adoranda adoratione latriæ. And again: crucis effigies in aliqua alia materia—latriæ adoranda est. And in the Roman pontifical it is ordered that in the procession of the emperor and a legate of the Pope, the legate's cross shall be carried on “ the right hand of the emperor’s sword, because latria is due to the cross.”—pp. 161, 162.

L.—Sir, I still insist upon it, that you wrong us; because the words you have quoted, unless they be strained from the known sense of the author, do not amount to what you charge us with, viz., that we worship the cross or images of Christ with SUPREME DIVINE ADORATION, as I shall fully prove, when you make an end of what you have to say upon that subject.

G.—My lord, in the adoration of the cross upon Good Friday (which is the principal part for the office of that day) the cross being veiled is discovered to the people by degrees; first one arm of the cross, then another, and at last the whole cross is unveiled. And at each time the priest says, Ecce lignum crucis, Behold the wood of the cross: and the people answer, Adoremus, Let us worship.—p. 161.

L.—But they do not say, let us worship it with SUPREME DIVINE ADORATION, nor do they intend it; so go on.

G.—And then the priest first, and afterwards the people come upon their knees, and pay their adoration to the cross. And remember that it is the adoration of latria, which they gave to it.—p. 161.

L.—I remember it, Sir, in St Thomas’s sense, which I shall explain presently.

G.—Now for images, the same Aquinas before mentioned tells us the worship we pay them is religionis cultus, a religious worship: and that it is not a different latria which is given to Christ, and to his images. Quod imaginibus Christi exhibetur cultus, non diversificatur ratio latriæ, nec virtus religionis, 2da. 2dæ. Quest. 81. Art. 3. Resp. ad 3. If then there be but one latria, and the same that is paid to Christ and his images, it will justify what James Nuclantus bishop of Clugium writes in his exposition of the Epistle to the Romans, Ch. i., that the faithful ought not only to worship before the image (as some perhaps out of caution speak) but to worship the image itself without any scruple at all; and with the same sort of worship as the prototype, or whom it represents. And if that is to be worshipped with latria, so its image with latria: if with dulia, or hyperdulia, so the image is to be worshipped with the same worship.

L.—Sir, what explains St Thomas, will suffice to explain all the rest, who have only followed his way of speaking. But a man must have a very strong implicit faith, who can believe that so great a man (as all the learned world allows St Thomas Aquinas to have been) was capable of teaching that supreme divine adoration is to be paid to a piece of wood or stone.

G.—My lord, he certainly teaches, that the worship of latria is to be paid to the cross: but the worship of latria is divine worship, therefore he teaches that divine worship is to be paid to the cross. I think this argument is conclusive.

L.—Sir, the worship, which St Thomas calls latria, must according to his true meaning be considered under a double regard: one to God himself, the other to his image. As it regards God himself, it is supreme divine adoration. But as it regards his image, it is no more than an inferior relative honour, which however terminating ultimately in God is for that reason, as he teaches, a religious act of the same kind or species as the act of worship which has God for its immediate object; and therefore he gives it the same name.

I shall explain myself by an easy example. There is but one theological virtue of charity, which is the love of God above all things. Yet by the same virtue we love our neighbour for God's sake. So that the act, or virtue, by which we thus love our neighbour, has a double tendency or respect: one to our neighbour, who is the image of God; the other to God himself, for whose sake we love him. It may therefore be said in St Thomas's way of speaking, that when we love the image of God in our neighbour, the nature or species of the virtue of charity is not different from that, by which we love God above all things.

But would not a man be grossly mistaken, who should argue thus from it, that since there is but one virtue of charity, which is the love of God above all things; therefore, when by that virtue we love our neighbour, it follows, that we love him above all things, and by consequence pay that supreme love to the image of God, which is due to God alone? For would you not readily answer by telling him, that though the virtue of charity, whereby we love our neighbour for God's sake, be of the same kind or species with that, by which we love God above all things, yet since its act or habit has a double tendency, it is an inferior love, as it regards the image of God, and only the supreme divine love of charity, as it regards the prototype? Now Sir, apply but this to St Thomas's notion of latria, and you will be sensible how much you have wronged both him, and the whole body of Roman Catholics by concluding from it, that if there be but one latria, supreme divine adoration is given to the cross, and images of Christ. For you may as well argue thus, that if there be but one theological virtue of charity, the proper object whereof is loved above all things, it follows, that we love our neighbour above all things, that is, above God himself.

Hence it follows, that the whole present question is in reality reduced to this trivial point, viz., whether St Thomas and his followers express themselves properly? Some think they do; others not. But all (excepting our protestant friends, who are glad to catch at any thing to pick a quarrel) agree, that St Thomas means the same as they, who express themselves otherwise: and what assures them of this are his own words in other parts of his writings. Properly (says he) we do not adore the cross, but only Christ, who is crucified. Hæb. ii. Lect. 5. And again: It is idolatry (says he) when the honour due to God is given to images. ad Coll. 3, Lect. 1. When therefore he says that latria is due to the cross, he must of necessity speak of a relative latria, and not of that supreme divine worship, which is due to God alone.

G.—But what does your lordship say concerning your adoration of the cross upon Good Friday?

L.—I say, Sir, that if the word adoration be taken, as it is generally by your church, for supreme divine worship, we adore the cross no more than you adore the altar when you bow to it. But if it be taken, as we really understand it, for an inferior relative honour, nothing but wilful malice can carp at it.

I desire you then to observe (as Mr Thorndike does very well, Epil. p. 3, p. 353) that these words, viz., adoration, worship, honour, respect, or however you translate the Latin word, cultus, are or may be equivocal in spite of our hearts. That is, sometimes they may signify one kind of honour, and sometimes another. Sometimes that which belongs to God, and sometimes that which belongs to creatures. And the cause of this equivocation (says he) is the want of words: vulgar use not having provided words properly to signify conceptions, which came not from common senses. And from this equivocation in the words, adoration, worship, &c., the greatest part of protestant objections against the veneration we pay to saints and images arises; and the whole stress of what you say concerning our worship or adoration of the cross upon Good Friday, is grounded upon it.

You know, Sir, our liturgy is in Latin; and the Latin word ADORO, though commonly used to signify divine worship, yet both in the Latin scripture, and Latin fathers it frequently signifies no more than an inferior honour. Thus St Jerome says, ADORAVI præsepe et incunabula Salvatoris, Apol. 2. contra Rufum, I have worshipped the manger and crib of our Saviour. And Tertullian uses the same word, when he says, ADORO Scripture plenitudinem, Lib. cont. Herm. C. 22, I reverence the fulness of Scriptures. Thus it is likewise said in scripture, surrexit Abraham, et ADORAVIT populum terræ. Gen. xxiii. 7. Which you translate, Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to the people of the land. And again, filiî prophetarum venientes in occursum Elisæi ADORAVERUNT eum. 4 Reg. ii. 15, is translated thus in your Bible: The sons of the prophets came to meet Elisha, and bowed themselves to the ground before him. And (to omit innumerable other passages of the same sort) that of Psalm xeviii. 5, ADORATE scabellum pedum ejus, is likewise thus translated by you, fall down before the footstool of God.

Now these are sufficient instances to shew, that the Latin word ADORO frequently signifies no more than an inferior honour; since it is manifest, that in the passages I have quoted both from scriptures and fathers it can have no other signification. And in effect it signifies no more in our office on Good Friday; and so your objection against it is mere froth, unless you can prove more effectually than you have done hitherto, that even an inferior relative honour is too much to be given to the cross or images of Christ: though the very Jews were commanded to give it to the footstool of God, that is, the ark.

Pray, Sir, when you make a bow, and your women a low curtesy to the venerable name of Jesus, as is appointed by your church, what is the meaning of it? I presume you do not pay that respect either to the sound, or to the syllables or letters of that word; but the ground of the respect and honour you pay to it is the relation it has to the divine Person, who bears that name. And then I should be glad to know what difference there is between your bowing to his name, and our kneeling to the cross, whereon he died! Nay suppose it were a custom both for men and women to kneel down as often as they heard the name of Jesus pronounced, it would be no more than what St Paul encourages us to do when he tells us, that God has given him a name, which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, Phil. ii. 9, 10.

I know that Dr Stillingfleet (of whom you have borrowed all your fine arguments to prove us idolaters) to get rid of this troublesome parallel between the protestant bows or curtesies to the name of Jesus, and our kneeling to the cross answers, that we might as well instance in going to church at the toll of a bell, as in bowing at the name of Jesus: for, as the one only tells us the time when, so the other only puts us in mind of the person whom we are to worship. So that according to this learned protestant Doctor no more reverence is paid to the most holy name of Jesus, when we hear it pronounced, than to a bell, when we hear it toll. Most shameful doctrine! And how different from the text, I have just now quoted from St Paul! I heartily wish the doctor may not have his portion with the heathen Jupiter, for whose honour he was so zealous in this life.

But let that be as it will, unless you can shew a substantial difference between bowing or making low curtesies to the name of Jesus, and kneeling to the cross, you will never avoid being guilty of a manifest incoherency in practising the one, and condemning the other. For kneeling is an action as indifferent in itself as bowing. Both are in proper circumstances made use of to testify our respect either to God or his creatures; and the nature or quality of the respect, we shew by those actions, are chiefly diversified by the intention of the will. So that if bowing to the name of Jesus, be no more than an inferior relative honour, which terminates wholly in Christ himself, kneeling to and kissing the cross are likewise no more. And if this be properly called worshipping the cross, the other is as properly called worshipping the name of Jesus: or call it by what name you please, provided you give the same name to both.

SECTION XXXVII.—SOME TOUCHES OF PROFANE BURLESQUE.

“ G.—My lord, there is another strange latria paid to “ the præputium of Christ, or the fore-skin, that was cut off “ at his circumcision. Your Doctors are at great pains to “ know what is become of it. They might as well ask what “ is become of the parings of his nails. Whither will super- “ stition run? They had it at Antwerp; but the heretics “ took it away. From thence it travelled by many miracles “ to the church of St John Lateran at Rome. And how it “ was thence translated to the church of Cornelius and Cyprian
 “ at Calcata about twenty miles from Rome, I have read at “ large the account in a book in folio intitled de Basilica et “ Patriarchio Lateranensi ad Alex. VII., Pont. Max. Authore “ Cæsare Raspono ejusdem Basilicæ Canonico. Romæ 1656.
 “ p. 364, &c. And of the miraculous difference it shewed, “ when it was touched by virgins and by married women,
 “ see the Devotions of the Roman church, p. 31. Where you “ will find other authors quoted, as Bolandus, Act. Sanct. ad
 “ Jan. 1 de præputio Christi. And Rivet: Apologia pro

“ Sancta Maria Virgini. Lib. 1. C. xvii. Cardonel Tolet: in “ Caput 2. Lucae, Annot. 31. And Salmeron in Evang.
 “ Tom. 3. Tract. 36. And that though it is still at Calcata, “ yet it is carried about at Podium with great veneration “ upon the feast of the ascension. Salmeron in the place “ above quoted tells us out of the Legend of Jacobus de Vora- “ gine, that the blessed Virgin gave this præputium first to “ Mary Magdalene, and that it was brought afterwards by “ an angel to Charles the Great at Aken, and how after it “ came to be laid up in the Lateran; whence these verses “ Circumcisa caro Christi, sandalia sacra, “ Atque umbilici viget hic præcisio chara.

“ Put thus into English:

“ Christ's fore-skin, and blessed sandals are kept here,
 “ And what was cut from off his navel dear.

“ I suppose they meant the cutting of his navel-string. And “ his sandals (though it is not said that he wore any; for he “ is always painted bare-foot) will come in here too for latria, “ for the same reason, which Thomas Aquinas gives for latria
 “ as due to the cross, propter membrorum Christi contactum, “ because it touched the body of Christ. Then all his clothes “ must come in for the same reason, and the nails and spear
 “ that pierced him. And why not the spittle that was thrown “ in his face? For the cross was as much his enemy (as far “ as wood could be) as any of the other, or the spittle itself.
 “ And I know not why the crucifiers should not be admitted “ too, though they touched him with an hostile mind: as “ some have sainted Judas, because he was an instrument in “ our redemption. For there is no stop in superstition more “ than in other arts.”—pp. 162—164.

L.—Sir, buffoonery ought at least to have its bounds, and keep at a respectful distance from every thing belonging to the sacred person of Christ. So far ought we to be from making any thing relating to him the subject of burlesque. What a number of questions as undecent as profane might not an atheist or deist start concerning our Saviour's circumcision and passion. And would you think them worth a serious answer? Now, Sir, the legendary stuff you have rehearsed concerning our Saviour's foreskin is as impertinent as those questions would be, and it is a subject not fit to be jested with.

And therefore when any of our authors write of it, let their relations be as fabulous as you please (for that is beneath my concern) they observe at least a decorum, and speak not of it like jack-puddings in Bartholemy fair, or in the ribaldry style of Merry Andrews to make sport for libertines and atheists.

But as to that indecent piece, for which you quote the Devotions of the Roman Church, I am not surprised at any sort of filth coming from that sink of forgeries and scandals. It is a mere common sewer, into which the author has conveyed all the dirt, he has with infinite labour raked together to throw at us.

However one short answer to all the fine stories that author has told, and those you have now entertained me with, is, that when you find any of them either in the decrees of our councils, or Catechisms, or professions of faith or when we insist upon them as terms of communion, then we are responsible for them, and not otherwise. So that telling old wives' stories, or the indiscreet disputes or fabulous relations of particular persons to ridicule any church, is beneath a grave divine, and betrays not only a dearth of solid arguments, but a mistrust of his cause: since he is forced to have recourse to such vile means to support it.

As to the latria, which you run so much descant upon, I have already sufficiently explained St Thomas's meaning of that word, and how it may be applied to the things you make yourself merry with. But this I assure you, that had I a handkerchief, which had wiped off the spittle from our Saviour's face, or the nails that pierced his sacred hands and feet, I should keep them with a singular veneration, and as a most precious relic in remembrance of him: and so I would the least scrap of his clothes: nor should any profane buffoon ever make me alter my mind. How common a custom is it to keep a lock of a person's hair, whose memory is dear to us, or even a toy that but belonged to him? And, if this practice be grounded upon an inbred impression of nature, and is not thought absurd in common life, why should it be a superstition in religion to have a veneration for things, that have any ways belonged to our divine Redeemer?

The woman, that was troubled with the bloody flux, had a firm faith, that if she could but touch the hem of his garment, she should certainly be cured. Now, if the apostles had been protestants in their principles, they would have upbraided her with superstition. And how much more would St Peter have condemned those, that crowded to come within the reach of his shadow, and St Paul those zealous devotees, that brought their aprons and handkerchiefs to touch his body? But in those early days of christianity men had a religious respect for things, that but touched the body of a faithful servant of Christ. Believe me, Sir, they were not in those days a subject of mirth and laughter: that sort of wit is a fruit of a later growth, and was brought into credit by the blessed reformation. Before which time I find that men were also so stupidly superstitious, as to make a difference between the dead instruments of our Saviour's passion, all which they held in veneration, and his crucifiers, whose cruelty and malice they detested: though your more elevated genius cannot stoop low enough to make these vulgar distinctions between things and things, or between things and persons.

All the world knows what honours antiquity paid to the cross of Christ on account of its being the instrument of our redemption: and with what solemnity St Helen the ancient glory of Britain placed it again upon mount Calvary, after it had distinguished itself from the two crosses found with it under ground by the miraculous cure of a woman afflicted with a grievous distemper: and how being afterwards carried away by Chosroas king of Persia, was fourteen years after again recovered by the emperor Heraclius, who refused to make peace with the Persians, but upon condition, that they should restore the cross, which himself carried on his shoulders with great pomp to the place, where Christ had suffered upon it; and the like honour was in those days paid to the nails, which fastened him to it. But I never heard of any honours paid by the ancient church to his crucifiers. Which shews, they plainly saw a difference, where you pretend to see none, viz., between the dead instruments of our Saviour's passion, and the criminal actors in it. But some ornamental strokes of buffoonery are absolutely necessary to make falsehood go down, and supply the deficiencies of solid reason.

“G.—But, my lord, I must not forget my friends the schoolmen upon the occasion I have spoken of. They dispute, that the fore-skin being of the entireness of the body, it must have been reunited to the body of Christ upon his resurrection, else that the entire body did not arise. Sueraz therefore concludes, that the body of Christ at the resurrection had a foreskin, which is shewed in the church here below. He says, that the foreskin belongs to the entireness of the body nonformaliter sed materialiter, not formally but only materially and so the business is made up. But he adds, that Innocent III., did call in question this foreskin upon earth. It is a question then. And do the people still pay latria to it? How comes this to be suffered in the church? In the church that is infallible!”—pp. 164, 165.

L.—And I ask you, Sir, whether the church's infallibility obliges her to interpose her authority in all the trivial questions, which divines dispute pro and con against one another? You are sometimes very angry at her for pronouncing decisively in matters, where she is sure she has authority to do it; and now you quarrel with her for not doing it in matters, wherein she judges her authority not to be concerned. So that whether full or fasting, you are equally displeased.

All then that the church suffers is, that they who are convinced in their hearts, that there is such or such a relic of our Saviour upon earth, may give it the respect that is due to it; call it by what name you please: which surely cannot be an argument against her infallibility; unless you make this a good consequence, the church acts prudently therefore she is not infallible.

“G.—But, my lord, several parcels of the blood of Christ shed upon the cross are likewise shewed; and Cressy quotes Math. Paris for a signal testimony of it. To this, says Aquinas, whatever belongs to the nature of a human body was wholly in the body of Christ when he rose, as his flesh and bones and his blood, and that entirely without any diminution;

“ otherwise (says he) it had not been a perfect resurrection. And afterwards, that all the blood, which flowed from the body of Christ, rose again in his body. But as for that blood (says he) which is preserved in some churches for relics, it did not flow from Christ's side, but is said to have flowed miraculously from a certain image of Christ, that was pierced. Yet the people pay latria to it grounded wholly upon a legend: and Aquinas gives no further assurance of it, than that it was said. Is this worshipping in faith? What blood was that which came out of an image? Was it Christ's blood? And how was it made so? Was it transubstantiated, or was it blood materially though not formally? Or had it only the colour of blood, the accidents remaining without substance? Vasquez comes pretty near this when he says, that no portion of the blood of Christ did remain on earth under the form of blood, but only under its colour, amissa forma sanguinis, having lost the form of blood.”—pp. 165, 166.

L.—Sir, I am wholly of St Thomas Aquinas's mind, that Christ at his resurrection resumed every thing requisite to the integrity of a human body, as by God's infinite power every man will do at the general resurrection. And I am likewise so far of Vasquez's mind, viz., that there is no blood of Christ upon earth but that, which we receive in the sacrament of the holy eucharist. So that, if the fact be true (for neither you nor I are bound to believe it) that God, to confound the sacrilegious impiety of those, who pierced an image of Christ in derision or hatred of him, manifested his displeasure in the miraculous manner as is commonly related; what appears to me most probable is, that it was real blood indeed, but not the blood of Christ that issued from it: which utterly spoils the jest of all your fine questions. For I find no more necessity either for the distinction of material and formal, for or transubstantiation, or accidents remaining without their substance in the above mentioned miracle, than in the miraculous flowing of water from the rock, when Moses struck it with his rod: because the same power, that produced water out of a rock, can surely produce blood out of an image of wood. And in such a case the same sort of respect is due to the blood produced in that miraculous manner, as to the crucifix from which it flows; because as the one is an image of Christ dying, so is the other of his shedding his blood on the cross.

ADVERTISEMENT.—The gentleman in his Case Stated having a great itching to make a witty jest upon Aristotle's principle of privation; in order to usher it in decently and with connexion, makes his lordship ask this wise question. What is this matter and form, with which they keep such a stir? To which the gentleman answers as follows:—

“G.—They make three constituting principles in every thing. These they call materia, forma, and privatio. That is, the matter, of which any thing is made. The form, which is wholly unknown to us. And the want of that form. For you must know, that we must want a thing before we have it.”—p. 166.

L.—Sir, it is no small oversight in a pretender to logic to tell me, that privation is one of Aristotle's CONSTITUENT principles; which suffices to answer this idle jargon.

“G.—Yet your article of transubstantiation is nothing else, as I hope I have made it plain. And I will shew you another instance, wherein you follow the schoolmen too, and are grossly misled by them: that is, the distinction of concomitancy.”—p. 166.

L.—Sir, you have made it just as plain, that transubstantiation is a mere jargon, as you have made it plain, that the heathen Jupiter is the true supreme God adored by Christians: and as you have made it plain, that our men of sense believe neither scriptures nor legends. Truly Sir, if asserting falsehoods boldly be making things plain, you have done great feats in this conversation. But I must tell you plainly, you are in a bad way at present, unless you succeed better than you have done hitherto, in making it plain that the distinction of concomitancy is a mere jargon. Let us then hear what you have to say for yourself.

“G.—I have before told you of several injuries done to our Lord Christ in adding to his commandments, and making to yourselves means of grace, which he has not instituted.”—p. 166.

L.—And I have before made it plain to a demonstration [Part II. Sections 3. & 33.] that you have even contradicted the practice of your own church, upon both those heads.

SECTION XXXVIII.—OF CONCOMITANCY, AND COMMUNION UNDER ONE KIND.

“ G.—What I am to speak of is now an error on the other hand, that is, of subtracting from his institutions, and the means of grace, which he has appointed. I mean in taking away the cup from the laity in the holy sacrament. Christ instituted the sacrament of his body and blood as an effectual means of grace, calling it the communion of his body and blood. Particularly of the cup it is said, The cup of blessing, which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ, 1 Cor. x. 16. And that we all partake of the cup according to several manuscripts of your own vulgar Latin: Omnes de uno pane, et de uno calici participamus. But that the laity might not think themselves deprived of this so beneficial a means of the greatest grace, the schools have invented a distinction they call concomitancy, which is, that in all flesh there is some blood goes along, or is concomitant with it. “ So that whoever eat the flesh, partake also of the blood.” —p. 167.

L.—Really Sir, I wish you had studied our divinity a little better. What! do we say, that in all flesh there is some blood goes along with it? And is this the meaning of our doctrine of concomitancy? I cannot but pity your real or affected ignorance. But that you may be better instructed for the future, what our divines teach is this, to wit, that neither a living body can be without blood, nor the blood of a living incorruptible body without the body itself. And therefore when the laity receive the living body of Christ, under the form of bread, they must by consequence also receive his sacred blood, which is inseparable from it: and so it is truly called the communion of his body and blood: nor are they by consequence deprived of any part of the sacrament, or of the grace it contains. This Sir, is our meaning of the distinction of concomitancy, which is so far from being a jargon, that it is plain common sense.

You say, of the cup it is particularly said by St Paul, the cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? 1 Cor. x. 16. Who doubts it? And in the same verse it is as particularly said, and the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of our Lord? Now I presume St Paul does not speak of a dead but a living body, which is necessarily composed of flesh and blood. Nor can any man have such a gross imagination as to think the blood is really separated from the body in the cup, or the body from the blood in the host.

We may likewise modestly presume that St Paul was no equivocator, but called things by their own names. And therefore when he said, that the bread and cup being blessed are the communion of the body and blood of Christ, he could not mean that they continued to be plain bread and wine after the consecration. And so his words are a full confutation of this impious error.

ADVERTISEMENT.—Instead of the answer now given, his lordship in the former conversation takes all for current coin, and only asks this modest question; and is not that true? To which the gentleman's reply is so exorbitantly weak, that the reader will be surprised at it. However he must take it for better or for worse. His lordship therefore put this question, And is not that true? The gentleman answers as follows:—

G.—Really, my lord, I know not. But I am sure it is “a nicety. For flesh may be so dried, that no blood shall appear in it; and in a wafer there can be none without “having recourse to a miracle.”—p. 167.

L.—But I hope, dear Sir, there may at least be some in the living body of Christ, which the faithful receive verily and indeed in the Lord's supper. Unless you will say, that they receive a dead body under the form of bread, and dead or inanimate blood under the form of wine: which is both impious and absurd.

G.—I think, my lord, it is making too bold to throw “off the institution of Christ upon such imaginations of our “own, which imply that there was no need of the institution “of the cup. For if it be not necessary now, it was not so “then.”—p. 167.

L.—Sir, it is not only making too bold (for that is too soft a term) but wicked and saecrilegious to throw off the institution of Christ upon any imagination whatsoever. But do we throw off the institution of Christ, because we teach that a living body cannot be without blood, nor the blood of a living person be separated from his body? And that by consequence we receive whole Christ, whether we receive him under one or both kinds?

G.—But does not this make the institution of the cup unnecessary?

L.—No Sir, it does not. Because the eucharist is not only a sacrament, that is, a sign of invisible grace instituted for the nourishment of our souls; but also a sacrifice, which is one of the most essential parts of religion. And for this reason Christ instituted the blessed eucharist under both kinds, that by the mystical separation of his body and blood upon the altar their real separation on the cross might be more perfectly represented, and so be both a standing lively memorial of the death he once suffered, and a perpetual oblation of infinite value for us. But many of the Reformation have effectually robbed the people of this whole sacrifice and all its fruit by denying the real presence of Christ as a victim under the sacramental signs, and had no other way to cover the impiety of this fact than by raising a clamour about the cup, as if without it the people received a mangled and imperfect sacrament: whereas nothing is more false; because by receiving the living body of Christ they are made as much partakers of his sacred blood, as if they received it under both kinds.

“G.—But, my lord, this sacrament was ordained not only “ to express the death of Christ, but also the manner of it: “ that is, by the shedding of his blood according to the bloody “ types of him under the law, as it is said, without shedding of “ blood there is no remission, Heb. ix. 22. It was therefore “ necessary, says the apostle. But whatever blood may be “ concomitant in the flesh, yet there is no shedding of it ex- “ pressed in a wafer.”—p. 168.

L.—Sir, not in a wafer remaining true bread after, as it was before the consecration. But if the bread and wine be by the words of Christ converted into his sacred body and blood (as they most certainly are, unless you can prove Christ to be an equivocator or liar) the separate consecration of them, which belongs to priests alone, is the most lively expression both of his death and the manner of it: that is, by the mystical shedding of his blood. But if neither the bread be by consecration converted into his body, nor the wine into his blood, I should be glad to know, how this shedding of his blood according to the bloody types of him under the law can be expressed by it. And I leave every man to judge, whether he who talks of nothing but the flesh and blood of Christ in the sacrament, and believes nothing conformably to the natural and obvious meaning of his words, be not guilty of damnable hypocrisy and dissimulation?

G.—But, my lord, when the host is carried in procession, “as upon Corpus Christi day, or frequently to the sick, there is no cup, nor does the priest himself communicate. But however if the people are to partake of the sacrifice as it was under the law, here they are defrauded of one half of it.”—p. 168.

L.—But Sir, when the host is carried in procession or to the sick, it either is Christ's body or not. If not, then neither is the cup his blood. And so according to this protestant system your people are downright bubbled; imagining they receive both Christ's body and blood, when in effect they receive neither. But if the host be Christ's real body, I am sure it is not a dead one; nor are they by consequence, who receive it, defrauded of one half either of the sacrament or sacrifice. Pray would the people under the old law have been defrauded of half the sacrifice, in case the whole victim had been given to all, and to every particular person? Now though this be an impossible supposition in reference to the sacrifices of the Mosaic law, it is literally true in reference to the Christian sacrifice. For the whole victim, I mean, the entire body and blood of Christ is given to every christian communicant, in whatever manner he receives it, that is, whether by the action of eating, or drinking. For Christ in his impassible and immortal state cannot be divided, and we either receive whole Christ, or nothing of him. So that whoever receives his sacred body receives his blood: and whoever receives his sacred blood, receives his body: for he neither receives dead flesh, nor dead or inanimate blood. And this is what we call concomitancy. And by consequence it is not only calumny, but rank nonsense to say the people are defrauded of one half of the sacrament.

G.—My lord, the people are as much commanded to “partake of the cup as of the bread. And the church may “as well take away the bread, and leave only the cup, and “say, that the flesh is contained in the blood, as well as the “blood in the flesh. Strange power of the church! What “institution of God can stand at this rate? Suppose the “Jews had neglected to pour out or sprinkle the blood of “the sacrifices as commanded, and said it was sufficient that “it was by concomitancy in the flesh, would this distinction “have served in that case? And why not as well as in “this?”—pp. 168, 169.

L.—Sir, if the Jews had neglected to pour out or sprinkle the blood as commanded, they would have been guilty of a grievous sin in disobeying the express command of God: nor could the pretence of concomitancy have in any manner palliated their disobedience: nay it would have been ridiculous in the highest degree; because it is impossible that the blood of a victim really shed (as it was by the priests of the old law) should at the same time remain in the victim: but it is absolutely necessary that the blood of Christ, which is only shed mystically by the priests of the new law, should remain really united to his body. The consequence whereof is, that the people receiving his living body receive his sacred blood concomitantly: which shews your parity to be entirely void of sense. For it implies two parts equally absurd. First, that as the blood was not by concomitancy in the dead victims of the law, so neither is it by concomitancy in the living body of Christ. And, 2dly, that as the Jewish priests were bound to pour out or sprinkle the blood of the sacrifices, so the priests of the new law are bound to give the cup to the people. And is not this fine stuff?

There are indeed two parities that may be fairly made; for they contain two solid truths. The first is, that as the priests of the old law would have been guilty of a grievous disobedience, if they had neglected to shed the blood of the victim really under pretence of concomitancy in the flesh, so the priests of the new law would incur the like guilt, if in celebrating the mysteries they should by not consecrating the wine separately neglect to shed the blood of Christ mystically under pretence of its concomitancy in the host. The 2d is, that as the obligation of shedding the victim's blood really regarded the Jewish priests only, and not the people in the old law, so the obligation of shedding the blood of Christ mystically regards priests alone, and not the people in the new law. These two parities, I say, are just and fair, but they can render you no manner of service.

You say, the church may as well take away the bread and leave only the cup, and say that the flesh is contained in the blood as well as the blood in the flesh. Most certainly, Sir, the church not only may but does say, that the all-glorious and incorruptible body of Christ is as inseparable from his blood, as his blood is from his body: and she says this because she is convinced, that neither the bread is consecrated into dead flesh, nor the wine into dead or inanimate blood. And therefore, if the church had the same rational motives to give only the cup to the laity as she has to give them only the consecrated bread, she might lawfully do it. And if she did, the people would receive the same body and blood of Christ whole and entire as they now do: nor would there be the least difference in the thing received, but only in the manner of receiving.

But here you cry out, Strange power of the church! What institution of God can stand at this rate! Sir, as long as there are true bishops and priests in the world who derive their ordination from the apostles, the institution of Christ is in no danger of failing. So that your vehement exclamation had been very much to the purpose had it been worded thus: Strange insolence and impiety of a few wretched reformers, who by denying the real presence of Christ's body and blood in the eucharist have done what in them lies to abolish that august and venerable sacrifice, which Christ himself instituted and left by his last will as the most precious legacy he could bestow upon his holy church! For if such wickedness can be justified, we may with reason ask, what institution of God can stand at this rate!

G.—But, my lord, are not the people as much commanded to partake of the cup, as of the bread?

L.—Sir, if by partaking of the cup as well as of the bread you mean, receiving the blood of Christ as well as his body, I answer they are commanded to receive the one as well as the other, and so they do by receiving the sacrament in one kind only. Because the body and blood of Christ are inseparable; nor is it possible to receive the one without receiving the other, both body and blood being contained under either kind.

G.—But if the church can take away one kind from the people, may she not exert her power a step farther and take away both?

L.—No, Sir, she cannot. Because the people are commanded to receive the body and blood of Christ. And this they could not do, if both the one kind and the other were refused them. But as long as they receive the sacrament in either kind, they fully obey the command of Christ in receiving both his body and blood, which is all that is commanded. Nay I defy you to shew any positive precept obliging the laity to receive it in both kinds.

SECTION XXXIX.—LAY COMMUNION IN ONE OR BOTH KINDS IS A POINT OF DISCIPLINE ONLY; AND NEITHER FORBID, NOR COMMANDED BY CHRIST.

“G.—My lord, it is observable that Christ, as foreseeing “this taking away of the cup from many, added the word “all to the drinking of the cup. Drink ye all of it, Matt. “xxvi. 27. And it is said, they drank all of it, Mark xiv. “23, it is not said so of the bread.”—p. 169.

L.—Sir, since you are in your observing mood, give me leave to make my observation too, viz., that Christ, as foreseeing that you and other protestants would start this frivolous objection against the discipline of his holy church, took care that both St Mark and St Luke should furnish her with a solid answer to it. For who were the all St Matthew speaks of? Were they not the same all, as are spoken of by St Mark, saying, and they all drank of it, viz., the apostles, who were the only persons with our Saviour at his last supper. For surely if the apostles alone were the all that drank, they were likewise the same all, that were bid to drink. A strange argument to prove, that the laity are all bound to drink of the cup!

G.—But is it not remarkable, that Christ should in distributing the bread say no more than take and eat; yet in giving the cup should say expressly, drink ye all of it?

L.—Sir, St Luke has insinuated a reason for it, which utterly spoils the force of your observation. For he observes, that Christ himself divided the bread, and gave to each apostle the morsel he was to eat, Luke xxii. 19. So that all were not to eat of the same piece of consecrated bread: but all were to drink of the same consecrated cup; which therefore (according to St Luke's relation) he gave them, and bid them divide it among themselves, ver. 17. And this explains those words of St Matthew, drink ye ALL of it; which was only said to caution them, that they were all to have their share of the cup he gave them: whereas this caution was unnecessary as to the consecrated bread, which he distributed with his own hands.

“G.—But if these two texts, take and eat, and drink ye all of it, regard the apostles alone, you may say of the bread “as of the cup, and take that too from the laity by the same “rule. And you take the cup from the priests, who do not “officiate.”—p. 169.

L.—Sir, it is plain that the word all in this text drink ye all of it, regarded the apostles alone; because they alone were the persons, whom Christ commanded to drink of that consecrated cup, which he handed to them, and bid them divide it among themselves. But the institution itself of the eucharist regarded the whole church; that is, all the faithful; though not all in the same manner. For, as it is a sacrifice, the institution regarded the apostles immediately, and in them all bishops and priests deriving their ordination from them. But as it is a sacrament, the institution regarded the people also, who therefore are bound to receive it for the spiritual nourishment of their souls; but their manner of receiving it, that is, whether by the action of eating or drinking or both, is not determined by the institution itself.

“ G.—But, my lord, Christ said to the people, to the laity, “except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, you shall have no life in you, John vi. 53. And this is “understood by all you of the Church of Rome as spoken “of the sacrament.”—p. 169.

L.—Sir, they who understand this text of the sacrament, do likewise understand all that has a relation to the same subject in the chapter from whence it is quoted: which being supposed, your observation, that Christ spoke those words to the people, will do you no service: because the rest of that chapter was spoke to the people as well as those words.

Now, as Christ said to the people, except you eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, you shall have no life in you, ver. 53. And as it is said, whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, ver. 58. So at the same time he said to the people, If any man eat this BREAD he shall live for ever; and the BREAD that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world, ver. 52. And again, He that eateth me shall live by me, ver. 58. And thirdly, He that eateth this BREAD shall live for ever, ver. 59. In which three texts not a word is said of the cup, or of the action of drinking, but only of eating the bread.

Now to reconcile these with the other two texts, where the cup and drinking are mentioned, it must necessarily be said, that by eating and drinking is only meant the action of RECEIVING the body and blood of Christ, and not precisely the manner of receiving it: and so the precept with respect to the laity regards not the way or manner of receiving, but only the thing received. Nay nothing can be more rational than this interpretation of the forementioned texts: because the only drift of our Saviour's discourse was to convince the disbelieving Capharnaits, that unless their souls were nourished with the real flesh and blood of the Son of Man, they should not have life everlasting; and that they, who were made partakers of his body and blood, should have life everlasting. So that provided the real body and blood of Christ be but received, whether it be by the action of eating, or of drinking only, or by both together, it is manifest, that all worthy communicants, as they receive whole Christ, who is the fountain of grace and eternal life, so they fully satisfy the end of Christ's institution, and perform all that is obligatory in the precept of communion.

ADVERTISEMENT.—Instead of this answer, which delivers the true sense of our Saviour's words in St John, his lordship in the Gentleman's Case Stated contents himself with one of Bellarmin's supernumerary answers; which though defensible, is useless and superfluous. But the gentleman had a mind to be merry; and his lordship was to give him a handle for it; which he does very opportunely in telling him, that Bellarmin says, that in this text, except you eat, &c., and drink, &c., the word and is to be taken for or: wherewith the gentleman diverts himself in the following manner:—

“G.—That is to say, I may understand all the ands in the creed to be ors; and instead of, I believe this and this, I may say, I believe this or this. So that, if I believe any one article it is sufficient, though I believe never another. If you send your servant to market, and bid him bring beef and mutton and pork, and he buys only beef, and says, he understood all your ands for ors. And so if you bid him bring so much meat and so much drink, and he brings only meat for the same reason. Thus we may easily get over all the commands of God, and give the reverse to St James, that he who offends in one point is guilty of all. No, but he who keeps one point, keeps the whole law. This is bantering instead of arguing. And it shews a cause to be very destitute, when so great a man as Bellarmin could content himself with giving such an answer.”—pp. 169, 170.

L.—Sir, I may truly say, this is bantering instead of arguing. Nay I perceive you are seized with such a violent fit of drollery, that you choose to forfeit your judgment rather than lose your jest. For, though I am not disposed to espouse Bellarmin's answer for the best that can be given, I cannot think he deserves the sharp reflections you have made upon him. What, Sir! if the word and may be taken in a disjunctive sense, and understood for or in one text of scripture, does it therefore follow, that it may be so understood in all texts whatsoever, and the whole creed? Can a man of sense be capable of arguing in this wild manner? Ought you not at least to have first proved, that Bellarmin's interpretation of the aforesaid text is wholly groundless and precarious, before you venture to crow over him at that unmerciful rate?

But Sir, I shall instance in a text, wherein the word and must be taken disjunctively, and understood for or. The text I mean are these words of St Peter, Gold and silver I have none, Acts iii. 6. I omit others of the same kind for brevity's sake. But it is plain, that in this text the word and cannot but signify the same as or to make St Peter's words bear this sense, I have neither gold nor silver, which doubtless is the true one. And does it therefore follow, that all the ands in scripture must signify the same as or? Or is there any ground for your merry banter of sending a servant to the market for beef, and mutton, and pork?

G.—But, my lord, what reason had Bellarmin to say, that and signifies the same as or, in the text we have under debate?

L.—Sir, you ought to have examined that before you made yourself so merry with a man of his learning. However to satisfy you he grounded himself upon our Saviour's own words in the very chapter, whence the text in question is taken, and where Christ promises eternal life no less than thrice to those, that shall eat the bread, which himself explains to be his flesh, ver. 15, without so much as mentioning the cup, or the external action of drinking. Whence Bellarmin justly concludes, that if this precept, except ye eat the flesh and drink the blood, &c., regards the external forms of eating and drinking, they must be understood disjunctively to reconcile them with the other three texts.

This, Sir, suffices to shew, that Bellarmin's answer is not so absurd, as you have represented it in your merry mood. And I should make no difficulty to prefer this answer, were I not convinced, that by eating and drinking, is meant no more than RECEIVING both the body and blood of Christ into our stomachs. For, as this fully answers the end of Christ's institution, so is it an entire fulfilling of the precept of communion; which regards not the manner of receiving, but the things received: because they are the things received that give eternal life, and not the formality or outward actions, with which we receive them. This common sense alone suffices to convince us of, and the doctrine of concomitancy is a sequel of it.

G.—My lord, the doctrine of concomitancy will not do here. For, if I eat a piece of flesh, suppose some blood may be said to be concomitant there, yet I cannot be said to drink, where there is not a drop.”—p. 170.

L.—What Sir! is there not a drop of blood in the real, living, and incorruptible body of Christ? Or do we eat pieces cut from it, as we do butchers' meat? Strange wilful ignorance!

G.—My lord, the threatening is, except ye drink, there is no life in you.”—p. 170.

L.—Yet Christ tells us, at the same time, that he that eateth this bread shall live for ever. Which is a demonstration, that by eating and drinking is effectually meant RECEIVING both his body and blood: though his blood be not conveyed into the stomach by that material action, which in receiving ordinary liquids is called drinking.

G.—If it be but a man's testament (says St Paul) yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto, Gal. iii. 15. This holy sacrament was the last testament, which Christ left to his church, instituted the evening before he entered upon his sacred passion. Therefore Pope Gelasius (apud Gratianum) had good reason to call it sacrilege in any, who should mutilate this sacrament, and commanded that they, who would not drink the cup, should be denied the bread too.”—pp. 170, 171.

L.—Sir, not only Pope Gelasius, but all the Popes that ever were in the world have judged it sacrilege to mutilate the sacrament. But will you know the true reason, why Pope Gelasius commanded certain persons to receive both the consecrated bread and wine?

G.—I never heard a tolerable reason for taking the cup from the laity, except because they were the laity. But the dispute is not about the reasons for it, but the thing itself. To take away the cup is to mutilate the sacrament: And this is sacrilege by Gelasius's determination.”—p. 171.

L.—Sir, I tell you once more, that to mutilate the sacrament is sacrilege in the judgment not of Pope Gelasius only, but of all catholics in the world. But where will you find it determined by Pope Gelasius, that lay communion in one kind is mutilating the sacrament? This trivial circumstance you have wholly overlooked?

G.—My lord, I have referred you to his decree in Gratian.

L.—Who is of no authority amongst us. But if you will needs refer me to that decree, you must be content to take the gloss along with it, which will set the matter in its true light. There were certain priests (says the gloss) who duly consecrated the body and blood of Christ, and received the host, but abstained from the cup: which Gelasius being surpris'd at said, he could not imagine through what superstition they did so: and commanded them, that they should either receive both as they consecrated both, or abstain both from consecrating and receiving. Because it is sacrilege in a priest offering sacrifice to receive one without the other. And pray what reference has this to lay communion, or the point in question?

SECTION XL.—THE DECREES OF THE COUNCILS OF CONSTANCE AND TRENT CONCERNING COMMUNION IN ONE KIND ARE NOT CONTRARY TO CHRIST'S INSTITUTION, NOR THE FAITH OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

“ G.—The Testament of our Lord, which was confirmed by the practice of the church for fourteen hundred years, was mutilated by the Council of Constance, and the cup taken from the laity with a non-obstante as well to the institution of Christ, as the practice of the primitive church. It was declared no sacrilege, and the priest was excommunicated, who should communicate the laity under both kinds.

“ The Council of Trent likewise puts in its caveat to the institution in both kinds, and (that notwithstanding) the laity must be excluded from the cup: and they make it a heresy to say that whole Christ is not under each species. Then the flesh is as much in the blood, as the blood in the flesh, and it is all one, which species we take. But since the body and blood of Christ were separated at his death, and

“ he ordained them to be so separated in the sacrament of it, “ I see not how we can take away either part upon the “ account of their being not separated.”—pp. 171, 172.

L.—Sir, I shall consider your last words first; which have something in them very extraordinary. For though you have said many unwarrantable things, nothing can be more surprising than what you tell now, viz., that since the body and blood of Christ were separated at his death, and he ordained them to be so separated in the sacrament of it, you see not how we can take away either part upon the account of their being not separated.

What Sir! Has Christ ordained his body and blood to be so separated in the sacrament, as they were at his death! If so, then as they were really separated at his death, so are they really and truly (not mystically only, as we say) separated in the sacrament. And since a real separation of blood from the body destroys the life of it, it follows that Christ, though impassible and immortal, has ordained himself to be destroyed as really in the sacrament, as he suffered death upon the cross. So that according to this doctrine we receive a dead corps in the consecrated host, and dead or inanimate blood in the consecrated wine.

This, Sir, is the monstrous assertion you are driven to, at least in appearance, by denying our doctrine of concomitancy. I say in appearance; because I cannot think you so mad as to mean it in earnest; though you express it plainly in words. For reflecting with myself that in our present dispute I must not understand your words according to their usual signification, I easily perceive you have a loophole to creep out at; viz., that when you mention the body of Christ in the sacrament you mean nothing but a morsel of bread: and when you mention the blood of Christ, and repeat it over and over again, and seem highly concerned at our laity's being deprived of it, you mean no more than a sup of wine: and to be sure there is no absurdity in maintaining, that the bread and wine are as really separated in the sacrament, as Christ's body and blood were at his death.

This I presume is your salvo to come off with. But the remedy is as bad as the disease. For can any thing betray a greater insincerity, than to speak of the sacrament as papists do, and call it the body and blood of Christ twenty times over, and yet mean nothing either of what they mean, or what the words import of themselves? Does it not shew, that in a point of the greatest consequence you dare not speak out, or call things by their proper names? And what can be the reason of this dissimulation, but a just fear lest the people who are not only taught in their Catechisms, that the body and blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received in the Lord's supper, but are accustomed to hear his body and blood continually spoken of in their communions, should become sensible of the cheat that is put upon them, if you should tell them in plain words that there is nothing but bread and wine in the sacrament? For, unless this be your belief and real meaning; that is, unless you mean bread, when you say body; and wine, when you say blood; you cannot avoid being guilty of the gross absurdity I have charged you with when you say, that Christ ordained his body and blood to be so separated in the sacrament, as they were at his death.

For this reason the Council of Trent defined it to be heresy (they might have called it blasphemy) to say that whole Christ is not received under each kind: which you object as an absurdity; as you likewise do what follows from it; viz., that then the body of Christ is as much joined with his blood, as the blood with his body. But if these be absurdities, then it follows, that they who believe that the body and blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received in the Lord's supper, must believe that they receive one half of Christ under one kind, and the other half under the other kind.

Whence I conclude, that you cannot avoid one of these three things: either you must own, that you do not believe the body and blood of Christ to be verily and indeed taken and received in the Lord's supper; and then you both contradict your church which teaches that doctrine, and your own plain words so often repeated in this dispute, calling it the body and blood of Christ in the sacrament, and arguing from it against our taking the cup from the laity: or you must maintain, that one half of Christ is received under one kind, and the other half under the other kind or species, which is most impiously and superlatively absurd: or you must be content to take up with the jargon of concomitancy as you call it, and confess fairly that the body and blood of Christ being inseparable in this his glorious and immortal state, the one cannot be without the other. The first makes you both a rank Calvinist and professed equivocator, the second a madman, and the third a papist: choose which you please.

G.—But, my lord, what do you say to the councils of Constance and Trent taking away the cup with a non-obstante both to the institution of Christ, and the practice of the primitive church? This I think was a bold attempt, and wholly unjustifiable.

L.—Sir, they who can see no difference between instituting both kinds, and commanding both kinds to be received by all, must be wilfully blind. Christ instituted and administered the sacrament at supper; but we are not commanded to take the sacrament at supper, though it be expressly called the Lord's supper. The whole question then is reduced to this point, viz., whether all be commanded to receive the sacrament in both kinds? And whether the councils of Constance and Trent took away the cup with a non-obstante to the command of Christ? Which we flatly deny as a thing unjustifiable and impious in itself: though protestants do what they can to persuade the people that this is the true meaning of the council's non-obstante: which in effect is representing that council to have been no better than an assembly either of atheists or madmen. For who but atheists or madmen are capable of making a decree like this? viz., notwithstanding that Christ has commanded all men to receive the sacrament in both kinds, it shall be given in one kind only to the people. Surely a man must renounce his reason to judge, that an assembly of christian bishops and pastors in their senses should combine together to make such a mad and impious decree in the face of the whole world.

The true meaning therefore of the council is, that though Christ instituted or consecrated both kinds, that both might be offered in sacrifice, yet there being no command that obliges all, to receive both kinds, the council ordered for just reasons that the sacrament should be administered to the laity in one kind only: as the same council ordered, that though Christ had instituted and administered the sacrament at supper, all should be obliged to receive it fasting (persons dangerously sick alone excepted) and your church dispenses with that circumstance of the institution no less than ours.

Now, Sir, as to the practice of the primitive church (which by an hyperbole of a very large size you have extended to fourteen hundred years) no man doubts, but that public communions in both kinds were practised by the primitive church: though the common practice of them was forborne long before the council of Constance, which only made that discipline obligatory, which it found established before in most places by custom. As appears from the preface to its decree, Sess. 14., whereby it was rendered every where uniform.

But let that be as it will, if our dispute is to be decided by the practice of the primitive church, you certainly lose your cause. I go upon two principles, which no protestant will deny: 1st, that the commands of Christ cannot be reversed or violated upon any pretence whatever. And 2d, that administering half a sacrament is a sacrilege, which no necessity can excuse. From these two principles I infer, that it was the undoubted judgment of the primitive church, that administering the sacrament in one or both kinds is a matter of discipline only; whence it follows, that the council of Constance could legally forbid lay communion in both kinds, though the contrary was practised in the primitive church.

G.—But, my lord, how can we know the judgment of the church but from her practice? If therefore lay-communion in both kinds was generally practised, as you own it was, in the primitive church, must we not conclude she judged the practice of it necessary?

L.—Sir, you may conclude she judged it lawful, which nobody denies. But the question is, whether she did not judge communion in one kind as lawful as in both? The question is, whether it was her judgment, that there is a positive command of Christ, which obliges all to receive the sacrament in both kinds, and that it is mutilated when it is received in one kind only? Finally the question is, whether it was not the judgment of the primitive church, that to receive in one or both kinds is a thing indifferent in itself? If so, then she could not judge both kinds necessary.

Now here you have her judgment positively against you, if that may be certainly known by her practice. For it appears from undoubted facts, that in the primitive ages the sacrament was received sometimes in both kinds, sometimes in one. I need not prove the former, and the latter is manifest from three undeniable instances: for I omit several others for brevity's sake.

1. In the communion of infants, who were allowed to drink of the cup without receiving the consecrated host. Cyp. L. de Lapsis, 2. In domestic communions: the faithful being permitted by reason of the persecutions to carry consecrated hosts, but not the consecrated wine to their own house for private communions. Tertul. L. 2. ad Uxorem. Cap. 5, and Cyp. Lib. de Lapsis, 3, in the manner frequently used of administering the sacrament to the sick. Eus. L. 6. Hist. C. 44, p. 246. St Ambrose himself received it in that manner when he was upon the point of death, as is recorded in the history of his life.

From these undeniable instances of communions in one kind practised in the primitive church I infer it was her judgment, 1st, That communion in one kind is not forbid by Christ, whose laws cannot be violated upon any pretence whatsoever; 2d, That the sacrament is not mutilated by it; for then it would be sacrilege to receive it in one kind, which the primitive church would not have suffered; 3d, That neither the testament of Christ is violated, nor the faithful deprived of any part of our Saviour's legacy; both which are impieties, which the primitive church would have abhorred. Whence I conclude again, that receiving in one or both kinds was regarded by the primi- tive church as a point of discipline only ; which therefore the church has full authority to change at any time for just reasons.

Now, if you desire to know the reasons, that induced the church to forbid the cup to the laity, you may find them in the Catechism ad Parochos de Euch. Sacram. Sect. 70. But the chief was to prevent even casual and involuntary profanations by spilling any drops of the consecrated wine : which was almost unavoidable in a great crowd of communicants.

“ G.—My lord, I leave it to yourself, whether the reasons in that Catechism be not childish ; or are of weight to maim “ the institution of Christ.”—p. 172.

L.—Sir, your groundless clamour about our maiming the institution of Christ deserves that compliment much better, as I have sufficiently shewed. But the reasons given by the Catechism can only appear childish to those, who either believe not a word of the body and blood of Christ being received verily and indeed in the sacrament ; or though they do believe it, have consciences of so large a size, as not to be much concerned about profanations.

One of the reasons given by the Catechism for taking away the cup is, because some constitutions can neither endure the smell nor taste of wine. This I presume you take to be a very childish one. But the French protestants did not think it so. For in their Synod at Poitiers, An. 1560, they decreed [Ch. 13, Art. 7. of the Lord's supper] that the bread of our Lord's supper ought to be administered to those, who cannot drink wine. This I think is a good protestant testimony, that receiving the communion in one kind is neither sacrilege, nor mangling the sacrament, nor a violation of any divine precept. For if it were, no necessity could excuse it ; and they who could not receive both kinds, would be obliged to receive neither the one nor the other.

“ G.—It is certain, my lord, there must be no comparison “ made betwixt the body and blood of Christ as to preference, “ or which is most valuable. But our redemption is oftener “ attributed in holy scripture to his blood than to his body. “ We are saved by the blood—propitiation through his blood “ —by the sprinkling of his blood—&c.”—pp. 172, 173.

L.—Here again, Sir, who will not imagine you believe as firmly as any papist in the world, that the body and blood of Christ are really and truly present in the sacrament? For we must either suppose this to be your belief, or that you are the greatest dissembler imaginable of your faith. Either therefore you believe the body and blood of Christ to be present in the sacrament, or you do not. If not, all you say now is rank dissimulation and hypocrisy; since you both speak of it and argue from it as if you did. But if you do believe it, you must renounce common sense to say we can receive the living body of Christ without receiving his blood: and if his living body cannot be received without his blood (as surely it cannot) what can be more impertinently quoted than the abovesaid three texts, even though they had a reference to the eucharist? Whereas they are manifestly spoken of the blood of Christ as shed upon the cross for our redemption. But his attributing life everlasting, that is, the whole fruit of the sacrament to eating alone, John vi. 58, comes, I think, somewhat closer up to the purpose.

SECTION XLI.—SOME SOPHISTICAL REMARKS UPON THE 6TH OF ST JOHN ANSWERED.

“G.—My lord, we take not this as spoke of the sacrament, “but of faith in Christ here expressed by eating; that is “spiritually, as himself explains it, ver. 63, it is the spirit that “quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I “speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.”—p. 173.

L.—Sir, I have fully explained the true meaning of this text in our dispute concerning transubstantiation (Sect. 25.) so if you have any thing more to say, I am ready to give you full satisfaction.

“G.—But let us now suppose, those words, if any man “eat this bread he shall live for ever. And, the bread I will “give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.
“Let us, I say, suppose them to be understood of the sacra- “ment as you do, you will find the blood joined with the “flesh in the next words, ver. 54, except you eat the flesh of
“the Son of man, and drink his blood—as before quoted.
“And again, ver. 55, Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my

“blood— and ver. 56. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed, and ver. 52, he that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood. Is not the blood here named with the flesh? But if it were not, there are a hundred places, as I now observed, where the blood of Christ is named as cleansing, as redeeming us, &c., without any mention of his flesh or body. Are they therefore excluded? This is such a sort of reasoning, as if I invite you to eat with me you must have no drink to your dinner, because it is not named.”—pp. 173, 174.

L.—Pray, Sir, what catholic divine in the world ever said, that when the flesh or body of Christ is mentioned alone in holy scripture, his blood is excluded? Or that it is not necessary to receive his blood as well as body? On the contrary we maintain expressly, that Christ’s body and blood are wholly inseparable; whence we conclude, that his body cannot possibly be received without his blood, nor his blood without his body; and that, by consequence, whole Christ is always received whether by a communion in one or both kinds: so far are we from excluding the necessity or obligation of receiving his blood. So pray, Sir, leave off beating the air, and fighting against your own shadow.

As to your pleasant parity of inviting me to eat with you, and giving me no drink to my dinner, if you do not expressly name it; I assure you, Sir, I shall take it very ill to be so used: unless you can contrive matters so, that eating alone shall be equivalent both to eating and drinking; which is the case in the Lord’s supper; where our spiritual meat and drink, that is, the body and blood of Christ are inseparable, as I have fully proved. So that whoever eats his body, by the same action receives his sacred blood into his stomach. And so I hope that when I come to eat with you, you will not refuse me drink by way of argumentation.

“G.—But, my lord, if by eating we commonly mean the whole meal, and drinking is likewise included, the criticism upon the Lord’s Supper will appear what it is, and not be thought sufficient to exclude the cup in the sacrament, and you have no other foundation in scripture.”—p. 174.

L.—Sir, I grant that by eating is commonly meant the whole meal, and that drinking is likewise included if we speak of ordinary meals, because in these the action of eating or drinking alone cannot convey both meat and drink into our stomachs. But the case is quite otherwise in the Lord's supper; where, as I told you just now, our spiritual meat and drink, that is, the body and blood of Christ being inseparable are conveyed into our stomachs either by the action of eating or drinking alone. And this is no criticism, but a solid truth; unless you will maintain this impious absurdity, that we receive one half of Christ by eating and the other half by drinking.

This therefore suffices to justify communion in one kind. Because whoever receives the whole body and blood of Christ cannot surely be said to be defrauded of any part of the spiritual meal, he has ordained for us.

But since you tell me, we have no other foundation in scripture, but what I have insisted upon from the 6th chapter of St John (though that might suffice), I think St Paul has laid a very solid foundation both of our doctrine and discipline in the two following texts: First, that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more, Rom. vi. 9; and 2dly, that whosoever shall eat this bread, or drink this cup unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of our Lord, 1 Cor. xi. 27. Whence (besides a clear innuendo, that the primitive christians did sometimes either only eat the bread, or only drink the cup) it follows plainly, that as either eating or drinking unworthily suffices to render us guilty both of the body and blood of our Lord, so either eating or drinking worthily suffices to render us partakers both of his body and blood.

I know your translators have boldly falsified this text of St Paul by changing OR into AND, to avoid the force of this argument: and there is not a learned man amongst you but knows it. Yet it stands to this day uncorrected in your Bibles. So tender is your church of the purity of God's words.

“ G.—But, my lord, if I once call it eating the Lord's Supper, and several times call it both eating and drinking, “ will not the latter explain the former? Or will eating “ exclude drinking, though drinking be expressly named?

“ To eat the Lord's supper is the only phrase we use, I never heard any body call it drinking the Lord's supper. And you may thence prove that we have not the cup in our sacrament as well as that the apostles had it not; because it is said, they eat bread, and broke bread. But I have overlaboured this point, because you lay so much stress upon it.”—p. 174.

L.—You have indeed overlaboured it, and shewed yourself a most skilful puzzle-cause in darkening and perplexing the clearest truth. You ask, if it be once called eating the Lord's supper, and several times both eating and drinking, whether the latter does not explain the former? I answer the latter does so far explain the former as to render it manifest, that no man eats the Lord's supper, unless he receives both his body and blood into his stomach. But since I have demonstrated that this is done either by eating or drinking only, a man must renounce common sense to pretend, that the external form both of eating and drinking is necessary.

You ask again, whether eating does exclude drinking, though drinking be expressly named? I answer it does not; if by drinking be meant, receiving the blood of Christ. Because his body and blood being inseparable, we cannot eat his body without receiving his blood. But if you mean no more than the external form of drinking, it is neither excluded by the texts which mention eating alone, nor commanded by the texts which mention them both. But our Saviour's attributing the whole virtue and efficacy of the sacrament sometimes to eating alone, other times to eating and drinking joined together, shews very plainly that it is not the external form, or manner of receiving under one or both kinds, but the thing received, which bestows grace and life everlasting on the worthy receiver.

Finally, you tell me, you never call it otherwise than eating the Lord's supper, and that I may prove thence that you have not the cup in the sacrament as well as that the apostles had it not, because it is said, they eat bread, and broke bread. But pray Sir, when did I prove from those words, that the apostles had not the cup? I never said any such thing, and so you ought not to charge me with it. I have indeed drawn an argument from the 6th chapter of St John, where our Saviour attributes the whole virtue of the sacrament to eating alone, as well as to eating and drinking. But can I therefore pretend to prove, that you have not the cup in the sacrament, because you call it eating the Lord's supper? No, Sir, I am not disposed to trifle thus with words; because I know your meaning both from your principles and constant practice: whereas I find the very reverse of those principles in the word of God. I find St Paul telling the Romans, that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more, Rom. vi. 9; the consequence whereof is, that his body and blood are now inseparable; and this is the very foundation of the doctrine of concomitancy. Whence it follows, that communion in one kind cannot be a mangled sacrament, as you pretend. I find the same apostle telling the Corinthians, that whosoever shall eat the bread, or drink the cup unworthily, shall be guilty of the body AND blood of our Lord, 1 Cor. xi. 27. Now, if either eating or drinking unworthily suffices to render us guilty both of the body and blood of our Lord, it is manifest that either eating or drinking worthily suffices to render us partakers both of his body and blood. From these two principles clearly delivered in holy writ, we may legally infer, that our Saviour's often attributing the whole virtue and efficacy of the sacrament to eating alone is a solid proof, that when he mentions both eating and drinking it is not meant as a precept to oblige all to receive the sacrament in both kinds, but only to receive his body and blood, which is done by a communion in one kind as well as both; as I have fully demonstrated to any man, who believes the body and blood of Christ to be really and truly present in the sacrament.

But who are the persons appointed by Christ to be the interpreters of his sacred word? He that heareth you (says Christ) heareth me, and he that despiseth you, despiseth me, Luke x. 16. Again, who are the persons commissioned by him to feed and govern his flock, and prescribe the proper methods of administering the sacraments? St Paul resolves the question in these few words: Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ, and the stewards of the mysteries of God, 1 Cor. iv. 1. From which two texts it is plain, that the bishops and pastors of the church, who are the successors of the apostles, and to whom Christ has promised his perpetual assistance, are the only persons authorized by him to interpret the word of God, and regulate the manner of dispensing the sacred mysteries to the people. And was it not then a most insolent madness (for St Austin speaking of a parallel case gives it no softer name) in a few private persons to pretend to understand Scriptures better than all the bishops and pastors of God's church had done for fifteen ages together, and prescribe laws for the administration of sacraments in opposition to all ecclesiastical authority upon earth?

If there were any positive command obliging all to receive both kinds, is it probable the universal church could have been so blind as not to see it? And if they saw it, what motive could her bishops and pastors have to combine together in a resolution to commit a damnable sin by forbidding what Christ had commanded, when there was neither honour, interest, nor pleasure, nor any visible human motive to induce them to it? It is certain therefore that when they took the cup from the laity, that is, when they made that a law, which had been the general practice long before, they were convinced in their hearts of two things: First, That the people were not injured by it, and 2dly, that there was no command, that obliged them to receive it. And if neither they, nor the great lights of the primitive church could ever discover any such command, it looks like a chimera rather than a probability, that a set of obscure factious persons without mission or authority from any lawful superior should be more intelligent and clear-sighted in divine matters than they, and see things wholly unseen before. Truly, Sir, if bedlam should set up for a school of learning, children for masters to their teachers, and the blind for guides to their leaders, the thing would be as little surprising in itself as the presumption and arrogance of any set of men pretending to be wiser than the universal church. This alone suffices to stop the mouth of any pretended reformer, who is not lost to all sense of modesty, as Luther certainly was, when he made this declaration, that if a council should either appoint or permit communion in both kinds he would in spite of that council either receive it in one kind or in neither. Hist. de Variat. C. 2. Sect. 10. This was speaking like a true reformer. But enough of this: so I desire you to proceed to some other matter.

SECTION XLII.—OF CELIBACY, OR THE SINGLE LIFE OF PRIESTS.

G.—I shall now shew you another restriction, your church has made upon the institutions of God. As she has taken the cup from the laity, so she has taken another of your sacraments, that is, marriage from the clergy.”—p. 174.

L.—I perceive, Sir, you are now going to fight pro aris et focis. And methinks I see a formidable army, of all the bishops' and parsons' wives and children in Great Britain drawn up in battle against me. But I comfort myself, that I have St Paul of my side, who never begot children (for ought I ever heard of) but in Jesus Christ through the gospel, 1 Cor. iv. 15. Nay I have the practice of the whole college of apostles for me. I mean not the apostles of the Reformation, but the apostles of Jesus Christ, if St Jerome may be believed, who tell us, Epist. 50, that they were either unmarried, or had no commerce with their wives: meaning, after they were called to the ministry of the gospel.

But least I should be guilty of giving any disquiet to that part of the fair sex, who think themselves married to true bishops and priests, I assure them they may continue with a safe conscience to live with their husbands. at least they need to have no scruple about it, till their husbands can prove the validity of their ordination as fully as we can prove that persons validly ordained cannot marry according to the ancient laws of the church.

G.—I perceive then your lordship does us the favour to think, our married bishops and parsons live not in a state of adultery.

L.—Sir, I should wrong them very much, if I thought they did. For I see no manner of reason why protestant bishops and parsons may not marry as well as the protestant laity. So that whatever I say concerning the celibacy or single life of bishops and priests is no reflection upon your church as now established, but only a vindication of my own. And I think I may modestly say I plead the more honourable cause of the two. For virginity is commendable even in laymen. The ancient fathers have writ whole volumes in commendation of it, and St Paul recommends it preferably to marriage, 1 Cor. vii. 32, 33, 38. Nay he advises even married persons to abstain from the conjugal duty for a time, that they may give themselves (says he) to prayer, 1 Cor. vii. 5. Upon which words St Jerome writes thus against Jovinian, Lib. 1. C. 19. If a layman (says he) cannot pray without abstaining sometimes from the conjugal duty, a priest who must always offer sacrifice, must always pray: and if he must always pray, he must always be unmarried.

This Jovinian (whom St Jerome styles the christian epicure) was the Martin Luther of his time in openly opposing the lawfulness of religious vows, and the celibacy of priests: and, if the world had then been ripe for a godly reformation, he would have saved Luther some part of his trouble. But the church was then too popishly affected to suffer him to prevail. For he no sooner appeared upon the stage but was excommunicated, and his heresy condemned first by a council at Rome under Pope Siricius, St Ambr. Epist. 6.; and afterwards by a council at Milan, Epist. 7.; and by the writings of St Ambrose, St Jerome, and St Austin, who exhorted as many as they could, both men and women, to consecrate themselves to God by religious vows, though Jovinian urged the same texts of scripture against it as are now commonly made use of by protestants. But because he seduced some ignorant virgins by saying, are you better than Abraham, Sarah, &c., St Austin bid them answer, I am not better than Abraham, but the chastity of a single life is better than the chastity of marriage. Lib. de bono Conjug. C. 28. How different was the spirit of those eminent lights of the church from that of our late reformers!

Now St Paul's recommending a single life as the perfecter state even to laymen, was doubtless the principal motive that induced the church to prohibit the marriage of priests. For, as their priestly character obliges them to a greater perfection than that of laymen, it is but reasonable they should embrace the perfecter state. And since the duties of the married state are looked upon by the same apostle as a hindrance to prayer, they whose office it is to assist at the altar, and pray not only for themselves but the people also, seem to be called and destined by God to no other marriage than that of the Lamb. Nothing certainly appears more congruous in itself than that a person, whose functions are wholly spiritual, and whose time ought to be divided between the duties of study and prayer and the care of souls, should be free from the concern of wife and children, and not embarked in all the solicitudes of this life like worldly persons.

This then is the first rule, on which I ground my justification of the church's discipline relating to the celibacy of priests: viz., because a single life is of itself a more perfect state, and more becoming the clergy than the conjugal state.

The second rule is, that though many married persons were in the primitive ages admitted or rather compelled to holy orders in consideration of their extraordinary merits, yet none were allowed to marry after their ordination. The council of Nice affords us a proof of this truth. For that council intending to make a decree to separate even such bishops, priests, and deacons from their wives as had been married before their ordination, was indeed dissuaded from it by St Paphnucius: yet it decreed that such as came unmarried into the clergy, should always remain single according to the ancient tradition of the church, Socrates Lib. 1. Hist. 8, illud satis esse, ut qui in clerum ante adscripti erant quam duxissent uxores, hi secundum veterem ecclesiæ traditionem deinceps a nuptiis abstinerent.

It is plain then that according to the ancient discipline of the church none were allowed to marry after their admission to holy orders even in the Eastern church, and as to the discipline of the Western church St Jerome writes thus: bishops, priests, and deacons are either chosen virgins or widowers; or at least abstain after priesthood from the use of marriage as long as they live. Epist. 50.

This then is the second rule I go by, viz., that according to the ancient discipline of the church, none were permitted to marry after they were once engaged in holy orders.

The third rule is, that all vows freely made to God are binding. This none but atheists can deny, because God himself has declared it. When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it—that which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform, Deut. xxiii. 21, 23. And St Paul says of widows consecrated to God, that when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry, having damnation because they have cast off their first faith, 1 Tim. v. 11, 12.

The fourth and last rule is, that the single life of bishops and priests is a matter of ecclesiastical government or discipline only. Whence I infer first, that the church had always full authority to make it a law; especially in regard of those who freely offer themselves to holy orders. For, if they be not disposed to perform the conditions upon which they are received, they ought not to engage themselves. I infer 2dly, that though the primitive church had made no such law, the church might lawfully have done it in after ages, at least in reference to such, as were not already engaged. Because the church of Christ has always the same authority; nor is there any reason why she should lose any part of it by time or age. Now Sir, you may put what objections you please.

SECTION XLIII.—OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

“ G.—My lord, I pass by the politic views and advantages
 “ the court of Rome has in this, as giving the pope the more “ absolute command, and making him in effect heir of all the “ great possessions of the clergy. For the canon law obliges “ the regular bishops not to dispose of their estates, and the “ other clergy not to be too liberal of their alms in their “ sickness. And what they leave the pope disposes of as “ grand treasurer of the church.”—pp. 173, 174.

L.—Sir, I never heard the Pope was heir to the hereditary estates either of bishops or priests. And as to their benefices or ecclesiastical revenues, they pass of course to the next incumbents; and they may dispose of their ready cash as they judge fitting during their lives, without being accountable for it to any but God alone. So that it is beyond my comprehension how the celibacy of bishops and priests should make the pope in effect heir of all the great possessions of the clergy, as you are pleased to tell me.

“G.—My lord, I am content to waive this argument, and will only insist upon what relates to conscience.”—p. 175.

L.—Very well, Sir.

“G.—You reckon it a defilement in your church for a clergyman to marry. No great compliment to the married state, which yet was instituted by God in Paradise, whilst man was in his innocence.”—p. 175.

L.—Sir, we reckon it a defilement in a priest to be false to a solemn engagement made to God; and so does St Paul reckon it one even in the laity, 1 Tim. v. 11, 12. And I hope all true christians are of the same mind. Nor do I think a man is bound by any institution, though made in the state of innocence, to commit a sacrilege out of a compliment to the married state.

“G.—The apostle says, marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled, Heb. xiii. 4.”—p. 175.

L.—But sacrilege is not honourable in any; nor is a sacrilegious bed undefiled, though coloured over with the name of marriage. The incestuous marriage of the Corinthian whom St Paul delivered up to Satan, 1 Cor. v. 5, was not very honourable. Nor the marriage of widows who began to wax wanton against Christ. And Luther's marriage with a nun was just as honourable as any of these. Lastly, though marriage be honourable according to St Paul, the state of celibacy is still more honourable according to the same apostle; and the more honourable state is surely best becoming the honourable character of bishops and priests; otherwise St Paul would not have made choice of it for himself.

“G.—But forbidding to marry is reckoned one of the doctrines of the devil, 1 Tim. iv. 3.”—p. 175.

L.—Forbidding to marry as a thing unlawful in itself (as the Manichees and Marcionites did) is the doctrine of devils. But forbidding particular persons (who have voluntarily consecrated themselves to God) to marry, is not the doctrine of devils but the doctrine of St Paul, in the very next chapter where he tells widows consecrated to God, that if they marry they gain damnation to themselves. Besides I never heard the devil was the author of forbidding marriages within the prohibited degrees; in which your church is as much concerned as ours.

“G.—My lord, directions are given by St Paul how a bishop should govern his wife and children; for if a man knows not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the house of God? 1 Tim. iii. 5. Yet your interpreters would have this wife and this house to be the church.”—p. 175.

L.—Sir, St Paul's words are clear enough to be their own interpreters. For they can mean nothing else than that a person, who suffers or countenances disorders in his own private family, is not fit to govern the church of Christ.

However, though in the chapter you have quoted I find directions both how a bishop is to govern his children and deacons their wives, yet I do not find the directions you speak of, viz., how a bishop should govern his wife: which seems to be an insinuation that the bishops then chosen, though they were actually married, lived separated from their wives.

It is true St Paul tells us in the 2d verse of the same chapter, that a bishop must be the husband of one wife; the meaning whereof cannot surely be that St Paul obliged bishops to be married; for then he was bound to follow his own rule; but that no man was fit to be a bishop who had been married oftener than once. And the reason which induced the apostle to prescribe that rule in the choice of deacons as well as bishops was, because though in his time virginity was so rare both amongst Jews and Gentiles, that if neither married men nor widowers had been promoted to holy orders, the church would have been destitute of necessary pastors, yet even then he would not have those taken to the altar who had been married twice; because they appeared to have stronger ties to the earth, than were suitable to so holy an employment.

G.—My lord, St Peter was a married man and forsook “not his wife after he was an apostle, but led her about with “him as other apostles did, 1 Cor. ix. 5.”—p. 175.

L.—Sir, this description of the apostles trailing about their wives and conversing with them as such, appears to me so dishonourable to their sacred character and unsuitable to their apostolic functions, that I wonder how any sober thinking man can give in to it. Did not St Peter say to Christ, behold we have forsaken all and followed thee? Matt. xix. 27. And were not their wives a part of the all they had forsaken?

G.—But does not St Paul say expressly, have we not power to lead about a sister a wife as well as the other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord and Cephas, 1 Cor. ix. 5.

L.—Sir, the English protestant Bible says so, but not St Paul, who declaring himself to be unmarried chapter vii. 8, could not pretend to lead about a wife, chapter the 9th. Neither did St Peter nor the other apostles lead their wives about, since St Jerome, Epist. 50, declares positively, that the apostles who were married lived separated from their wives. And writing against Jovinian who quoted that very text of St Paul, tells him it ought to be translated, have we not power to lead about a sister a woman? &c., meaning some ancient matron or diaconissa as attended St Peter and other apostles in their travels, and provided necessaries for them either out of their own subsistence or the alms of the faithful. Nay I perceive your own church begins to have some diffidence of their translation. For in the late edition of the Bible in two large folios at Oxford; though wife be kept in the text, woman is put in the margin. Which is at least one step towards an acknowledgment of the truth; and I pray God to improve it.

G.—My lord, that in the primitive church the clergy did “marry is plain from Socrates, Hist. Eccles. L. I. C. 11., and “L. 5. C. 22.”—p. 175.

L.—Sir, it is plain not only from Socrates but all ecclesiastical historians, that many of the primitive bishops and priests were married men. But it is no less plain from Socrates, as I have shewed before, that the Council of Nice made a decree to prohibit any bishop or priest to marry after his ordination.

“G.—My lord, the vows of single life were not imposed upon the clergy till pope Hildebrand. See Matt. Westm. ad An. 1074, Vincent. Spec. Hist. L. 24. C. 45. Antoninus L. 16. C. 1. § 21. And it was without precedent (says Sigibert, Chron. ad An. 1074), and, as many thought, out of an indiscreet zeal, contrary to the opinion of the holy fathers. But Hildebrand was not obeyed in this in England for above a hundred years after. For our ancient records say (Hist. Petroburgh. An. 1127, apud Spelman) all these decrees availed nothing. For the priests by the king’s consent had still their wives as formerly.”—p. 176.

L.—Sir, it is not at all material, whether pope Hildebrand was or was not the first that imposed vows of a single life upon the clergy. For such a vow could only enforce the obligation they were already under by the ancient canons of the church, which had never been repealed; and so it obliged them to nothing, but what they were obliged to before. Just as if a vow to keep the fast of Lent were now imposed upon Roman catholics, no man could legally infer from it, that it was therefore a new thing, or a duty they were not strictly obliged to comply with independently of such a vow. All therefore we can gather from that fact and the other related by Spelman (if it be literally true, which may be questioned), all, I say, we can gather from it is, that in the 11th and 12th century great irregularities were practised by many of the inferior clergy, who kept their concubines, and called them wives, but were no more so, than Kate Boren was the lawful wife of Martin Luther. And to shew they were regarded by the church no otherwise than as concubines, besides many other synodal decrees against them in other places, there was a general synod held at London by the pope’s legate in the very year mentioned by Spelman, in which several canons were made for the reformation and celibacy of the clergy, says Mr Echard in his History of England, L. 2. C. 1. p. 174. But the same author adds, that they were not much regarded (as the very laws of God are but little regarded by libertines) till some few years after, anno 1129, the king, desirous to settle the celibacy of the clergy in a synod called on purpose, through the weakness of the archbishop (as Matthew Paris expresses it) obtained power to have the sole execution of this law himself; but instead of restraining the pretended abuse, he punished them in their purses, and receiving sums from a great many of them he permitted them to enjoy their wives as formerly.

Now this relation of Mr Echard gives a very different turn to the whole matter from that of Spelman. For what he calls the king's consent, is here fairly represented as a bare connivance, into which the king was bribed by large sums of money: and the severe laws made by the two synods, Mr Echard speaks of, against those of the clergy who kept concubines though they called them wives, is a proof, that the bishops assembled in those synods regarded it as a sinful abuse, which stood highly in need of a reformation: and in effect they who practised it were always branded with the infamous name of concubinarians, which is but a softer word for what we call in plain English, whoremasters.

“G.—My lord, Gregory the Great said, that it was lawful for such of the clergy, as could not contain, to marry. (Resp. ad Interrog. 2m. Aug. Cant.) and Pius II. said the same, that they may be allowed to marry. Platina.”—p. 176.

L.—Sir, I must here accuse you of very foul dealing in both these quotations. As to pope Gregory, you have falsified him by stifling that part of his words, which fully explain his meaning. They are these: If there be any of the clergy, who are not in holy orders, and cannot contain, they ought to marry. Now there are great numbers in our clergy, who are neither priests, deacons, nor subdeacons, but only in lesser orders; who therefore are free to return to the world and marry. And so St Gregory's words instead of allowing the marriage either of priests, deacons, nor subdeacons, who are all in holy orders, imply a prohibition of it according to this maxim, exceptio confirmat legem: because it would be mere trifling to limit a law that is not in force.

As to the words of Pius II. (for which you quote Platina in his life) they seem to import no less, than that pope Pius being consulted as head of the church, whether priests that could not contain might marry, had answered ex cathedra, that they might: whereas I can find no such thing. It is true, Platina at the end of that pope's life entertains his reader with many pleasant sayings used by him in common conversation, amongst which this is one: That there was great reason for the prohibiting of priests to marry, but greater for allowing it again, p. 401, printed London, anno 1688. Now if the same pope in a pleasant mood had said, that there was great reason for prohibiting the plurality of wives, but greater for allowing it again, it would have been full as good an argument for polygamy, as his other saying is for the marriage of priests.

SECTION XLIV.—OTHER OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

“G.—My lord, your great canonist, Panormitan, says, “there is a great reason to allow priests to marry now as ever there was to restrain it. Let St Bernard bear witness in his time what reason there was for allowing it, he says, “there are many who cannot be hid for their multitude, nor do seek to be concealed for their impudence, who being restrained from the nuptial remedies, run into all filthiness. Bern. de conv. ad Cler. C. 29. And another says, that few in those days were free from fornication: Glos. ad Gratian. Dist. 82. C. 5. And Matthew Paris tells, that the pope thought it almost a miracle that a candidate for a bishopric was said to be a pure virgin. Whence the gloss ad Gratian, in the place just before quoted, calls fornication but a venial sin; and it is tolerated, if not allowed, ibid. Dist. 34, C. 7. “However it was reckoned a less sin in a priest than marriage. “For this reason deadly sin is added to fornication in our litany.”—pp. 176, 177.

L.—Sir, as to Matthew Paris's tale of what a certain pope thought, and Gratian's saying, that few were free from fornication; I wonder you can lay a stress upon such trifling stuff. But suppose the thought of the one, and the saying of the other deserved a serious regard, all that can be gathered from them, as likewise from the words of Pauormitan and St Bernard is, that in the time they speak of, there was a great looseness and corruption amongst the clergy. But does it suffice to make a law unreasonable, because there are many transgressors against it? If so, I fear the decalogue will be thought unreasonable too, since millions transgress daily against its sacred laws. I own however there are inconveniences either in allowing or prohibiting the marriage of priests. But of two evils the lesser is to be chosen. And when our church is convinced, that it is a lesser evil to allow them to marry, I doubt not but she will change her discipline in this as she has sometimes done in other things.

But your representing it to be the doctrine of our church, that fornication is but a venial sin, nay that it is tolerated, if not allowed by us, is rank calumny. For though there were such a ridiculous gloss upon Gratian, a writer of no authority amongst us (which however I cannot find, though I have read over both the distinctions you refer me to), it will not excuse your slanderous suggestion, that it is the doctrine of our church. Nay I am sure you know this to be a calumny as well as myself. Or if you pretend ignorance, pray examine our Catechisms, or books of instruction upon the sixth commandment, and shew me one if you can, that calls fornication a venial sin, or says, it is tolerated, if not allowed.

As to what you add, that fornication is reckoned by our church a less sin in a priest than marriage, you utterly mistake the question in supposing, that our priests may be truly and validly married, which we deny. For it is our doctrine, that when a priest pretends to marry, he only makes marriage a cloak to cover habitual sacrilege and adultery; which doubtless is more grievous, than a sin casually committed with a single person.

This is the express doctrine of St Chrysostom, who writes thus to one Theodore, a fallen monk, that had married: Marriage (says he) is a just and lawful thing,

I grant it——but now it is not a thing in your power. For being once joined to your heavenly spouse, to leave him and fall into the embraces of a wife, is adultery. Give it a thousand times if you please the name of marriage, I say it is as much worse than adultery, as God is better and greater than womankind, ad Theod. lapsum.

G.—But why was celibacy enjoined to priests? And why is marriage a greater sin than fornication? Because the first is a breach of the command of the church, and the latter of the command of God. And the difference of the punishment of these in your church shews that she thinks so. For a priest committing fornication comes off for small penance, whereas if he marries, he is degraded. May we not then say to the Church of Rome, as Christ to the church of the Jews in a parallel case, full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. Mark vii. 9.”—p. 177.

L.—Sir, you may say to the Church of Rome whatever you please. For who can debar either you or any body else the privilege of talking impertinently? But when you speak of the small penance imposed for the sin of fornication, you either mean private or public fornication. If private only, I should be glad to know, how you come to be informed of what passes in the sacred tribunal betwixt our penitents and their confessors. For I never heard of any confessions in our church cried about the streets, as they are on every execution day in London. But if you speak of fornication publicly known, I assure you Sir, the party concerned passes some part of his days very uncomfortably: and the small penance you speak of is usually a good long confinement, where he is sometimes regaled with bread and water; which I believe would not please a protestant stomach.

But you ask, why marriage is a greater sin than fornication? Sir, true marriage is no sin at all, nor by consequence a breach of God's command. But in a priest it is no more true marriage, than it would be in a layman to marry a second wife, his former being yet alive. Your reason then why marriage in a priest is a greater sin than fornication is not only false but malicious. For in a priest they are both against the church, and both against

God. But with this difference, that the one may be the effect of a passing weakness; and the other cannot but be the effect of an obstinate and premeditated lust; which doubtless is more heinous in the sight of God.

G.—But, my lord, if marriage be such a defilement, as is “unworthy of a priest, how came you to make a sacrament of it? I suppose you cannot mean less by a sacrament than a means of grace. You have made many less things so, as I shewed before. And would you deprive the clergy of any means of grace? Or is it your modesty to put them upon the level with the laity for depriving them of the cup in the sacrament of Christ’s own institution?”—p. 177.

L.—Sir, I shall answer you very briefly to every point. First, you ask, if marriage be such a defilement as is unworthy of a priest, how we came to make it a sacrament? Sir, Christ made it a sacrament not we. Nor is true marriage a defilement; but the single life is perfecter, and more becoming a priest. 2. You say, you suppose we cannot mean less by a sacrament than a means of grace. That is very true: but you add, we have made many less things so, as you have shewed; both which are false, as I have shewed. 3. You ask, whether we would deprive the clergy of any means of grace? I answer, the unmarried clergy stand no more in need of the grace annexed to the sacrament of marriage, than the married laity stand in need of the grace annexed to the sacrament of ordination. Lastly you ask, whether it be our modesty to put the clergy upon the level with the laity for depriving them of the cup in the sacrament of Christ’s own institution? I answer, the laity are deprived of no part of the grace or efficacy of the sacrament of Christ’s body and blood: and so your question is impertinent.

G.—Marriage is honourable and undefiled in all, says the apostle. No, say you, it is neither in a priest.”—p. 178.

L.—And you say the very same of all such, as are within the prohibited degrees. Answer it if you can without limiting the meaning of St Paul’s words.

G.—He says, if men cannot contain let them marry, for it is better to marry than burn, 1 Cor. vii. 9. No, say you, it is better to burn than to marry. And this you must say, unless you suppose that all the many thousands of “ your clergy, and many of them young men, are every one “ of them endowed with the gift of continency, which would “ be a miracle, if experience did not contradict it.”—p. 178.

L.—Sir, I do not pretend that in such numbers all are endowed with the gift of continency : yet I am sure all may be, and doubt not but the greatest part are with the help of God’s grace. However I hope you are not of Martin Luther’s mind, whose admirable doctrine it is, that it is impossible either for a man to live without a woman, or for a woman to live without a man (Serm. de Matrim. Tom. 5. Fol. 11.), which methinks is but a coarse compliment to bachelors, maids, and widows ; of which there are many thousands even in Great Britain. Do all these then, or most of them live in a sinful state ? I have the charity to think they do not : and if they do not, I hope the many thousands of priests and religious in our church may be at least as good as they.

G.—But St Paul says, that if men cannot contain let them marry, 1 Cor. vii. 9.

L.—Pardon me Sir, St Paul says no such thing. His text is falsified in your Bible, and ought to be rendered thus : If they do not contain, let them marry : which still is to be understood of those, who may legally embrace the state of wedlock : for I do not find St Paul allowed it to widows consecrated to God. However there is a large difference between not containing, and not being able to contain. A thief does not contain from stealing : but I hope he can contain from it if he pleases, though his fingers itch never so much to be at it. So an adulterer does not contain from coveting his neighbour’s wife ; but St Paul will not tell him that he cannot contain. For if he cannot contain, he cannot be blamed if he does not contain : because necessity has no law.

G.—I am sure at least St Paul says, it is better to marry than burn.

L.—Very right, Sir, and St Paul teaches nothing but truth. But he does not say it is better to commit adultery or sacrilege than burn. Suppose a man should burn for his neighbour’s wife, or a married man for another woman (the case is not uncommon), does St Paul tell him, he had better marry her, than burn for her? No surely. The reason is, because marriage is not the only remedy against the burnings of concupiscence: but prayer and mortification joined with an ardent love of God will have the same effect, and that in a much nobler way. Nay St Paul himself had recourse to this excellent remedy instead of marriage against the most violent buffets of Satan; and he found it most effectual, as he owns in his epistles. And this is the very remedy our clergy and religious are bound to have recourse to in the like case. So that though it be better to marry than burn, when a man can do it lawfully, it is still much better to overcome the burnings of concupiscence by prayer and mortification, when he has engaged himself in a state, that is inconsistent with the lawfulness of marriage.

“G.—My lord, all sober christians, and even heathens look upon marriage as a preserver, and not as a breach of chastity. St Peter calls it a chaste conversation, 1 Pet. iii. 2. If it were not so, we may presume that Christ would not have honoured it with his presence and with his first miracle, nor make it so frequently, as he does, the type and representation of heaven, and of his union with the church; calling himself the bridegroom, and her his spouse.”—p. 178.

L.—Sir, all this is undeniable of true and lawful marriage. But though it be a preserver of chastity, it is neither the only one, nor an infallible one, nor the best preserver of it. This at least I am sure of, that chastity is not preserved by broken vows, and sacrilegious embraces.

“G.—The apostle says, to avoid fornication let every man have his own wife, and every woman her own husband. 1 Cor. vii. 2. No, say you, we except all the clergy, the friars, and the nuns, whom we have put under vows to the contrary. And we will find other means for them to obtain the grace of continency. Yes, and the world is full of the effects of those means, and knows whether they are better than those of God's appointment. It is strange that you, who have so many means of grace of your own, should not make those very few, which Christ has made, stand as he left them.”—p. 179.

L.—Sir, this Grub-Street stuff about our means of grace, and making void the institutions of Christ, has already been repeated and answered so often, that I am perfectly nauseated with it. What, Sir! does not the institution of marriage stand as Christ left it, though St Paul excluded widows who had consecrated themselves to God from the privilege of it; and though your church as well as ours forbids it within the prohibited degrees? And if the institution of marriage stands as Christ left it notwithstanding these limitations, can a man of common sense pretend that our excluding the clergy from the privilege of it has altered the institution of God?

It is true, the apostle says, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and every woman her own husband. But does the apostle by those words oblige all to marry? Or does he mean that marriage is the only means to avoid fornication? If so, why did he not follow his own rule and marry? Or if this be his meaning, what opinion must we have of all the widows and widowers, bachelors and maids of Great Britain?

You say, we except the clergy, friars, and nuns. This is a terrible grievance indeed. But St Paul himself has set us the pattern by excepting widows, that had consecrated themselves to God. Luther indeed took another course, and by the plenitude of his power first absolved himself, then as being bound to love his neighbour as himself, and do by others as he would be done by, absolved both priests, friars, and nuns, of all their vows; who thus became fruitful fathers and mothers of children to propagate his church.

Ay, but we put them under vows not to marry, and will find other means for them to obtain the grace of continency. Sir, it is false that we put them under vows. For there is no force used, but their own free choice determines them to it. And the means we prescribe them to obtain the grace of continency, viz., retirement, prayer, mortification, and a serious application to the duties of their respective state, are means prescribed by the gospel itself; which in spite of your unhandsome reflection are never frustrated of their effect, when they are rightly used.

I shall conclude this subject with the words of an eminent protestant. A single life (says Mr Thorndike) is a safer way to perfection than marriage. So is the profession of the clergy, and all the means of former retirement from the world—And the grace, which our Lord, and St Paul after him, owns in them that do this, is not a peculiar temper of the body obliging him that has it to live single, and him that has it not to marry, but a singular zeal to waive that, which God makes lawful for us, that we may the better come to his kingdom; which when it proceeds from a single eye proposing to itself nothing in this world but the means of attaining the world to come, well may we be assured of God's help to perform it by virtue of that promise, which the common christianity challenges, intending nothing but the effect of it. Just weights and measures. C. 11. pp. 74, 75.

This, Sir, may help to convince you, that the cause you have so stiffly maintained is not the most honourable, even our enemies being judges.

SECTION XLV.—OF PURGATORY.

G.—But, my lord, you extend your means of grace farther than Christ did his. For he appointed none to be used for those in the other world. But you have offices to deliver souls out of purgatory.—p. 179.

L.—Sir, Christ himself has instituted the holy sacrifice of his body and blood, the use of prayers, alms, fasting, &c., and I find no prohibition in holy writ, that forbids the application of them to the souls departed. So that our offering them up for the delivery of souls out of purgatory cannot but be a very charitable office.

G.—But it is a very dark one. We have not a word in scripture of any such state of the dead, where souls are put under pains equal to those of hell, except for their duration.—p. 179.

L.—Nor have we it in any profession of faith; for all we are bound to believe concerning purgatory is what the Council of Trent has defined: viz., that there is a purgatory (or middle state of souls) and that the souls detained in it are helped by the prayers of the faithful, especially by the acceptable sacrifice of the altar. But in what manner they are tormented, what sort of place it is, how great their torments are, or how long they are to last; these are points, in which the faith of the church is not the least concerned, and you only beat the air, if you dispute against these.

You say, there is not a word in scripture of any such state. If you mean that the word purgatory is not in scripture, I easily grant it. But the doctrine of purgatory (as I have stated it) is deduced by a clear and necessary consequence from several scriptural texts.

First, It is said Matt. xii. 32, that whosoever speaketh against the holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him neither in this world, nor in the world to come. Upon which text St Austin discourses thus: It would not be truly said of some sins that they shall neither be forgiven in this world, nor in the world to come, unless there were others, which though not forgiven in this life, may yet be forgiven in the next. L. 21, de Civ. Dei. C. 24.

2dly, It is said, Rom. xi. 6, that God will render to every man according to his deeds. Whence it follows, that if a man dies either without having done worthy fruits of penance for sins, of which he has sincerely repented; or with sins which are not deadly, of which he has not repented; since God is infinitely just, and a certain measure of punishment is due to every sin, it follows I say, that he must be punished after his death.

3dly, It is said, Rev. xxi. 27, that no unclean thing shall enter into heaven. The undeniable consequence whereof is, that a person guilty of the very smallest sin cannot enter into heaven, because he is rendered unclean by it in some degree. Neither can he be damned for it, because nothing but deadly sin is punished with eternal flames. There must therefore be a middle state between heaven and hell, where some sins are both punished and expiated; and this we call purgatory, because in heaven there is neither punishment nor sins capable of it, and in hell there is no redemption. Job.

“G.—But is not the blood of Christ sufficient to cleanse “us from all unrighteousness?”—p. 179.

L.—Yes, Sir; but if that proves any thing, it will prove a great deal too much; and hell will become useless as well as purgatory.

G.—Hold, my lord: though Christ has shed his blood for all, yet he requires a sincere repentance on our part as an indispensable duty to have it applied to us.

L.—Very right, Sir. And therefore as it does not cleanse us of mortal sin without repentance on our part, so neither of venial sin but upon the same condition. Besides there may remain a temporal punishment due to sins, even after we have sincerely repented of them: and if this debt be not fully discharged in this life, it remains to be paid hereafter.

“G.—Then the guilt is not fully forgiven.”—p. 179.

L.—Pardon me, Sir, there may be a temporal punishment due for sins, whereof the guilt is fully forgiven. God said to David, I have put away thy sin, but the child shall die.” 2 Sam. xii.

“G.—And the reason is given in the next words, because by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme; as if God did countenance such wickedness. Therefore David was punished so, as his enemies might perceive it. God punishes here either to vindicate his own honour before men, or for a trial of our faith, as in the case of Job, and to set forth such as examples to others: or for a proof and confirmation of our religion; as in the case of the prophets, apostles, confessors, and martyrs: or to correct and recall obstinate sinners. Many have been reformed by this means. But all these reasons respect this life only. For you say not that souls are made better in purgatory. For you suppose them to die in the love of God, and to be in his favour before they go thither. And why then are they punished, since they are not purified by it?”—pp. 179, 180.

L.—Sir, I have hitherto had this notion of purgatory, that it is a place, where souls are purged or purified, and by consequence made better, and fitted for heaven. But, pray, what Roman catholic ever told you the contrary? A person may in this world love God above all things, and be in his favour. Yet I hope this will not hinder him from being made better and purger than he is already:

and so he may be made better and purer in purgatory, by being cleansed from the stains his soul has contracted by venial offences. For surely a soul cleansed from all defilements of sin is purer and better, than whilst she continues tainted with them.

As to the several reasons you give, why God visits us with afflictions in this life, they are undeniable, but not the only ones. Do sins deserve no punishment? Must not the vindicative justice of God be satisfied?

“G.—That is satisfied before they are forgiven, and the sinners received into the favour of God. Unless you mean by vindicative such a spite and revenge, as is seen amongst the most ignoble part of mankind to say, I will forgive, but I will at the same time be revenged for what is past. Which indeed is not forgiveness, but a plain unwillingness to forgive.”—p. 180.

L.—Sir, this is such a blasphemous imagination, as, God be praised, I never heard of before. Was not Adam's sin, and the eternal punishment due to it forgiven him before he died? I never heard doubted of by any body. Yet heaven was shut against him in punishment of it till mankind was redeemed: and God demanded an infinite satisfaction for it: which was paid to the full by his only Son becoming man, and dying for us. And is this to be called such a spite and revenge, as is seen amongst the most ignoble part of mankind? For shame, Sir!

“G.—My lord, a generous forgiveness upon a sincere repentance, loves and embraces, and rejoices to comfort, and heap favours like the father of the returning prodigal.”—p. 180.

L.—And does not God love and comfort repenting sinners? And heap spiritual favours upon them, though he chastises them temporally for their past sins? It is true, there is no mention of punishment in the parable, you have quoted: because the whole drift of it is to set forth the divine mercies to sinners that repent sincerely; and it is not necessary that all truths should be mentioned in all parts of scripture.

“G.—God says, he will not remember our sins, that they shall not be mentioned to us in the day when we turn from

“our wickedness, Isa. iv. 25; Jer. xxxi. 34; Ezek. xviii. 22. “And how is that consistent with enduring the pains of hell for a hundred, perhaps a thousand years for ought we know?”—p. 180.

L.—Sir, all we know of the pains of purgatory is, that they are a temporal punishment justly inflicted; and a temporal punishment of sin is as consistent with forgiveness, as God’s justice is with his mercy. Thus Adam’s sin, as soon as he repented of it, was not remembered in the sense meant by Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. That is, God entirely forgave him both the guilt and eternal punishment due to it. Yet the gates of heaven were shut for near 4000 years after in punishment of it; and Adam himself performed the penance of eating his bread in the sweat of his brow enjoined him by God for above 900 years. In like manner God forgave David as soon as he confessed his sin to Nathan. But the temporal punishment of it lasted for many years after.

G.—Yes, my lord, by reason of the scandal, as I told you.

L.—The scandal, Sir, was a part of his sin, and a very considerable part of it, because it made the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme. Yet though the whole sin was forgiven (for God forgives not by halves) that part of it, as you own yourself, was punished for many years after; which demonstrates the falsehood of what you said just now, viz., that the justice of God is satisfied before the sins are forgiven, and the parties concerned received into favour.

“G.—But, my lord, how do we know what souls go to purgatory? How long they remain there? And which of them are released? Can prayers then for the release of such and such be made in faith? Otherwise they are sin by the apostle’s determination.”—p. 181.

L.—I am surprised, Sir, how you can propose your last question with a serious countenance. However since you have set me the example, I shall ask one very like it if you will promise not to laugh at me for it, viz., How you can pray in faith for the safety of an absent friend, who you know not whether he be alive or dead? Will not this also be a sin by St Paul’s determination? Yes surely full as heinous a one as our praying for souls, whose state we know nothing of. But I should rather think that though such prayers have not always their effect as to the parties we pray for, they who offer them up will not be deprived of the reward of their pious and charitable intention.

G.—Yes, my lord, all superstition is very pious, and that “is it which deceives. But God has required that our zeal to him be according to knowledge, and that we intrude not into things we have not seen. We have not seen any revelation for purgatory or the state of souls there.”—p. 181.

L.—Sir, they who will not see, will not see; and are blind not for want of eyes, but for want of will to use them. I have already quoted texts of scripture enough, wherein the revelation of purgatory is as clearly to be seen as a consequence in its principle. And so it is neither superstition nor zeal contrary to knowledge to pray for the relief of souls supposed to be in that state of suffering. But besides its foundation in scriptures it has as uninterrupted a tradition on its side as any article of faith; as I shall shew before we have done with this subject.

SECTION XLVI.—OF TRADITION.

G.—My lord, there are good and bad traditions, and they “are much oftener taken in the bad sense throughout the New Testament. Ye have made the commandment of God of no effect by your tradition, Matt. xvii. 6. Holding the tradition of the elders, Mark vii. 3. Laying aside the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition, 9. Vain deceit after the tradition of men, Col. ii. 8. Your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers, &c., Pet. i. 18.”—p. 181.

L.—Sir, all these texts prove very solidly what you said first, viz., that there are both good and bad traditions. But are apostolical traditions in the number of bad ones? St Paul thought not. Therefore (says he) brethren stand fast, and hold the traditions, which you have been taught, whether by word or our epistle, 2 Thess. ii. 15. This, Sir, was St Paul's doctrine to the Thessalonians. And I presume it regarded not them alone, but the whole church of Christ both then and in after ages. I am sure the holy fathers understood it so. Hear what St Irenæus says: Suppose (says he) the apostles had left us no scriptures, ought we not to have followed the rule of tradition, which they delivered to them to whose care they committed the churches? L. 3, C. 3.

G.—It seems then that tradition has the same authority with you as the scripture itself.

L.—Sir, if you speak of tradition derived from Christ and his apostles, it has so: and St Paul is my voucher for it. Nay whosoever will give himself leisure to think must be of the same mind. Because whatever Christ and his apostles taught by word of mouth was without all dispute as truly the word of God, as what the apostles have delivered to us in their writings. So that though scriptures rightly understood be a rule of faith to the church, yet since Christ laid the foundation of it by preaching only, and the apostles preached several years before they wrote any of the canonical books, it follows that the unwritten word was the first rule of christian belief, which could not lose its authority by the after-writing of the apostles.

G.—My lord, all that the apostles taught by word of mouth was afterwards set down in the canonical books.

L.—Pray what authority either of scripture or fathers have you for this? St Chrysostom is positive for the contrary. It is clear, says he, that the apostles did not deliver all things in writing, but many things without it: and these too deserve to be believed. Let us then give credit to the tradition of the church. It is tradition, seek no farther. L. de Spirit. Sancto, C. 29.

St Epiphanius says the same. Tradition too (says he) is necessary. For all things cannot be had from the scripture. Therefore the blessed apostles left some things in writing, and others by tradition. Thus St Epiphanius. Her. 61. Nay St Paul himself directed the Thessalonians to the unwritten word, as has been shewed; and in the only epistle he wrote to the Galatians he refers them to what he had taught them by word of mouth. Though we, says he, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. Gal. i. 8.

“ G.—My lord, there is a tradition, which for the evidence “ of it we are willing to admit. That is, according to the “ rule of Vincentius Lirinensis, that which was always received, “ everywhere, and by all. And we are willing to join issue “ with you upon this tradition as to purgatory, that is, uni- “ versal tradition. And you would not desire we should be “ convinced by any particular tradition of this or that church “ or place. For you know there are many deceits in such.”
 —pp. 181, 182.

L.—Sir, if I do not mistake your meaning, the uni- versal tradition upon which you are willing to join issue with us is of so large a size, that not one single article of the creed can come up to it. For every article of it, particularly that of the divinity of Christ, has been denied by many. It has not therefore been received by all. And since those many had a being in some time, and in some place, it has not been received always, and every where.
 You may therefore safely join issue with me even as to purgatory upon this pretty notion of universal tradition without approaching one step nearer to it. For Arius an ancient reformer in the 4th century denied it, and was writ against by the fathers of that and the following age; and you yourself, who deny it now, are somebody, and existent in some time and place; which I suppose suffices to prove that it has not been received always, every where, and by all.

But to be more serious upon the matter, those truths are said to have an universal tradition, even according to the true meaning of Vincentius Lirinensis, which though they have been or are still opposed by heretics, are derived from the apostles themselves, and have been always acknowledged as such by the Catholic Church and all true members of it throughout the whole world: which Vin- centius Lirinensis calls being received always, everywhere, and by all. And this universal tradition we have for pur- gatory, though not the chimerical one upon which I presume you are willing to join issue with us.

“ G.—My lord, Veron in his rule of faith (a book much “ applauded in France, and put into English for the use of “ Roman catholics here) sets out in the beginning with a “ definition of the rule of faith, of which he makes the first

“ requisite to be for an article of faith, that it be clearly revealed in scripture (and by no pretended revelation to any whatsoever) in express words, or thence to be deduced by necessary consequence. Which when made appear as to purgatory or any other doctrines in dispute, we shall readily allow it; and till then we cannot be arraigned of heresy for not professing to believe it.

“ This intruding into things we have not seen proceeds, as the apostle observes, Col. ii. 18, from a fleshly mind measuring spiritual things by carnal. We see it takes time to purge the flesh of diseases and defilements it has contracted. And it takes a great deal of filing and scrubbing to cleanse iron, that has been long rusted. Hence you conjecture the same as to souls departed, that they must be purged by fire. But the work of God upon the soul, when he grants true repentance, operates far otherwise. It effects the cure all at once, as with those who looked upon the brazen serpent. Our Saviour himself makes the comparison, John iii. 14, 15. And he gave us an example of it in the thief upon the cross, who was translated to paradise the same day he died: and yet he had been a grievous sinner, and suffered justly for his offences. His repentance was late, and he had made no restitution: yet he did no penance in purgatory.—pp. 182, 183.

SECTION XLVII.—THE SUBJECT OF PURGATORY RESUMED.

L.—Sir, according to your laudable custom you have made some commodious alterations in Veron's words. For his true words are these [Englished by E. S. Esq. Paris. Anno 1660, p. 1] the total and only rule of the Catholic faith is divine revelation delivered to the prophets and apostles, PROPOSED BY THE CATHOLIC CHURCH in her general councils, or by her universal practice to be believed as an article of catholic faith. And pray, Sir, is it the same thing to be revealed to the apostles, and to be clearly written by them? Did they write every thing that was revealed to them? The contrary is most certain, as has been fully shewed. So that if Veron had set out with the definition of his rule of faith, as you have cooked it for him, instead of being applauded as he now is, he would have been condemned for an heretic.

However suppose you had made no change in his words, you would be bound to believe the doctrine of purgatory according to the latter part of his rule, as quoted by you. Because the doctrine of purgatory is deduced by a necessary consequence from several texts of scripture, as I have fully proved.

You say, souls are not gradually cured like bodies but all at once, when God grants true grace and repentance. Sir, if you mean that the guilt of mortal or venial sin is not pardoned by halves but all at once: or, that when a soul is tainted with many mortal sins, one cannot be pardoned without the other: or finally, that God conveys a soul in an instant from the state of sin to that of sanctifying grace, what you say is very true, but nothing to your purpose. Because, when the whole guilt of sin is pardoned, the temporal punishment is not always remitted with it, as has been proved to a demonstration. And if the Divine justice be not fully satisfied in this life, there must be a state in the life to come wherein full satisfaction may be made, and the debt that has been contracted paid to the last farthing.

Besides a soul cleansed from the guilt of mortal sin may still be stained with many lesser offences or even affections to them, which are all blemishes and must be washed off before she can be admitted into heaven, where nothing that is unclean can enter. And where then will you find in scripture or indeed any where but in your own imagination, that all souls are perfectly cured in a trice, and stand in no need of having their cure perfected hereafter? This indeed is properly intruding into things we have not seen.

You mention the brazen serpent, at the sight whereof bodies were cured; and you add, that Christ himself made the comparison. So he did; but the comparison he made is this, viz.: That as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have life everlasting, John iii. 14, 15. Whence you conclude, therefore all souls are perfectly cured at once. Is not this trifling with the words of Christ instead of treating them with a serious regard to their true meaning?

But the thief on the cross, though he had been a grievous sinner, and repented late, and made no restitution, yet (say you) he did no penance in purgatory. I hope, Sir, you do not mean this as an innuendo, that the way to go strait to heaven is to sin grievously, repent late, and make no restitution. But let that pass: whosoever suffers as much, and with the same humility, patience, resignation, faith, and zeal as the good thief did on the cross, needs not be afraid of purgatory. But I fear there are but few death-bed penitents in the world like him.

G.—My lord, it is more than we know whether he might not have been converted before. But however it shews there is no necessity of purgatory even for very great offenders.”—p. 183.

L.—Very true, Sir, not for any offenders that become such penitents as the good thief was.

ADVERTISEMENT.—To these last words of the gentleman in his Case Stated his lordship gives this childish answer: No doubt but God may excuse whom he pleases. To which the gentleman replies thus:—

G.—How then do we know whom he excuses and whom not? And how can we pray in faith, that is, without sin to deliver such a particular person from purgatory?”—p. 183.

L.—In the same manner, Sir, as you pray in faith and without sin for the safety of a friend in the army or at sea, who you know not whether he be alive or dead.

As to your question, how we know whom God excuses and whom not? Sir, God might have forgiven if he had pleased all our sins without subjecting us to any temporal punishment for them. But this is not the order his infinite wisdom has established. And therefore, as he excuses no sinner from repentance, so he excuses none that we know from doing worthy fruits of penance: and punishing our sins is one of those worthy fruits. Which if we have not fully performed in this life, the deficiency must be made good in the next.

G.—But if there was no necessity of purgatory, as you have granted, in the case of the thief, how is it to be ina-“gined that God should keep so many thousand souls for many years and ages in the most extreme torments, when there is no necessity for it?”—p. 183.

L.—Sir, neither you nor I can know, how long souls are detained in purgatory. But there is always a necessity that God’s will be accomplished, and we are very sure that none are punished longer than they deserve. And the reason why the good thief had no purgatory was, because the Divine justice was satisfied before he died: and if all died as he did, the necessity of purgatory would cease.

G.—My lord, if the pope has power to release out of purgatory, he must be a very cruel father, who keeps one soul there an hour longer.”—p. 183.

L.—You may as well call him a very cruel father for not hindering plagues, wars, famines, hurricanes, earthquakes, and other such punishments of sin. Sir, there are about twenty reasons more or less, why the pope does not release all souls out of purgatory. And the first of these reasons is, because he cannot. For if he could, he certainly would do it. I omit the rest for brevity’s sake.

But has it not been the discipline of the church in all ages to impose penances for sins by the power of the keys? And are then all her bishops and pastors cruel fathers for not remitting the penalty together with the guilt? Are they not the ministers of God’s justice as well as mercy? Or do they not act by commission from him?

G.—My lord, the church knows not the heart, and must judge by outward signs, which yet secure not from hypocrisy. But this is all foreign to God, who searches the heart, and knows all that is in man.”—p. 184.

L.—But as the church can absolve from sins without an infallible knowledge of the disposition of men’s hearts, why might she not also without that infallible knowledge absolve them from all penalty whatsoever, were she not certain that in so doing she would act contrary to the order established by God? So that it is manifest it always was the church’s faith, that there is a temporal punishment due to sin even after the guilt together with the eternal punishment is remitted.

“ G.—My lord, though our physic of discipline works by degrees, and the issue is uncertain, yet God never cures imperfectly. Christ never half-healed any man. And so it is when he pardons sinners. Thy sins are forgiven thee, it is not said shall be forgiven, or when thou hast performed such or such a penance; but the forgiveness of his sins was as immediately wrought as the cure of his body. And God gives us all the assurances that can be in the strongest expressions of our sins being absolutely and totally forgiven. As being all blotted out, and cast into the depths of the sea. Never to be remembered or mentioned unto us any more, as before quoted. I will heal their backsliding, I will love thee freely. He is ready to forgive, he waiteth to have mercy, he earnestly remembereth, his bowels are troubled for sinners, that they may repent; and in the day they turn from their wickedness he forgiveth. For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of man. It is for their repentance and reformation. But this consideration is not in purgatory.—pp. 184, 185.

L.—What a strange profusion of texts have we here again to no manner of purpose! Any one of them suffices to prove that the guilt of sin with the eternal punishment due to it is never pardoned imperfectly or by halves, and a thousand of them can prove no more. Why then are they thus multiplied but for a shew to impose upon the ignorant. Hear what St Austin says concerning the temporal punishment of sin after the guilt is pardoned: The punishment of sin, says he, continues after the guilt is pardoned least the guilt should be thought little, if the punishment ended with it. Trac. 124, in Joanem. Hence it is even conducing to our salvation, that God does not always remit at once both the temporal and eternal punishment: that we may feel sensibly the effects both of his mercy and justice, and not abuse by repeated crimes the facility of his pardon: as St Austin also observes upon the 8th verse of the 50th Psalm.

SECTION XLVIII.—OF MERITS.

“ G.—But my lord, how will the poor souls in purgatory (if any be there) be deluded, if the stock of supererogation

“ should fail them ; that is, the merits of saints for their good “ works which they have done over and above their duty, and “ what they were obliged to for their salvation ; and therefore “ are applied to others, who have come short of their duty “ to supply their deficiencies, which is the fund provided for “ the discharge of prisoners out of purgatory ? and this is “ dispended by the pope to whom he thinks fit, as being the “ grand treasurer of the church, and consequently of those “ superabundant merits of the saints. But we want a text, “ where St Peter was constituted such a treasurer, or that “ there is or can be such a treasury.”—p. 185.

L.—Sir, I am as much a stranger to any such text as yourself. And as I am not bound in a dispute about religion to maintain mere school-opinions, in which the church’s faith is not concerned, so neither am I bound to produce any scripture texts for them. However thus far is certain, that the saints pray for all their fellow-members who stand in need of it ; and their prayers are acceptable to God, and available in behalf of those they pray for in proportion to the degree of holiness, they attained to in this life. And in this sense their past merits and sufferings may be said to be applicable to others : viz., in as much as they give an efficacy to their prayers to move God to have compassion on those they pray for. As the prayer of Moses appeased God’s wrath against the Israelites ; and as Job’s praying for his three friends had the same effect. And finally, as the prayers and extraordinary mortifications of God’s special servants upon earth often move him to bestow the grace of a sincere conversion on sinners, who deserve nothing but to be abandoned by him.

But since the merits and prayers of God’s saints either in heaven or on earth have no other value, than what they derive from the merits of Christ, I must here bring you acquainted with a fund for the discharge of the prisoners in purgatory, which I presume you will not venture to burlesque for your diversion. I mean, the infinite price of the sacred blood of Christ, and the inexhaustible treasure of his merits : which fund I hope is secure, and in no danger of failing. So that your mighty concern least the poor souls in purgatory should find themselves left in the lurch, if their stock of supererogation should fail them, is wholly owing either to your real, or affected misunderstanding of the most essential part of our doctrine. For it cannot be doubted, but that the infinite merits and satisfaction of Christ will always be a sufficient fund to release the prisoners.

But I know not, whether I must ascribe it to a want of charity, or judgment, or both; when you express our doctrine of merit and supererogation in these improper and equivocal terms, viz., that the saints are obliged for their salvation to the merits of their own good works, which they have done over and above their duty. Every word whereof carries a double meaning; but the bad one is uppermost, and offers itself at first sight.

Wherefore to prevent all mistakes, I desire you to observe, that it is our doctrine that all, who are saved, owe their salvation (if we will speak properly) purely to the mercy and grace of God through the infinite merits and mediation of Jesus Christ. First, Because no man can merit the first justifying grace: as is expressly taught by the Council of Trent in the following words: It is therefore said, that we are justified gratis, because none of the acts which precede justification, whether they be faith, or good works, can merit this grace, Sess. vi. c. 6. As therefore we owe that which is the ground-work and foundation of our eternal happiness to the pure liberality of God, so are we by consequence indebted to him for that happiness, which cannot be attained without it.

2dly, Though the virtues which we practise, and the good works which we perform in the state of grace be most certainly conducing to salvation, and even merit an increase of grace, yet since those very virtues and good works are not only the gifts of God, but derive all the merit they have from his sanctifying grace and the merits of Christ, it follows, that we have the same obligation to God for our eternal happiness, as if he bestowed it upon us without any concurrence or co-operation on our part. Nay our obligation is rather the greater, because that very concurrence or co-operation on our part is an additional favour we receive of him, and so entirely the fruit of his holy grace, that we cannot (independently of it) without presumption ascribe it to ourselves according to these words of St Paul, What hast thou that thou didst not receive? and if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it? 1 Cor. iv. 7; and again, for it is God, who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Phil. ii. 13.

Yet all this notwithstanding it is undoubtedly true, that our salvation depends upon the practice of virtue and good works: because the word of God declares positively, that we cannot be saved without it. If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments says Christ, Matt. xix. 17; and St James tells us, that faith if it hath not works is dead, James ii. 17. If then we cannot be saved without keeping the commandments, and the practice of good works, our salvation is owing to it in the same sense as it depends upon it. Nor does this derogate in the least from the glory due to God: because owing our salvation to the virtues and good works we practise is in effect owing it to the gifts of God: because we can neither practise any virtue, nor perform any good work without the assistance of his grace, who worketh in us both to will and to do, of his good pleasure, Phil. ii. 13.

G.—But, my lord, how does all this consist with your doctrine of merits?

L.—Not at all, Sir, as protestants will needs understand it for us: but as we understand it nothing is more easy. I shall therefore explain it briefly to you. The Council of Trent speaks thus of it: To those, who place their confidence in God, and continue in the practise of good works, eternal life ought to be proposed both as a grace mercifully promised to the children of God through Jesus Christ, and as a reward faithfully to be rendered by virtue of that promise to their good works and merits. Sess. 6, C. 16.

Here is all that is of faith relating to the article of merit; concerning which protestants have taken the utmost pains to poison the people with false notions of our doctrine. And I do not wonder at it. Because mis-tating a doctrine is the most expedite way to confute it. For it costs no labour of the brain; but with a little pliability of conscience makes truth and falsehood shift sides in a trice. I shall put a question or two to clear the matter. Pray, Sir, has not God promised eternal life to such as perform the conditions required of them?

G.—Who doubts it?

L.—And is not this a covenant, or a kind of contract or bargain betwixt God and man?

G.—I cannot deny it.

L.—Well, and are not all contracts or bargains binding on both sides, so that if the conditions stipulated be performed by the one, the other is bound to make good his part? I am sensible this question presses somewhat hard upon you. For it follows from it, that if we perform our part of the covenant God has made with us, we deserve the promised reward, and have a just title to it by virtue of his promise. And this is that frightful bugbear, which we call merits.

G.—But, my lord, are our works then in this life equal to the reward?

L.—No, Sir, they are not equal to it. Nay though we did ten thousand times more, they would bear no proportion to it: because God has been so bountiful as to promise a reward infinitely surpassing our works. But still they are a reward, and a reward promised upon such and such conditions, as he thought fit to impose. And if God's sacred promise be sufficient to ground a sure and just title, they who perform the conditions upon which heaven is promised, have the surest and justest title to it, that a man can have to any thing.

G.—But does not Christ say, that when we have done all we are commanded, we are unprofitable servants? Luke xvii. 10, and how then can we pretend to any merits, or works of supererogation?

L.—Sir, when we have done all we are commanded, we are wholly unprofitable to God: for he cannot receive any profit by us. Neither does he stand in need of his servants, but his servants stand in need of him. Yet since we are his servants, when we have done what we are commanded, we have a title to the wages he has promised us. For a covenant, contract, or bargain holds between God and man, as well as between man and man. And God who is just will certainly pay us our wages according to the work we have done.

But we are over and above unprofitable servants in another sense even when we have done all we are commanded. Because we are insufficient of ourselves even to think any thing as of ourselves, but our sufficiency is of God, 2 Cor. iii. 5. So that we can do nothing of what we are commanded in order to salvation, unless we be enabled by God's grace to do it. And can any thing be more unprofitable than a servant, that can do nothing without the help of his master?

Hence St Austin has left us these excellent words, which contain a full defence of the doctrine of merits, and shew what the church's faith was in his time: Eternal life (says he) is called by the apostle the gift of God. NOT THAT IT IS NOT GIVEN TO MERITS, BUT BECAUSE THE MERITS THEMSELVES, TO WHICH IT IS GIVEN, are likewise his gifts. And again, when God crowns our merits, what else does he crown but his own gifts? L. de Gratia et lib. Arb., and so we are always unprofitable servants.

Neither is this inconsistent with what we call works of supererogation, if you will but vouchsafe to understand the word as we do. A question or two will lead us to the true meaning of it. I ask then, whether there be not counsels as well as precepts?

G.—Who doubts it?

L.—Well, Sir, and are we bound in conscience to practise the evangelical counsels? Are we bound, for example, to sell all we have and give it to the poor?

G.—No surely.

L.—He then that practises this or any other evangelical counsel, does a work of supererogation. That is, he does a thing he is not bound to do. And this is precisely our meaning of that word. But if you fix another meaning upon it, and tell the people, that we pretend to do all we are commanded and more, i. e., to be wholly free from sin, I must accuse you either of ignorance, or wilful slander.

For we utterly deny it, as being contrary to God's word, which tells us, that in many things we all offend, James iii. 2. And, that if we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us, 1 John i. 8. Now Sir, you may put what objections you please.

SECTION XLIX.—OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

“G.—My lord, can a creature merit at the hands of God “for ever so great endowments bestowed upon him? Is it “a merit to receive great gifts?”—p. 185.

L.—Sir, God can reward nothing but his own gifts. But since he has promised to reward them, they certainly deserve their reward in virtue of that promise, and must by consequence be a merit in his sight. Which made St Austin say, that God has made himself a debtor to us not by receiving, but by promising, Psalm lxxxiii. You ask, if it be a merit to receive great gifts? I answer it is no merit, if we abuse them. But to employ as we ought the gifts we receive, is certainly a merit through God's goodness, who has promised to reward them.

“G.—But if we employ them to the best advantage, is it “more than is our duty to do?”—p. 185.

L.—No, Sir, but God rewards his servants for doing their duty, and we merit heaven by it.

“G.—And we are still unprofitable servants, as Christ “himself has told us.”—p. 185.

L.—We are so. But still we are servants, and work for wages. And the wages promised us is eternal life.

“G.—But was there ever a man (Christ alone excepted) “who did all his duty? Are not all *sinner*s? And if their “repentance entitles them to pardon, this is far from merit: “my doing my duty to day makes no amends for my having “neglected it yesterday.”—pp. 185, 186.

L.—Sir, you seem to make no difference between venial offences and deadly sin. This deprives us of sanctifying grace, which constitutes us the adoptive sons of God, his heirs and coheirs of Christ; and is the interior foundation of merit in the soul, to which God has promised eternal life, and an increase of glory in proportion to the meritorious works, whereof it is the source and principle through the merits of Jesus Christ. But venial offences destroy not this foundation; though they suffice to denominate all men *sinner*s, even the greatest *saint*s, who all offend in many things, James iii. 2. And so your questions are fully answered. And it is manifest, that though all be *sinner*s, in the sense meant by St James, yet this hinders not, but that there are many, who being free from deadly sin are properly called just or righteous according to scripture language: and these are in a state of meriting the pardon of their daily failings, and atoning or making amends for them by the practice of good works joined with repentance.

“G.—We find the greatest saints applying to the mercy of God, and not pleading their own merits. Jacob said, I am not worthy of the least of all thy mercies. And Job, who had none like him in the earth, a perfect and upright man, &c., said I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. And Daniel the man greatly beloved, confessed his own sins as well as the sins of the people. And St Paul called himself the chief of sinners, not worthy to be an apostle.”—p. 186.

L.—What wonder is it, that the saints on earth (who had the deepest sense of their own natural corruption, and the offences they had committed against God) both thought and spoke thus humbly of themselves? For they would not have been saints without it; and their humility was their brightest merit, and a most special gift of God. Nay they would have acted very presumptuously, had they pleaded their own merits, and not applied themselves to the mercy of God. 1stly, Because no man knows what merits he has, or whether he be worthy of God’s love or hatred. And 2dly, Because all merits are the mercies and gifts of God through Jesus Christ.

“G.—But if the saints own no merit in themselves, then surely they will disown all those, who apply to their merits: and as I said before concerning the worship and invocation of them, by which you hope to gain them to be intercessors for you, they must become your accusers by the denial of their acceptance of such worship from you, which if they should accept, it would make them evil spirits, as I have quoted out St Austin.”—p. 186.

L.—Sir, the saints on earth see nothing of their own merits. Their humility is industrious to hide every thing from them but their faults. But in heaven, where there is no danger of vanity, they are happy in the experimental knowledge of their past virtues and merits by the degree of glory, whereof they are securely in possession: and therefore we need not fear their displeasure by our honouring those merits, which have raised them to that glory: especially since they are not ignorant, that honouring their merit is but honouring the gifts of God.

But, Sir, as to your quotation from St Austin against our honouring and invoking the saints, I am sorry you give me so often occasion to reproach you with your shameful falsification of that father. For it obliges me to an ungrateful task; and I blush for you as often as I am forced to do it.

“G.—But, my lord, what creature dares plead purity before God? Behold he chargeth his angels with folly, and he putteth no trust in his saints. Yea the heavens are not clean in his sight. How much more abominable and filthy is man, who drinketh iniquity like water? And what is man, that he should be clean? And he that is born of a woman, that he should be righteous? Job iv. 18. And if all our righteousness are as filthy rags, Isa. xlv. 6; if there be iniquity in our holy things, in the holy sanctuary and altar, what then is clean?”—pp. 186, 187.

L.—Sir, your first question is, what creature dares plead purity before God? And all the texts you have produced are to prove, that no man can without presumption make this plea: which I readily grant. Because we all offend in many things. But amongst those who offend in many things, it is to be hoped there are many who do not offend God mortally. And these are in a state of meriting the reward, which God promised to those, who live and die in his holy grace. Nay you owned just now that Job was a perfect and upright man. So that all that can be concluded from the texts you have quoted is that man of himself, and without the grace of Jesus Christ is nothing but weakness, corruption, and sin.

“G.—My lord, if the righteous themselves shall scarcely be “ saved, as St Peter tells us, iv. 18, what merits have they “ to spare for others, especially when they are not saved “ even by their own works? For by grace ye are saved, not

 “ by works, lest any man should boast, Eph. ii. 8, 9. Can “ any man then boast of his works as not only sufficient for “ his own salvation, but over and above as meritorious to be “ applied to others, and to deliver souls out of Purgatory?
 “ No, my lord, the saints make no such boasts, and will dis“ own all those, who make them in their name. For they “ know that all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God “ being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that “ is in Jesus Christ—where is boasting then? It is excluded.
 “ By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith.
 “ Rom. iii. 23, 24, 27.”—p. 187.

L.—Really, Sir, one would think you had read the scripture for nothing else, but to misapply and abuse it. Your first text from St Peter speaks of the difficulty of being saved, and the severity of God’s judgment; which no man surely doubts of. Yet for all that, it is certain the saints are saved; and it is no less certain, that the virtues and good works, which through God’s grace they have practised in this life, were a means to bring them to that happy state. Unless you will say, that good works are not necessary nor conducting to salvation: which I presume is not the doctrine of your church.

The subject of the whole chapter to the Ephesians, whence you have taken your second text, is to render them sensible, that their being converted from idolatry to the faith of Christ was not in the least owing to any preceding merit of good works, but wholly to the goodness of God, and the grace and merits of Jesus Christ. And is not this wonderfully to the purpose? Your argument runs thus: Idolaters wallowing in all sorts of sins, do not merit the grace of their conversion; therefore christians that live well, do not deserve to go to heaven. Fine stuff indeed!

Your third text from St Paul to the Romans is immediately followed by these words: Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law, iii. 28; which shews that the apostle’s main scope in that chapter was to convince the converted Jews at Rome, that they were to be saved not by the works of the law, but by their faith in Jesus Christ. And that therefore they had no reason to boast, as they did, of the works of the law. But does faith in Christ exclude the necessity of good works?

G.—But can a man then boast of his good works? I believe the saints make no such boast, nor desire others to make it for them.

L.—Sir, no man can boast of his good works or merits, let them be never so great: but he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, says St Paul, 2 Cor. x. 7, because all merits are the gifts of God: and when God crowns our merits, he only rewards his own gifts: as St Austin has already told us. So that I am wholly of your mind, that the saints make no such boasts. Nor do I know any who make them in their name: though we all praise God in his saints; as we are directed by the psalmist, Psalm cl. 1. And desire them to intercede both for ourselves and the souls departed; not doubting but their past merits render their prayers acceptable to God, and available for the relief of others. But that the saints have any merits to spare, or that their merits are applicable to others any other way than that of intercession or impetration, as I have explained it, is a doctrine I am utterly a stranger to.

“G.—Every man, my lord, is saved by his own faith, not by the faith of others. And God will reward every man according to his works, not the works of others, Matt. xvi. 27.—p. 187.

L.—That is very certain. God will reward none for other men's works; but he will reward every man according to his own works. Pray remember that; for those very words decide the question against you. Because if salvation be the reward of good works, as it most certainly is, nay a reward stipulated between God and man by virtue of his promise, it follows, that when the works to which heaven is promised as a reward, are performed, we deserve or merit the reward.

“G.—But then, my lord, how miserable is the condition of the souls supposed to be in purgatory, if they must not “be delivered thence but by the works of supererogation, “when no man can be saved by his own works!”—p. 187.

L.—What, Sir! Are not a man's own works conducing to salvation? Did you not just now tell me, that God will reward every one according to his works? Or are not the saints, who are already in heaven, rewarded according to their works? And is not salvation the reward they have received? If then salvation be a reward, and this reward is given them for their works, we may in a true sense say their works have saved them. But if you only mean, that no man can be saved by his own works considered nakedly in themselves, and independently of the merits of Christ, I know not any Christian that will oppose you.

But pray, Sir, who ever told you, that the souls in purgatory are not to be delivered thence but by the works of supererogation practised by the saints? They pray indeed incessantly for their suffering brethren. But their prayers are all offered up through the mediation of Jesus Christ, whose treasure of infinite merits can never be exhausted; and is a fund the souls in purgatory can securely rely upon for their deliverance from their pains. So that as long as this subsists, they can never be destitute of the helps their condition is capable of. I repeat what I said before, viz., that though the saints have received the full recompence of all their merits, this hinders not but that the greater their merits are, the more acceptable to God are their prayers on the one hand, and the more available on the other for the relief of those, who stand in need of them.

G.—My lord, the apostle tells us, we are saved not according to our works, but according to the grace of God in Christ Jesus, 2 Tim. i. 9. And again, not by the works of righteousness, which we have done, but according to his mercy he has saved us—through Jesus Christ our Saviour, Tit. iii. 5, 6.”—pp. 187, 188.

L.—Sir, you have mangled both the texts, and omitted that part which helps to explain them. St Paul's words to Timothy are thus: Who has delivered us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his holy purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began. Where it is plain he speaks of the grace of predestination, which no man can merit. His words to Titus are as follow: But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour towards man appeared, not by the works of righteousness, which we had done, but according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour. Whence it appears, that St Paul speaks here of the first grace of justification by baptism, which likewise no man can merit.

“G.—My lord, we have but one Saviour, nor can we be saved by the merits of any other. None other can merit from God. The greatest saint that ever was is only saved by mercy, and the forgiveness of his sins. Let us therefore not trust to the supererogated works of those, who were not able to save themselves. That every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God, Rom. iii. 9. For in his sight shall no man living be justified, there is none righteous, no not one, Psalm cxiv. 2.”—p. 188.

L.—Sir, all men in the world are sinners, which suffices to verify the texts you have quoted. However it is certain there are many in the world free from mortal sin, and these are in a state of meriting through the grace and merits of Jesus Christ notwithstanding their daily failings.

You say, we have but one Saviour, nor can we be saved by the merits of any other. Very right Sir, because our own good works have no merit or value, but what they derive from the merits of Christ, which must be applied to us to render our works conducive to salvation. But God has been pleased to establish things upon this footing, viz., that though he has redeemed us without us, he will not save us without our co-operation; and heaven must be the reward of our perseverance in good works.

You add, that none but Christ can merit of God. Sir, none but Christ can merit independently and of himself: but dependently of him and with the assistance of his holy grace all men can merit: and all that pretend to salvation, must merit it by good works: because God will reward every man according to his works.

Lastly you say, the greatest saint that ever was is saved only by mercy and the forgiveness of sins. Sir, the grace of repentance, by which we obtain the forgiveness of our sins is a pure mercy, and all merit is a gift of God. Whence it follows, that though they who are saved are rewarded according to their merits, yet they are saved by mercy. And this is entirely conformable to the doctrine of the council of Trent teaching, that eternal life ought to be proposed both as a grace mercifully proposed to the children of God, and as a reward faithfully to be rendered to their good works and merits. Sess. 6, C. 16. In effect, Sir, this whole dispute is about a mere word; on which you will needs fasten a bad sense in spite of our protesting continually against it, and explaining it in such an orthodox meaning, as in your hearts you cannot but allow of.

G.—But, my lord, besides all I have said, there are degrees of glory in heaven. So that if any could supererogate, yet has he nothing to spare for others, because he has received the full of his reward himself.—p. 188.

L.—Sir, I am glad to hear you speak some sense at last. For if there be degrees of glory in heaven, and every saint has received his full reward, it follows that every saint has received for reward a degree of glory proportioned to his works or deserts in this life. And does not that demonstrate the doctrine of merits?

G.—But, my lord, this shuts up purgatory for ever by exhausting every penny of that treasury reserved for their redemption from thence.—p. 188.

L.—I hope, Sir, that as long as the infinite treasure of the merits and satisfaction of Christ is not exhausted, there will always be a sufficient fund for the redemption of souls out of purgatory: and so there will be no danger of its being shut up.

G.—But I have another argument against your doctrine both of venial sins and purgatory, viz.: That the expectation of having those many sins called venial with you remitted after death, does naturally make men more careless in their life. And trusting to the merits of others will abate their diligence in being nicely righteous themselves.—p. 188.

L.—Really, Sir, you make me smile. For if believing a purgatory hinders men from endeavouring to be nicely righteous, then I am bound in good manners to suppose, that they, who believe no purgatory (and you are one of those) study to be most nicely righteous. Well, Sir, I hope at least that trusting in the merits of Christ will not abate our diligence in being nicely righteous.

You speak of venial sin, as if you believed no such thing. What mean then these words of St James, in many things we all offend? For I presume he does not mean, that himself and the other apostles were guilty of many mortal sins.

But you think their being remitted after death makes men more careless in this life. Yes, Sir, if they were remitted without punishment we might grow careless of them. But, as you have already described purgatory for us, viz., that it is a place of fire, where souls are put under pains equal to those of hell except their duration, I think the temptation to slight them is not like to be very great, till men grow fonder of being burnt, than we yet find they are.

ADVERTISEMENT.—His lordship having been silent for five whole pages together in the former conversation, opens his mouth at last, and out comes this wise saying: We find some instances among the fathers of prayers for the dead. To which the gentleman answers in the following manner:—

“G.—Some few among the fathers you may, but none in scripture.”—p. 188.

SECTION L.—PRAYING FOR THE RELIEF OF THE DEAD HAS BEEN THE CONSTANT PRACTICE OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

L.—But is there any thing in scripture against it? No, you cannot so much as strain a text to make a flourish with; though you are as good at it as any man living. And if there be no scripture against it, its not being mentioned in scripture can no more prove it to be no article of faith, than it proves the validity of infant baptism to be no article of faith; for there is not the least instance or mention of it in scripture.

However we read in the book of Machabees, that Judas Machabeus sent to Jerusalem to have sacrifice offered for his dead soldiers. I know your church does not allow that book to be canonical. But St Cyprian called them divine scripture. Epist. 55. ad Corn. Papam. So did St Ambrose, L. 2. de Jacob. &c. C. 10, 11; and St Isidore of Seville, who writes thus: Though the Jews reject the books of Machabees, yet the church honours them as divine books, L. 6. Originum. St Austin was of the same opinion. The church, says he, reckons them among the canonical books, though the Jews do not, L. 18. de Civit. Dei. C. 36. But his words L. de cura pro mortuis. C. 1. are remarkable: We read, says he, in the book of Machabees, that sacrifice was offered for the dead. But though this were not to be found in the ancient scriptures, the authority of the universal church, which is eminent for this practice, is of no small weight. Here, Sir, you see St Austin insists upon the public practice of the universal church in offering up prayers for the dead. So that you must have a good assurance to tell me, that some few fathers speak of it, as if the thing were doubtful.

“ G.—But, my lord, what were these prayers? They were “ for peace and rest to those, who were supposed to be in “ peace, yet might receive an increase of happiness even before “ the resurrection; as some suppose heaven itself to consist “ in an eternal increase of bliss. But without this we may “ pray for the continuation of peace to those who are in peace, “ though we know it will surely be, as when we pray, thy “ kingdom come, thy will be done: we know it must be, but “ this shews our assent and wishes for it. And in this sense
 “ we also pray for the dead, that it would please God shortly “ to accomplish the number of the elect, and to hasten his kingdom, “ that we with all those who are departed in the true faith of “ his holy name may have the perfect consummation and bliss “ both in body and soul in his eternal and everlasting glory.
 “ And we bless him for all his servants departed this life
 “ in his faith and fear, beseeching him to give us grace so to “ follow their good example, that with them we may be partakers
 “ of his heavenly kingdom. So that we pray for them as “ well as ourselves, that we may with them be partakers, “ &c. But neither these prayers of ours, nor those of the “ancients have any relation to purgatory, or delivering souls “from thence as a place of torments.”—p. 189.

L.—Sir, I cannot but say, the prayer you have recited is cunningly enough contrived; for it may serve either for the living or the dead. However there is one thing very singular in it; viz., that (for example) a son, who goes to his father's burial thanks God for having taken him out of this life. Which I think is not very instructive or edifying. But let that be as it will, since you own, that you pray for the dead as well as we, I doubt you will find it a hard task to piece up this rag of popery by saying that your prayers have no relation to purgatory. For according to my dull notion, to pray for others is to beg something they either want, or may lose; and to pray that those, who are secure of eternal rest, may continue to have it, is as great a solecism as to pray that a man may continue to be a man, and a woman a woman: or that the saints in heaven may never be dann'd.

As to the two petitions, you quote from the Lord's prayer, by the first we ask to become partakers of God's kingdom, and by the second that we may always accomplish his holy will, which I think are of the number of things, we are not sure of.

But if the subject of our prayers for the souls departed be, that they who are in heaven may receive a continual increase of bliss, then I presume the blessed virgin Mary is principally remembered in your good protestant prayers. For no saint in heaven deserves a continual increase of bliss more than she. And I hope the apostles and martyrs will not be forgot; though St Austin was of opinion that to pray for a martyr was to put an affront upon him. And indeed I cannot but think that recommending ourselves to the prayers of the saints is far more congruous to good sense than praying for them.

However you have my free consent to order your own prayers as incongruously as you please. But I cannot brook your drawing the ancient fathers into the same absurdity by asserting that their prayers for the souls departed were only offer'd up for peace and rest to those, who were supposed to be in peace. This is a bold contradiction to plain fact, and obliges me to prove you guilty either of ignorance or insincerity in advancing so notorious a falsehood. A few chosen passages of the fathers will fully make good this charge against you.

Tertullian says of a faithful widow: she both prays for the soul of her husband, and begs a REFRESHMENT for him in the mean time—and keeps his anniversaries. For unless she does these things, she has repudiated her husband as far as in her lies. L. de Monogam. C. 10.

One of Arius's heresies in the fourth century, according to St Epiphanius, was, that the prayers and alms of the living did the dead no good. Hær. 75. Sect. 3. T. 1. p. 908. Against whom he writes, that the church has this tradition from Christ, that prayers are profitable, though they do not extinguish ALL SINS. Sect. 8, p. 912, and that we mention the saints and others in a quite different manner. The saints, that we may give Christ a singular honour; and others, that we may obtain MERCY for them.

St Chrysostom writes thus: The apostle (says he) did not in vain command these things, that in the venerable and dreadful mysteries (that is, the holy sacrifice of the mass) the dead should be remembered. For they knew they would derive a considerable advantage from it. Hom. 3. in Epist. ad Phil.

And again: Hom. 41. in Epist. 1. ad Cor. he writes thus: The dead may be helped by prayers, and alms, and offerings; because they were not instituted in vain. And concludes, let us therefore help them. For we have before us the expiatory sacrifice of the world—it may happen that we may obtain A TOTAL PARDON for them by prayers, by oblations, by the saints, who are named with them.

St Cyril of Jerusalem writes thus: Lastly, we pray for all that die amongst us: thinking it to be the greatest help that can be to their souls to have the holy and dreadful sacrifice of the altar offered in supplication for them. Cat. Mystag. 5, p. 241.

We also find St Austin writing in the same manner: By the prayers of the holy church (says he), and the wholesome sacrifice and alms, it is not to be doubted but the dead are assisted; so that God deals MORE MERCIFULLY with them than their sins have deserved. Which he proves thus: Because it is the practice of the whole church to offer sacrifice for them. But he adds, these are not beneficial to all the dead, but only to those, that lived so before their death, that they might be a help to them after it. And therefore we do not say the dead have any new merits, but that they reap this fruit from their good actions before. Serm. 172. (olim 32. de verbis Apost.) Sect. 2.

Here, Sir, we have fathers of the third, fourth, and fifth century positively maintaining a state of souls in the other world, wherein they are refreshed, helped, favoured with the pardon of some sins, receiving considerable advantage, and more mercifully dealt with than their sins deserved in consideration of the prayers, alms, and holy sacrifice of the altar offered up for them by the faithful upon earth: and this is represented by them as a practice commanded by the apostles themselves. So that I leave any one to judge, whether any credit is to be given to what you say, even when you assert things with the most positive assurance; as that there are some few instances among the fathers of prayers for the dead; and that they were only offered up for peace and rest to those, who were supposed to be in peace. Unhappy ignorant people, who are imposed upon and misled by such faithless and deceitful guides!

G.—My lord, some of the ancients had an imagination “of purging fire, through which sinners were to pass. But “they meant the general conflagration at the last day, which “comes not at all to your notion of purgatory.”—pp. 189, 190.

L.—Nor is it any thing to the purpose. But did the fathers I have quoted, when they exhorted the people to offer up prayers, alms, and the holy sacrifice of the altar for the relief of their friends already deceased, did they, I say, speak of the general conflagration? Nay, does it not demonstrate, that they believed there was then a state, in which the souls departed were capable of receiving help, refreshment, the pardon of some sins, and (as St Chrysostom expresses it) a considerable advantage from them?

SECTION LI.—SOME REMARKS UPON THE GENTLEMAN'S PERFORMANCE.

“ G.—My lord, I will not trouble you with many excursions, or debating every branch of these disputes. I have only given you a summary view of the heart of the cause to let you see where the matter pinches. And indeed my endeavour with your lordship is rather to state the case, than to argue upon it. For truth needs no more than to be fairly shewed, it convinces of itself, and best when it is naked, without the fucus of philosophy and distinctions, which are endless. These will put a colour upon implicit faith itself, and make you believe you understand what you know nothing of. My lord, give me leave to say, your whole religion is implicit, not only as to the particular points we have discoursed; but your whole public worship is such, while your prayers are in a language not understood by the people. How then can they pray with the understanding, as the apostle requires? 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16. And how can they say Amen? Seeing they understood not what is said.”—p. 190.

L.—I perceive, Sir, we are at length got out of purgatory, and this fine speech is only meant as a prologue to something else. However I shall beg leave to make a few remarks upon it, because it contains some sly insinuations, which may easily be misunderstood. You tell me, you have only given me a summary of the heart of the cause to let me see where the matter pinches: and you have rather stated the case than argued upon it. Very true Sir. For though you have said much, you have argued but little, and proved much less. Which is perhaps the reason, why I do not see where the matter pinches. However, I presume this is to let me understand how favourably I have been used, and what a world of fine things more you could have said upon the several subjects we have handled. I assure you Sir, I will not be ungrateful, but freely own the favour you have done me. For I question not, but you might have said a thousand things more, full as pertinent and true as those you have said.

As, for instance, instead of half a dozen texts of scripture at a time, you might as easily have produced a dozen more, full as much to the purpose : and instead of playing tricks of legerdemain with some fathers only, you might have cut out for me much more work by quoting all the rest with the same sincerity. And your not having given me this trouble is doubtless a favour I am bound to acknowledge.

You say, truth needs no more than to be fairly shewn ; it convinces of itself, and best when it is naked. This maxim is very good if meant of natural truths or the first principles of reason, which convince of themselves, and are best seen by their own light. But I do not see how revealed truths can come within the application of this rule. For I never heard of a man convinced of the mysteries of the trinity and incarnation by the evidence of these truths ; or by any reasons that could serve as a light to see them by. These therefore, and indeed all other mysteries, that are above the reach of our understanding, can be believed no otherwise than by captivating ourselves unto the obedience of faith.

But waiving this argument, if truth needs but to be fairly shewed to convince, and convinces best when it is naked, I must conclude that naked truth is either no protestant ware, or you take no delight to deal in it. For I assure you faithfully, there is but one thing you have convinced me of since we conversed together, to wit, that you are no papist : for you have not established the positive principles of any one particular religion in the world ; nor have you offered an argument of any note but what would have the same force in the mouth of an Anabaptist or Quaker as it has in yours. So that supposing I were now disposed to abjure popery, you have not furnished me with one single motive to become a member of the Church of England rather than any other protestant communion. And is it not then pleasant to hear you talk of nothing but naked truths, of the heart of the cause, of shewing where the matter pinches, and such other gasconading stuff ! As if every thing you have said carried conviction, evidence, and demonstration with it. Whereas I have scarce had any other business upon my hands than to rectify mistakes or wilful misrepresentations of our doctrine: to be upon my guard against the most studied and imposing sophistry, to confute bold calumnies and falsehoods, and deliver both fathers and scriptures from the torture. This, Sir, is a faithful summary of the naked truths I have had to deal with: this is your method of shewing the heart of the cause, and where the matter pinches.

I need not say any thing to the passing flirt, you had just now at implicit faith; of which I have said enough in our dispute concerning transubstantiation [Part II. Sect. 31.], where I shewed our faith to be no more implicit than St Peter's was, when he said to Christ, thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe, &c., John vi. 68; or than your faith is when you believe the whole Bible, a considerable part whereof you neither know nor understand.

SECTION LII.—OF THE LITURGY IN LATIN.

Let us therefore now come to the trivial question about our liturgy, the mention whereof has made you just now say, that our whole religion is implicit. But I see no great occasion for implicit faith to approve of the church's discipline in saying mass in Latin.

1st, There is no need of implicit faith to believe, that the common people (of England, for example) understand English, into which the mass is translated, as it is into other languages.

2d, There is no need of implicit faith to believe the common people have eyes and can see. Now the mass being a sacrifice is more an action than prayer: and actions are known by seeing as words are by hearing. In effect, the people know that our Saviour's sacred body and blood are offered up in the mass; and if they can but bring their hearts filled with faith, hope, love, repentance, thanksgiving, and other such acts of devotion, they cannot fail of receiving the benefit of this holy sacrifice.

It was God's command, Lev. xvi. 17, that the people should not be in the tabernacle, when the priest went in to make an atonement for all the congregation of Israel.

And in the gospel we find the whole multitude of the people praying without in the time of the incense, Luke i. 10. Yet this was a public prayer and liturgy of God's own appointment. Whence I conclude, that there is no need of implicit faith to believe, that the people may join in prayer with the priest, though their prayer be not the same as his.

3d, There is no need of implicit faith to believe, that the Catholic Church professed in the creed was, by God's help and the experience of about 900 years, wise enough to know what language mass was to be said in.

4th, There is no need of implicit faith to believe, that nothing could be more absurd in the first reformers, than to make that a pretence of breaking communion with their mother church. And,

5th, There is no need of implicit faith to believe, that the desire of the heart is the principal prayer: whence it follows that he, who in his heart begs of God whatever is contained in the prayer he recites, though he does not understand it, prays as truly as another that understands it.

These, Sir, are the preliminaries I insist upon in this weighty dispute, and of which I will not bate you an ace: because they are naked truths without the fucus of philosophy or distinctions, and convince of themselves. Now then you may put what objections you please.

"G.—My lord, the people's saying their own private prayers is not joining with the priest."—p. 190.

L.—No, Sir? Then the people's praying without in the time of the incense, Luke i. 10, was much less joining with the priest. For they could not even see him in the tabernacle: whereas ours see him at the altar offering the sacrifice. What then should hinder them from offering it up jointly with him?

"G.—They cannot say Amen to his prayers. What then have they to do in the church? For this is not communion."—p. 191.

L.—Is it not so? I think joining prayers together is communion: and that is precisely the business they have to do in the church. But I cannot forbear smiling at your excessive scrupulosity. You say the people cannot say amen to the prayers of the priest. Pray, what should hinder them? Do they fear he is cursing them, or conjuring up some evil spirit? Do they not know he is praying for them? And why then should they scruple to say amen to his prayers?

“G.—All he does is purely implicit, and nothing else but “opus operatum.”—p. 191.

L.—Really, Sir, this implicit, and opus operatum run away so entirely with your reason and judgment, that they make you forget to speak common sense.

“G.—My lord, a liturgy in a tongue unknown to the people is an invention without precedent. For it never entered into the head of man or church since the creation, except only in the Church of Rome: and of which the apostle gives this character, will they not say ye are mad? “1 Cor. xiv. 16, 17.”—p. 191.

L.—Sir, turn the question homewards, and I will not scruple to resolve it in the affirmative. For nothing but one labouring under a more than ordinary delirium can be capable of asserting as you do, that a liturgy in a tongue not known to the people is an invention without precedent, and never entered into the head of man or church since the creation, except only the Church of Rome. This I presume Sir, is one of your naked truths, which convince of themselves.

But the learned Dr Walton in the Prologomena upon his Polyglot will inform you better, and let you know, first, that whole churches in the east have this custom. So that (says he) the common people do not understand the liturgies of Basil and Chrysostom, which are read publicly in the churches, C. 5, Sect. 1, 16; and 2dly, that not only Christians, but Jews and Mahometans have the same custom in the east. Officia divina linguis non vulgaribus hodie celebrantur apud Judæos, Christianos, et Mahomedanos, C. 5, Sect. 3; see also Cap. 13, Sect. 18.

Mr Brerewood, another protestant author, in his Enquiries, Chap. ii. p. 12, agrees exactly with Dr Walton. For speaking of the Greek church, the difference (says he) is become so great between the present and the ancient Greek, that their liturgy, yet read in the ancient Greek tongue, namely, that of Basil on the Sabbaths and solemn days, and that of Chrysostom on common days, is not understood, or but little of it by the vulgar people.

Mons. Tavernier tells us of the Nestorians, p. 69, that they perform the divine office in the Chaldaic: to which the learned author of the Guide in Controversies adds, p. 289, that divine service is celebrated in the corrupt Chaldaic or Syriac amongst the Maronites, Cophites, Nestorians, Assyrians or Jacobites: and in the Greek amongst the Melchites and Georgians: the vulgar to all these being the Arabic; or, to some more easterly, the Persian tongue.

But to come nearer home, Dr Heylin tells us in his history of the Reformation, p. 128: That in queen Elizabeth's time the Irish parliament passed an act for uniformity in common prayer with permission of saying the same in Latin, where the minister had not the knowledge of the English tongue. But for translating it into Irish there was no care taken. The people were required by that statute under several penalties to frequent their churches, and to be present at the reading of the English liturgy, which they understood no more than they do the mass.

Now, Sir, if you had lived in queen Elizabeth's days, I doubt whether your zeal would have carried you so far, as to have addressed her thus in St Paul's words: will they not say you are mad for passing such an act, and furnishing the papists with stones to throw back at us?

But since you assert, it never entered into the head of man, &c. Martin Luther, Sir, as great a man as he was (for he was certainly a man) did not think it absurd to have the liturgy in Latin. For in the first part of his book writ against Carlostadius and the fanatics, Ann. 1525. (apud Hospin.) he grants first, that the name of mass may still be kept; and 2dly, that it is an indifferent thing, whether it be said in a foreign or the vulgar tongue. And pray Sir, what will all men of knowledge and sincerity now think of your noble assertion, that a liturgy in a tongue unknown to the people is an invention without precedent! and that it never entered into the head of man or church since the creation, except only in the Church of Rome! Sir, to return your own compliment in St Paul's words, will they not say you are mad?

I add, that in the primitive ages the liturgy was performed in the same language it is now both in the Eastern and Western churches; and if our liturgy be not as commonly understood now as it was formerly, it is not because the church has made any alteration in its former language, or desires that her public service should not be understood by the common people; but because all vulgar tongues are subject to perpetual changes; as is manifest from the difference there is between our modern English, and what was spoken in the days of Chaucer. So that if every nation had laid aside the Latin, and performed the liturgy in its own language, the public service of every national church must have undergone as many changes as there have been in those languages. Besides that such priests and bishops, as are obliged to travel abroad, would have been rendered utterly incapable by it of performing their functions in foreign countries; which is a very considerable inconvenience, and was doubtless a consideration of weight to induce the Western church to adhere to the ancient Latin, and the Greek church to their ancient Greek in their public service, rather than suffer any innovation to be made in it.

But I cannot imagine, what reason you should have to quote the 14th chapter of St Paul to the Corinthians unless it be because it is nothing to the purpose. For our dispute is about the liturgy, that is, the public office established by the church; and St Paul speaks not a word in the whole chapter of any thing like a liturgy, or public office, or set form of prayers, but only of sudden extemporary exhortations and prayers, which even lay-persons by a miraculous gift of unknown tongues uttered to the people in public assemblies, but many times without any interpretation of what they said. And this St Paul disapproves of, and censures in that chapter particularly ver. 11, 16, 17.

G.—But, my lord, his arguments are of equal force against your practice. For his reasons against it are first, because the unlearned cannot say amen to prayers they do not understand, ver. 16; and 2dly, because they cannot be edified by exhortations and prayers in a foreign tongue, ver. 17.

L.—Very right, Sir, if there be not an interpreter to explain them: which is the very supposition, upon which the apostle's arguments are grounded. But is that our case? You must shut both your eyes to see no difference. For first, the common people can see as well as scholars; and when they are once taught what every part of the mass means, they can never want interpreters as long as they can see. But 2dly, the translation of the mass, as likewise of vespers, litanies, hymns and prayers into the vulgar languages of every country is I think a very good interpretation of them, and takes away all the weighty scruples of saying amen. I add, that in relation to the public office, or any set form of prayers ordained by the church, no man surely in his right senses can hesitate to say amen to it, though he understands not a word of it, for the reasons already given.

Now since St Paul speaks not of any public office, or set form of prayers ordained by the church, but only of extemporary prayers or exhortations pronounced by private persons in a tongue unknown, and without any interpreter to explain them nothing can be wider from the purpose, than to object his words against our liturgy in Latin. But a weak cause can have nothing but weak arguments to support it.

“G.—I must own, my lord, your doctrine suits well with what Suarez says, (de Orat. L. 3. C. 14.) that it is not necessary to prayer, that the person praying should think of what he speaks. This is opus operatum with a witness; and a parrot may be taught thus to pray. And how do they pray with the priest, who are talking of business, or chatting of news, whilst he is offering up their prayers to God in a language, of which they do not understand one word, and therefore cannot give attention to it? And these are the greatest number, viz., of the common people, who cannot read, and so cannot carry private books of devotion with them. Though if they did, it would not be joining with the priest, nor could these be called common prayer, which are offered up with one accord, pursuant to saint Chrysostom's prayer, with which our daily public prayers do conclude.”—p. 191.

L.—Sir, though a man were both deaf and blind, and could say nothing but the Lord's prayer, yet the constant repeating of that prayer in union with the prayers of the congregation is truly praying with one accord in the judgment of any man, that has not abjured common sense; for it is the prayer of the heart, that God regards, and the heart of such a one is as much united in devotion with the whole assembly, as if he repeated the same prayers literally with them. This, Sir, answers your curious observation concerning those in our communion who cannot read: whom by an hyperbole of a more than ordinary size you have rendered at least fifty to one more numerous than they really are.

As to what you have quoted from Suarez, I may reasonably presume his meaning is either; that involuntary dissipations of the mind (during which no man thinks of what he speaks) do not hinder the effect or fruit of prayer; and this is the doctrine of all spiritual writers; or that the mind may be raised to God, and by consequence perform the essential duty of prayer, without an actual attention to the words that are pronounced. And does this deserve to be ridiculed with your senseless common topic of opus operatum? Is this praying like a parrot, or like those, who are talking of business, or chatting of news, who only deserve to be driven out of the church? However I suppose you intended this for a charitable insinuation to all good protestants, that this is the common way of praying amongst papists: for which I return you my most hearty thanks; and so take my leave of you, since we have now gone through all the points disputed between the two churches.

G.—I hope, my lord, we shall one day meet together in the unity of faith.

L.—I heartily wish the same. But then it must be in the faith of that one, holy, catholic, and apostolic church; which St Paul calls the pillar and ground of truth, 1 Tim. iii. 15; to which Christ has promised his perpetual assistance; Matt. xxviii. 20, and against which the gates of hell will never prevail, Matt. xvi. 16. For this is the church established by Christ to be our guide to heaven; and he, who will not follow this guide, runs into everlasting perdition, and will have his portion with heathens and publicans, Matt. xviii. 17.

THE POSTSCRIPT,

CONTAINING

SOME REMARKS UPON THE GENTLEMAN'S CONCLUSION
IN THE FORMER CONVERSATION.

HAVING followed the gentleman step by step for a hundred and ninety one pages, I did not think myself bound to continue the conversation any longer. For the dispute in the Gentleman's Case Stated ends p. 191, and the twenty last pages contain little more than a recapitulation of what he has said against the pope's supremacy, the church's unity, and in defence of private judgment against the authority of the church. To speak properly, the main subject of those twenty pages is a triumphant recital of the great feats the gentleman has done. He appears big with the success of his performance, and gives himself the airs of a conqueror returning loaden with the spoils of a vanquished foe : whilst his lordship is remarkable for nothing but his stupid silence, and might, for ought I know, have been condemned to be pressed to death for a mute, were it not for about half a dozen lines of nonsense uttered by him in the whole twenty pages. I may indeed justly compare him to a criminal conscious of his guilt, standing at the bar with eyes cast down to the ground, whilst the judge is summing up the evidence against him, and giving directions to the jury to bring in their verdict. Nay we have nothing less than the gentleman's own word to assure us (and the word of a gentleman will surely not be questioned) that he has all the fathers on his side against the pope's supremacy, and all the reason in the world on his side against submitting to the authority of the church. He reminds his lordship of his having proved this and that, and the Lord knows what. He has put such a thing out of all dispute ; and made other things plain to a demonstration. And what then had his lordship else to do but to submit to his hard fate with a respectful silence! I shall however venture to make some remarks upon this piece, which the gentleman introduces in the following manner: And now, my lord, upon the whole, if the advantage does not seem to your lordship to lie on our side in all the particulars before mentioned, yet can you have any doubt of the safety of your soul in our way? Since all our danger is in omitting some things that might be profitable, but cannot be called necessary. Whereas if the error lies of your side, you are involved in manifold superstitions, and of adding to, and subtracting from the word of God, pp. 191, 192.

Here the gentleman either speaks of particulars relating to faith, or discipline only (for he is a great dealer in double meanings); if he speaks of the former, his question how his lordship can have any doubt of the safety of his soul in the protestant way, answers itself. Because his lordship has already informed him, that the belief of all articles of faith is necessary to salvation, when they are duly proposed by the church. And he is sure that many of the articles denied by the gentleman are of this nature.

But if he speaks of matters of discipline only, though they be not in themselves necessary to salvation, yet obedience to the commands of the church even in things that are of themselves indifferent is necessary to salvation, as his lordship has fully shewed in his answer to the gentleman's preliminary questions in the introduction.

Let us suppose a puritan should argue thus against the gentleman in his own language: Baptizing with the sign of the cross, using the common prayer book, and keeping holy days for saints and angels, &c., may be profitable, but cannot be called necessary; whereas if the error lies on your side, you are involved in manifold superstitions, by adding to the word of God. Suppose, I say, a puritan should argue thus against the gentleman, he would either be put to a non-plus, or forced to give him this popish answer; that the church is wise enough to regulate her own discipline. That her children are bound in conscience to conform to it. That schism is a most grievous sin, and to break communion under pretence of understanding scriptures better than the church is but adding presumption to disobedience. This I think would be a solid answer to the puritan, and the gentleman is desired to accept of this answer as abundantly sufficient for all objections he can make against communion in one kind, the liturgy in Latin, the single life of the clergy, the use of images in our churches, of the sign of the cross, of holy water, benedictions, &c. All these being purely matters of discipline.

But suppose an Arian should take the advantage of the gentleman's argument, and retort it thus upon him. All our danger is in omitting consubstantiality, the belief whereof is not necessary. Whereas if the error lies on your side, you are involved in manifest blasphemy and idolatry. I leave the gentleman to consider, what answer he would give; and whether his answer would not be a cap to fit his own block.

OF SUPREMACY.

The two next pages after the gentleman's last words quoted by me contain nothing but a repetition of objections against the pope's supremacy already answered in our dispute upon that subject: after which he continues thus: No kingdom of the earth will content him. He will be universal monarch of the whole world. And why so? p. 194.

In good truth I cannot tell. For I cannot give a good reason for a chimera. And I dare swear the pope himself knows nothing of the matter. But the gentleman knows better things, and answers the question thus for the pope. Because Christ is the head of all churches, and therefore must have an universal vicar. This the gentleman will needs have to be the reason, why the pope, as he tells us, pretends to be universal monarch of the whole world. And I cannot but say, the reason is as nonsensical as the chimera, that is built upon it. But as the same art magic, which conjures up spirits, can conjure them down again; so the gentleman shews he can as easily confute chimeras, as invent them: which he has done with great skill by saying, that from the same parity of reason it would follow, that because God is the king of all the earth, therefore he must have an universal vicar in temporals. I allow the parity to be good, and the aforesaid wise reason fully confuted by it.

But I shall give him another reason for the pope's supremacy (by whatever ridiculous name he is pleased to call it) which I hope will not be so easily confuted. It is grounded upon three plain facts: 1st, That Christ gave to St Peter by a special commission the government of his whole flock. 2d, That this power of governing his whole flock was not to die with St Peter, but like episcopacy and priesthood continue in his church for ever by passing to his successors. And 3d, That the successors of St Peter have always been bishops of Rome, whom we call popes in our language. The two first are of divine institution, and all three are as incontestable, as that the see of Canterbury is the ecclesiastical metropolis of England. At least I flatter myself they will appear so to any unbiassed reader, who will but give himself the trouble to peruse, what his lordship has said in defence of the supremacy, Part I. Sect. 2—10, and 55, of the same part.

Nor can I see how the gentleman and his protestant brethren will escape being convicted of heresy and schism by his own confession, since he tells us pp. 194, 195. That they will own themselves heretics and schismatics, and pay their obedience to the pope, if it can be shewed that Christ has appointed an universal vicar in his church; unless by universal vicar he means a great deal more than we do, and then he fights against his own shadow. For we mean no more than that St Peter was, and his successor is next under Christ the supreme head or governor of his church in spirituals. And he who cannot find this in the text of St Matthew xvi. 18, and St John xxi. 15, where all antiquity clearly found it, is wilfully blind.

I therefore cannot doubt but the reader will be extremely surprised at the gentleman's exorbitant rhodomontado, p. 195, where he speaks thus: We are verily persuaded, that there is not the least ground for this universal supremacy either in holy scriptures, or in antiquity, or in the reason of the thing, or in fact since the first foundation of christianity to this day, or that it ever was acknow- ledged, or is now by the majority of christian churches. Was there ever such a complication of falsehoods uttered with such a confident air! What! Not the least ground for the supremacy either in scriptures, or antiquity, or reason, or fact, from the first foundation of christianity to this day! And is the gentleman verily persuaded of this! Then he must be verily persuaded, that the whole island of Great Britain (for its share alone) was mad for nine hundred years together: since it acknowledged (as he owns himself, Case Stated, p. 108) the pope's spiritual supremacy for so many ages: which none but a people void of sense would have done upon a principle of conscience, if there were not the least ground for it either in scriptures, or antiquity, or reason, or fact from the first foundation of christianity, as the gentleman has the assurance to tell us. But when he wrote this he was sole master of the field. His lordship was under tutelage, and could not contradict his tutor without his allowance, who took effectual care to tie up his tongue, and doubted not but any Tale of a Tub would pass for current truth with the bubbles he chiefly wrote for. And this he calls stating the case. But I hope the case of supremacy is somewhat more fairly stated by his lordship in the several sections, to which I have just now referred the reader. And as to what the gentleman says, that the supremacy never was acknowledged by the majority of christian churches, the reader is desired to turn back to Sect. 16, 17, of the First Part, where he will be fully convinced of the notorious falsehood of this assertion.

Pp. 195, 196, the gentleman entertains us with a fine flourish upon the inconvenience of appeals to Rome, where, he says, causes last from age to age. This (says he) made the Reformation even necessary for the preservation of the people as well laity as clergy, who groaned under the burden, which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear. However I must take the liberty to tell the gentleman, that England was as flourishing a kingdom, and the people, both laity and clergy, lived as comfortably under the pope's spiritual supremacy, as they have done since it was thrown off. But let that be as it will, are there no ways and means to put a stop to abuses without affronting, or pulling down the authority, that commits them? Are there not lawsuits in Great Britain entailed upon families from generation to generation? And must we then conclude, that the court of Chancery and other courts of judicature ought to be suppressed, because frequent abuses are committed in them? Nay I fear the supreme tribunal itself, which is the bulwark of the English liberties, will not be secure against the destructive force of this logic.

But the gentleman's argument strikes yet much deeper: for the question between us is precisely, whether the pope's supremacy be of divine institution? We maintain it is; and it is his business to disprove it. Now I appeal to any man, whether real or supposed abuses of any authority be an argument of any force to prove it not to be of divine institution? If not, all arguing against it from such abuses is wholly frivolous. But if it be a solid argument, and if it be true that such abuses (as the gentleman tells us) make a reformation which annuls that institution necessary, then the blessed sacrament which is abused by thousands to their own damnation, is the first thing that ought to be reformed away, and discarded as well as the pope's supremacy.

But besides all this, what a frightful list of enormous abuses committed by secular magistrates and parents in relation to their subjects and children might a man produce, if it were worth his pains? And would this be a good argument to prove that their power and authority is not of God, or that a reformation is necessary to abolish all power upon earth? Thus the gentleman's arguing from real or supposed abuses of the pope's supremacy to justify an absolute denial or abolishing of it, would make one suspect him to be neither divine, nor a good christian, nor good subject. For it plainly tends to subvert the institutions of God, and cuts down all power root and branch: since all these are liable to be abused.

I come now to a piece of slander, which for its boldness is hard to be matched. It is worded thus, pp. 197, 198. The pope's supremacy, (upon which the discourse runs) is the only article in your creed (speaking to his lordship) to be believed explicitly. As for others, implicit will do for them all. That is, it is no matter, whether you believe them or not : so the sovereignty of the universal bishop be maintained inviolably. I cannot imagine what the gentleman proposed to himself, when he wrote this extraordinary piece. Was he asleep or awake? Or was his head seized with a fit of the gout, which hindered him from thinking? Could he imagine that any man of sense in the world would believe him? Or did he think his reputation so well established, that if he should tell people, that light is darkness, they would take it for a truth upon his bare word?

Surely the gentleman's overshooting himself in so exorbitant a manner must be attributed to some such cause. He says the pope's supremacy is the only article we are bound to believe explicitly ; as to others, it is no matter, whether we believe them or not. What, is it no matter with us, whether we do or do not believe in God the Father, or in Jesus Christ his only Son? Is it no matter with us whether we do or do not believe the blessed trinity, or the incarnation, death, and resurrection of our Saviour Christ? Why then do we teach children the Apostles' creed as soon as they can speak, and tell them they must believe every article of it under pain of eternal damnation, if it be no matter whether they believe it or not? But the calumny is too gross to deserve a serious answer.

P. 198, the gentleman tells us, there never was a church called catholic in the sense of Rome ; that is, which was owned by all other churches as their head. If he means, which was owned by heretics and schismatics; I grant there never was such a Catholic Church. But where will he find this to be the sense of Rome? When did the Church of Rome pretend to be a ridiculous compound of all sects? Or declare, either that the Catholic Church was ever owned by heretical or schismatical churches, or that she ever owned them as a part of her communion? The gentleman forgot here what he said before, viz., that the Church of Rome by her principles cannot communicate with any, who will not own her supremacy. Which utterly spoils his pretty comparison of the Church of Rome to the hed of Procrustes, to which some were made fit by being stretched out, and others by being cut shorter. For I do not see by what contrivance either of cutting off, or stretching out he will ever make heretics, schismatics, or persons really excommunicated become members of the Church of Rome: and if he does not, his comparison is void of sense.

OF UNITY.

P. 199, the gentleman begins to speak of unity, and accuses us first of not having unity of faith. But how does he prove it? He tells us first: we know not where to place the infallibility. It is very true his lordship in the former conversation knew no more than the gentleman would let him: but he has now fully satisfied him in that point, and marked out very plainly to him, where it is to be placed [Part I. Sect. 51.] But 2dly, he says, we do not agree, which articles of our creed are to be believed explicitly. Yet he told us just now, that the pope's supremacy is the only article in our creed to be believed explicitly. How necessary is it for some persons to have good memories?

However to satisfy him as far as is necessary; we teach unanimously, that all are bound to do what they can to learn the Apostle's creed, and have it explained to them; and then they are bound to believe every article explicitly. Nor do I know any writer, that excuses any one come to the use of reason from the necessity of believing explicitly, that there is one God in three persons: that the second person became man and died for us: and that God is the rewarder of virtue, and punisher of sin. But over and above, we oblige them to believe in general all truths revealed to the Catholic Church: which I think suffices to a perfect unity in faith. For otherwise, whoever has not an explicit knowledge of all truths whatsoever contained in the whole Bible, cannot be said to have an entire faith, which is absurd. And the absurdity of it shews, that the gentleman himself as great an enemy as he is to believing implicitly, must sit down content with an implicit faith of numberless revealed truths.

But 2dly, he taxes us, p. 200, with want of unity in love and charity : and proves it because there are disputes among religious orders, and between national and national churches. Whence he concludes, that unity in outward communion will avail us nothing, nay it will not so much as denominate us christians, far less to be the only christians in the world, or the Catholic Church.

What a number of mistakes are here to be rectified? First, he supposes that disputes about private opinions must of necessity cause a breach of love and charity ; which is a gross mistake. For the apostles themselves were not free from disputes, yet I hope they were in charity with one another. 2dly, He supposes that our unity consists merely in an outward communion ; which is a grosser mistake than the former. Because inward faith is somewhat more than a mere outward communion : and we admit none into the church but such as declare they believe truly and sincerely the whole faith revealed by God. 3dly, He supposes a church to be unchristianed (if I may be allowed to speak so) by some of her members being void of love and charity to one another. Which if it be true, there will not be such a thing as a christian church in the world. But 4thly, he supposes we think ourselves the only christians in the world ; which is a downright blunder. But to stave off from himself the imputation of it, and be at full liberty to confute it, he fathers it upon his lordship in the two lines of nonsense attributed to him, p. 198, where the noble peer after a long silence comes out with this wise saying. But we admit none others to be christian churches, who do not own it (meaning the supremacy), which is both false and absurd. For, though it be true that we esteem ourselves the only catholics in the world, because the Catholic Church is essentially one, that is, in one communion (or the Nicene Creed is false) yet we are far from esteeming ourselves to be the only christians in the world : and so we own that heretics and schismatics baptized and believing the Divinity of Christ are christians ; yet we deny them to be catholics. As I own the gentleman to be a christian, but I will never own him to be a catholic unless he renounces his errors.

Here then let us see, what account the gentleman gives of the church's unity. He distinguishes between a perfect unity, and such a one as we are capable of in this our imperfect state. Perfect unity (says he, p. 199) is not only in outward communion, that is, in being within the same walls together, or in subscribing to a formula of articles of faith, half of which must be believed implicitly; but an unity likewise in saving and damning principles, and practices of love and charity, for which chiefly we shall be judged at the last day. If these be wanting the unity will be very imperfect, and stand us in little stead.

If by these last words the gentleman means no more, than that an outward communion, and profession of the same faith suffices not to save the members of that communion, unless they be likewise united in love and charity, I am wholly of his mind: because faith alone or being a member of the true church suffices not to salvation without the observance of the commandments: and the principal commandment is that of charity; without which we may be members of the true church, but not true disciples of Christ: that is, we may be found in faith, but very bad christians.

But there lies a snake in the grass. For the gentleman has dressed up for us this fine system of unity for no other end, than to explode the belief of ONE holy Catholic Church upon earth, and run down all pretensions to it amongst men. Because it is certain a church cannot be one without unity: and the unity he has described is such, as can only be found in heaven, where there are no disputes, and where all the members of that happy society are united in perfect love and charity. Whereas there is no church upon earth without disputes about particular opinions; and it is morally impossible, that in so vast a body as the Catholic Church is upon earth, all her members should be united in perfect love and charity. Nay the contrary is manifest from daily experience.

Now that this was the gentleman's main drift in his description of the church's unity is plain from his words, p. 202, where he tells us, 1st, 'That the article of one holy Catholic Church was put but late into the creed. Which he could not say for any other end than to vilify and discredit the authority of that article. 2nd, That the next article (as he calls it, though he owns it may be called a part of the former), viz., The Communion of Saints, must be referred to heaven, where only is the communion of saints. And the reason he gives for this is, because in heaven alone there is no mixture of reprobates, who (as he tells us) are but in appearance members of the church.

From these two principles he draws the following conclusion. Therefore the truly Catholic Church in heaven is chiefly and principally meant by the holy Catholic Church, and the communion of saints in the creed. THERE (says he) is the great body of the church. There are but few at a time upon earth; and of them we know not, which belong to that truly Catholic Church or not, pp. 202, 203. But who then are the few, that are allowed by him to belong to the Catholic Church? He tells us, p. 202, they are only the ELECT, who are not visible upon earth.

This is the gentleman's explanation of that article of the creed, which is concerning the Catholic Church. But to detect as briefly as is possible the falsehood and venom of it, I shall content myself with setting down two consequences, which follow manifestly from it. The first is, That the true church of Christ upon earth has always been invisible to us: since the elect, of whom alone he says it is composed, are not visible upon earth, according to his own words.

Whence it follows, 2^{dly}, That it has always been impossible for any man to apply himself to the true church either for instruction, or ordination, or any of the sacraments; which evacuates all episcopal and pastoral authority. Because no man can know, whether the bishops or pastors, to whom he would apply himself, be of the number of the elect: nor by consequence, whether they be members of the true church. And is not this most curious doctrine!

But the ancient fathers never taught it. For they always understood the parable proposed by Christ of the field, wherein the wheat and tares grew, and were to grow together till the harvest, Matt. xiii. 30. I say they always understood this parable as a faithful representation of the present state of the church, wherein the good and the wicked, saints, and *sinner*s, elect and reprobate live mixed together, and will do so till the day of judgment. And therefore when the Catholic Church on earth is called the communion of saints, the meaning of it is not, that all the members of it are saints, but that she is the only communion upon earth, in which there are saints.

But the gentleman asks, what unity has that church, wherein the elect and reprobate are mixed together? I answer, she has the unity of faith, the unity of sacraments, and the communion of all her members united under one head. And this is absolutely necessary to constitute one church. Though this alone suffices not to salvation, but the leading a good life, being united in charity, and keeping the commandments is likewise required.

However since the gentleman has already given us a description of such a perfect unity, as the church on earth can never be capable of; let us now see, what sort of unity he will allow her. It is all reduced to this one single point, viz. That as all the nations in the world, though at war together, are one kingdom to God, so all christian churches upon earth, though not one of them should communicate with the other, are one church to Christ, pp. 200, 201. This is the substance of his discourse in the two pages quoted; and this is all the unity he allows as essential to the Catholic Church in her present imperfect state. The true meaning whereof is this, viz., that as Christians, Jews, Pagans, Mahometans, make one world, so Catholics, heretics, and schismatics (provided they be christians, for he makes no difference between christians and catholics) make one church. Or thus: As all nations in the world, though at war together, are one kingdom to God; so all churches in the world, though they be heretics or schismatics, though they disagree in all things but the belief of common christianity, and excommunicate and bite and devour one another, are that one Catholic Church upon earth, which we profess in the creed. If this be not monstrous doctrine, I know not what is.

But what was it, that made the gentleman give into this extravagant notion of the unity of the Catholic Church upon earth? He had two reasons for it to the best of my conjecture. First, Because he could not sufficiently enlarge the bounds of his own church, but by incorporating it with the whole riffraff of heretical christians upon earth in such a manner, as to make them all appear to be but one church, or mystical body of Christ. And 2dly, Because he could not make his own communion be a part of the Catholic Church by any other stratagem, than by making the belief of common christianity sufficient to render any upstart heretical or schismatical communion a branch of that church.

But the gentleman objects, p. 203, that if the aforesaid article relating to the Catholic Church had been meant in our sense, it must have been worded, the Roman Catholic Church. And since it is only called the Catholic Church, he concludes, it extends to all christian churches, which make up the Catholic Church upon earth in such an unity, as our fallen state will bear. Here then all heretics and schismatics whatsoever are, by the gentleman's comprehensive charity, once more adopted members of the Catholic Church, as being united together as well as our fallen state will bear. That is to say (according to the gentleman's true system of church unity) like nations that are at war, and cutting one another's throats as fast as they can.

But the grand difficulty is yet unanswered; viz., why the church is not called the Roman Catholic Church in the creed? I hope the reader will not take it ill, if I answer this frivolous objection seriously. For if I did not, it might, for ought I know, be adopted into the number of protestant unanswerables; and it deserves it as well as many more that have been cried up for such.

The reason therefore why the word Roman is not inserted into the article concerning the church is, because nothing but the essential attributes of the church are mentioned in the creed. Now, though Catholic and Roman Catholic be synonymous de facto, it is not essential to the Catholic Church, that her supreme head and governor should have his episcopal see fixed at Rome. For, if St

Peter had fixed his episcopal see immoveably at Antioch, then instead of Roman, she might have been called the Antiochean Catholic Church. So that the word Roman expresses no essential attribute of the church: but only marks out the place, where her visible head, with whom all are bound to communicate, has his episcopal seat.

OF PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

Pp. 204—207, contain a summary of every thing the gentleman has said against submitting our private reason to church authority. The reader will find it fully answered [Part I. Sect. 26, 33, 37, 51.] where he will see the reasons, why a person thoroughly convinced that he has found the true church of Christ, cannot act rationally but in submitting his private reason to her decisions in things, which are above the reach of his understanding. This the gentleman has taken a world of pains to ridicule. He calls it putting out our eyes, extinguishing the lamp of reason, and what not? As if a man acted contrary to reason in not thinking himself wiser than the whole Catholic Church, and paying a submission when reason itself obliges him to it.

Thus has he set up the standard of perpetual schism and rebellion against the church of God, by authorizing each man's private reason to control her decisions and ordinances, whenever he shall be vain enough to think her in the wrong and himself in the right. Nay he says positively, p. 205, that to do otherwise will condemn us at the last day. And does not this subject the church of God to the caprice of every private person? Does it not pervert the whole order of ecclesiastical government, and render both faith and discipline precarious? Can such doctrine have any other tendency than to establish deism and free-thinking upon the ruins of all revealed religion? Truly if popery cannot be attacked but with such pernicious principles as these, an unprejudiced reader must conclude whether he will or not, that it has truth on its side.

But can any doctrine have truth on its side, that has reason against it? No, it cannot. But it may have truth on its side, though it be above reason: and he, who sees no difference betwixt a thing being against and above reason, is ignorant of the very alphabet of revealed religion. As for example, I hope the gentleman will not question, but that the mystery of the blessed trinity has truth on its side. Yet it is infinitely above the comprehension of all human reason. But has it then reason against it? No surely. For reason can never be against truth. And hence it follows, that though this mystery be above reason, a man must be void of sense and reason not to submit his private judgment to a firm belief of it. And this alone is a full confutation of every thing the gentleman has said to lampoon and ridicule our submitting to the decisions of the Catholic Church in things that are above our reason. Nay I challenge any man, that either believes the blessed trinity, or the incarnation and death of Christ, or the propagation of original sin, or any other such incomprehensible mystery, to give a solid answer to it.

What the gentleman says, p. 205, is remarkable. To refuse (says he) the assistance of a church, because she is not infallible, is depriving ourselves of a means, which God has appointed; and is the same perverseness, as if we should refuse to consult a lawyer or physician, because it is possible he may err in his judgment.

How extremely tender and wary is this expression, to refuse the assistance of a church? Surely the gentleman had some check of conscience upon him, when he wrote this piece. For why would he not speak out boldly? Why would he thus mince the matter instead of saying, to refuse to HEAR THE CHURCH? I presume the reason was, because it would have put the reader in mind of our Saviour's saying, If he does not HEAR THE CHURCH, let him be unto thee as a heathen and a publican, Matt. xviii. 17. Which imports nothing less, than that we are bound under pain of eternal damnation to hearken to the voice of the church, and learn the truth of her: and this would have spoiled his darling maxim; that we must trust to private judgment in every thing without exception.

But let that be as it will: I ask the gentleman, which of all the fallible churches it is, to whose assistance we must have recourse as a means which God has appointed? The reason of my question is, because his principles of private judgment and common christianity make one church as good as another as to the business of salvation, provided it be but a christian church. However since I cannot question, but he gives the preference to the Church of England, as being not only a member, but minister of it; suppose now I should make choice of this church to have recourse to for assistance, I ask how far I must trust her? To be sure, if his principle of private judgment be worth a rush, I must trust her no farther than my eyes can see, or my reason can understand; which is but a coarse compliment to his church: for I will trust a porter or cartman as far as that comes to. And if we trust her any farther, if we believe upon her authority things, we cannot understand or comprehend (which the gentleman calls implicit faith) then he tells us, p. 205, That this is abandoning both sense and reason which God gave us as a guide, and therefore will require it of us. And this only is that, which will render us self-condemned, and bear witness against us at the last day. The true English whereof is, that whoever does not follow his own private reason preferably to the judgment of the church, will be damned for it. Most excellent doctrine!

However, to justify this dreadful sentence, having told us before that to refuse the assistance of a church because she is not infallible is the same as refusing to consult a lawyer or physician because it is possible he may err, he continues thus: But though I allow their skill to be better than mine in their several professions, yet we still keep to ourselves so much use of our reason, that if it were poison the physician were going to give me, I would not take it: and there are things so plain, that no lawyer shall persuade me. Much more ought we to be careful in our eternal concerns, and not to give ourselves up implicitly to any whatsoever. That if they should direct us against the express commands in scriptures, or the dictates of reason and common morality, or bid us deny all our senses, we must acquiesce without examining, p. 205.

It is not to be doubted, but this piece is to be understood with relation to any church upon earth: so that the true church of Christ (in whatever communion it be) is comprehended in the caution it contains; and we are here most pathetically exhorted to beware of placing too great a confidence in the wisdom even of that church, which Christ has established to be our guide to heaven, to which he has promised his perpetual assistance, and which St Paul calls the pillar and ground of truth.

It is true indeed the gentleman is so modest as to suppose her to be a fallible church, to give some colour both to the mistrust we ought to have of her, and to this sly insinuation, viz., that she is capable of directing us against the most express commands in scriptures, of teaching a doctrine contrary to the dictates of reason and common morality and bidding us to deny all our senses; by which he means, obliging us not to use them according to the established order of providence. And the result of all is, that whensoever our private reason (which to be sure is more clear sighted than the church of Christ) has the presumption to tell us, that she is guilty of any of these impious absurdities, we are then bound under pain of eternal damnation not to give ourselves up to her, but to follow our private judgment in opposition to her.

And will the gentleman after this pretend to bring either a Jew or deist over to the Catholic Church? If he does, they need but read to him his own Case Stated, wherever he stands up in defence of private judgment against church authority, and they will maintain their ground in spite of him, and run him down with his own principles. For they will both tell him, that according to his own rule they cannot in conscience embrace the catholic faith: because their own reason, which he says they are bound to follow under pain of eternal damnation, convinces them that his church and the New Testament, the authority of both which they equally despise, teaches a doctrine contrary to all the dictates of common sense and reason; As, that the immortal God became a mortal man, and died an ignominious death: and that three are one.

Nay the Jew will moreover tell him, that his church directs her children against the express commands of God in holy scriptures, by obliging them to keep the Sunday holy instead of Saturday, which is the day peremptorily commanded in scripture to be kept holy : and I defy the gentleman to give a satisfactory answer to the Jew's objection against this point of discipline, unless he first retracts all he has said to vilify the church's authority, and pulls down the proud idol of private judgment, he has set up against her. Whence it appears, that a member of the Church of England can neither argue against popery without furnishing Jews and deists with arms against christianity, nor argue solidly for christianity against Jews and deists but from the very principles he ridicules, when popery is the question.

I cannot quit this subject without taking notice of the pretty colouring the gentleman gives to the presumption of one opposing his private reason against the solemn decisions of the Catholic Church. He compares it with the rational conduct of a man, that refuses to take the poison his physician is going to give him. Which is both a charitable insinuation, that the Church of Rome is this unskilful or wicked physician, and a general caution to all men not to trust the church too far ; because she may give them poison instead of wholesome food. A most noble character of the church of God !

But, to retort his own comparison upon him, suppose a patient should have a strong fancy, that the poison his physician is going to give him is poison, and a thousand skilful experienced and conscientious physicians should assure him, that it is not poison but a most excellent remedy, which will certainly cure him ; would not such an obstinate and conceited coxcomb be a self-murderer, if he should die for want of taking it ?

Now this is a faithful representation of the case between the Catholic Church, and a single person opposing his private judgment against her solemn decisions. And this was the very case in the beginning of the pretended reformation between the Church of Rome on the one hand, and the first reformer on the other. Only with this difference, that instead of a thousand, he had millions against him. For all the world knows, that the faith he opposed was then, and had been professed by whole Christendom for many ages; that it had been attested by undoubted miracles in all the converted nations under the sun, and watered with the blood of innumerable martyrs. So that the whole question between the Church of Rome and the reformed churches may be reduced to this one single point: viz., whether it be more probable, that whole Christendom had been under a continual dotage for many ages together, or that the first reformer was in the wrong? I think the decision of this question is obvious to common sense: and the consequence of it is, that the reformed churches have no better security for their eternal salvation, than a man has, who has the odds of millions to one against him. Because their religion can be no better now than it was at first: and it had millions to one against it at first; as both Luther and Calvin owned, when they first set up for reformers. Let the gentleman judge by this how good a cause he is embarked in, and how safe the bottom is, upon which he ventures his soul's salvation.

He tells us, p. 207; that truth is never afraid: for the more it is canvassed, the brighter it appears. But I doubt whether this will hold even in all natural truths. For I think it is pretty clear, that there is such a thing as motion. Yet Zeno canvassed the nature of it so long till it turned his head, and he denied the very possibility of it: which plainly shews the narrow compass of man's understanding.

Now if this be so even in some natural truths, it is impossible it should be otherwise in mysteries, which are most certainly above the reach of our understanding. Have not Toland and Whiston canvassed the Trinity, till they have canvassed themselves out of all belief of it? And have not the Arians and Socinians also canvassed the divinity of Christ, till they have canvassed themselves into downright blasphemy against it? Yet I presume these are very certain truths: but they are truths of such a nature, as are not to be attained to by the canvassing of human reason, but by an humble submission.

The gentleman adds, it is strange to see those, who pretend to such an assurance as is infallible, and yet seek to avoid the light of reason, as if afraid of being detected. He might as well say, it is strange that they, who have a bright sunshine to see by, should not trust to the deceitful light of an ignis fatuus, as if afraid of being detected: which insinuation is both groundless and malicious. For though the Catholic Church be infallible under the directions of the divine spirit, she knows that a man, who follows his own private judgment in matters of religion, has a fool for his guide. Which makes her afraid not of the light, but of the weakness of human reason: as men are afraid to look at the sun, not out of mistrust of its brightness, but for fear of hurting their own eyes by gazing at it. Though, to speak properly, submitting our private judgment to an authority, which God himself has appointed to be our guide, is not avoiding, but following the light of reason in the manner we are directed to do. And therefore faith is always rational. Because nothing can be more rational, than to follow a guide of God's own appointment; and to submit our private reason, when he requires it of us. [Vide Part I. Sect. 51.]

However the gentleman will needs have it, that we are afraid of being detected. And why so? Because the canon law forbids laics to dispute about religion. Ibid. But what is it we should fear to be detected in? What secrets would such disputes discover, which cannot be made known otherwise? Has the gentleman in his Case Stated, where he was master of the field, discovered any secrets we knew not before? Surely he affects to be mysterious, and drop ambiguous words in hopes the ignorant will mistake them for profound sense. For who will suspect he should not have penetration enough to see, that a just diffidence of the incapacity of the laity to manage controversial disputes is a much better reason for the prohibition he speaks of, than a chimerical fear of I know not what; and I dare say he knows not what he means himself? Unless he means that the common laity may be more easily imposed upon by misrepresentations, forgery, and slander than our learned clergy. He was certainly at a very great plunge, when he was forced to pick up such stuff as this.

But let us see, if what follows be any thing better. If reason could be heard, it would make it very obvious to you (speaking to his lordship) that in all the points before mentioned the certainty is on our side, and the doubt at least on yours, p. 207. Most stoutly said! Just so spoke Martin Luther, when he stood alone against millions. It is certain (said he) I have my doctrine from heaven. Tom. 2, Fol. 333. And he had the same foundation to build his certainty upon, as the gentleman has: viz., his own private reason. For all the visible authority upon earth was against him.

But what is it, that makes the gentleman so very uppish, as to think it obvious to any, that the certainty of salvation is on his side? For example (says he) none make a doubt, but that we may lawfully pray to God, and not before an image of him, or without the worship or invocation of any saint joined with him: and so of all the rest. But on your part, if what I have said makes them not appear unlawful to your lordship, yet they must remain at least doubtful, till some stronger evidence be produced for them, than has hitherto been given.

This, with the gentleman's good leave, is begging the question: for I can faithfully assure him, that all he has said against any article either of our faith or discipline is of so little weight, that his lordship's certainty of having the truth on his side is not in the least diminished by it.

But (says he) they must remain at least doubtful, till some stronger evidence be produced for them, than has hitherto been given. If he means some stronger evidence, than has been given in the Case Stated of his own cooking; I grant he has all the reason in the world to complain, that the evidence his lordship has there produced for the doctrine and discipline of his church, is not at all satisfactory. But I hope he has given him some better satisfaction in the present conversation. And if the gentleman will not shut his eyes, nor despise his adversary, because he had him once in leading-strings, he may now find that stronger evidence, for which he seems to be in quest.

Now as to the example he produces to prove the certainty of salvation to be on his side, viz., that none can make a doubt, but that we may lawfully pray to God, and not before an image of him, or without the worship or invocation of any saint joined with him, and so of the rest,— I answer, this is the third repetition of the same argument. Though (as fond as the gentleman appears to be of it) it serves only to cut the throat of his own church; as I have fully shewed in my former answers to it. But since he is resolved to give an air of importance to it by the mere dint of repetition (for who will suspect a doctor in Israel should be capable of repeating insignificant trifles) I must beg the reader's leave to trouble him also with a repetition of my answer to it.

Let us then see, whether the gentleman has not by this argument furnished the dissenters with stones to throw at him. For suppose a presbyterian or fanatic should argue thus: None can make a doubt but that we may lawfully baptize without the sign of the cross, or receive the communion sitting: or that it is lawful for us neither to use the common prayer book, nor surplices, nor organs, nor consecrate churches, nor keep holy days for saints and angels, and so of the rest,—suppose, I say, a dissenter should argue in this manner, must not the gentleman (unless he will renounce his argument against us) allow him to conclude from it, that presbyterians and fanatics, who abhor all the aforesaid popish ceremonies, and think they have unanswerable reasons against them, have the certainty of salvation on their side? However I appeal to his own judgment, whether he would not have a very ill opinion of the religion of any of his bishops or parsons, who should baptize without the sign of the cross, or lay aside the common prayer book, or abolish the aforesaid holy days, and so of the rest? And why so? Let him give a reason for it if he can, that will not likewise condemn the first English reformers, and utterly spoil the certainty he pretends to on account, that his church neither uses images, nor prays before them, nor invokes the saints, and so of the rest.

Wherefore my direct answer to the example produced by the gentleman is this, viz., that though it be lawful to pray to God and not before an image of him, or without the worship or invocation of any saints joined with him, yet it is always unlawful to set up the standard of rebellion against the church. It is unlawful to disobey superior powers, when they command nothing that is contrary to the law of God. For they who resist powers resist God, and acquire damnation to themselves, if St Paul is to be believed. Finally, it is unlawful to raise schisms for things that are indifferent in themselves; and to omit any public duty in contempt of the authority that commands it, is always a criminal omission. And these are the crimes, with which the first reformers stand charged before God: as likewise they, who walk in the footsteps of such rebellious forefathers, and continue the schism which they began upon the same frivolous and unjust prétexts. Yet it is upon this rotten foundation the certainty, the gentleman boasts of, is built. Much good may it do him.

I find nothing in the four last pages of his Case Stated but a repetition of repetitions relating to the supremacy and private judgment. It seems he had it not in his power to take leave of his lordship without giving the pope a parting blow, and complimenting once more his own dear private reason. I hope however I have said some things, that may help to cure him of his fondness of it.

THE END.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

Los Angeles

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

AA 000 632 785 2

